On the Śukla Ekādaśī of Jyeṣṭha month, with a concentrated mind, one should go to a sacred reservoir, perform ācamana (ritual sipping of water) with purity, invoke all the holy tīrthas, and meditate upon Nārāyaṇa. (12–13)

Then, according to the injunctions prescribed by the sages for such a bath, one should perform the bath strictly as ordained.” (14)

युद्धस्थलमें मारे गये शूरवीरको और सहस्रों सुन्दरी अप्सराएँ यह आशा लेकर बड़ी उतावलीके साथ दौड़ी जाती हैं कि यह मेरा पति हो जाय ।। ४६½ ।।

The verse in Mahābhārata 12.98.46 that mentions “thousands of apsarās running towards a slain warrior” is not laying down any rule or system of heavenly enjoyment, but is part of Indra’s poetic praise of valor while speaking to Ambarīṣa. This entire section is full of hyperboles – for example, a warrior who slays the enemy commander is said to become as powerful as Viṣṇu and as wise as Bṛhaspati.

Mahabharat 12.98.42 Geeta Press Gorakhpur

“The warrior who slays the enemy commander and ascends his chariot is regarded as as powerful as Lord Viṣṇu in valor, as intelligent as Bṛhaspati, and as mighty as a hero.” (12.98.42)

यस्तु सेनापतिं हत्वा तद्यानमधिरोहति ।। ४२ ।।

Clearly, no human can literally become Viṣṇu; it is simply a way to glorify courage and strength. In the same style, the apsarā imagery expresses how attractive bravery is – that not only worldly women, but even celestial maidens would wish such a hero as their husband. The perspective here is from the apsarās’ side, not the warrior’s. Nowhere is it said that warriors fight or die for the sake of sensual reward. In fact, just a couple of verses later (12.98.48), the Mahābhārata lays down strict ethics of warfare: a warrior must not kill the aged, children, or women, must not strike a fleeing enemy from behind, and must not harm one who surrenders seeking refuge.

Mahabharat 12.98.45

युद्धमें वृद्ध, बालक और स्त्रियोंका वध नहीं करना चाहिये, किसी भागते हुएकी पीठमें आघात नहीं करना चाहिये, जो मुँहमें तिनका लिये शरण में आ जाय और कहने लगे कि मैं आपका ही हूँ, उसका भी वध नहीं करना चाहिये ।। ४८ ।।

“In battle, one should not slay the aged, the child, or women. One should not strike a fleeing enemy from behind. And if someone comes holding a blade of grass in his mouth, seeking refuge and saying, ‘I am yours,’ he too should not be slain.” (12.98.48)

वृद्धबालौ न हन्तव्यौ न च स्त्री नैव पृष्ठतः ।। ४८ ।।
तृणपूर्णमुखश्चैव तवास्मीति च यो वदेत् ।
युद्धमें वृद्ध, बालक और स्त्रियोंका वध नहीं करना चाहिये, किसी भागते हुएकी पीठमें आघात नहीं करना चाहिये, जो मुँहमें तिनका लिये शरण में आ जाय और कहने लगे कि मैं आपका ही हूँ, उसका भी वध नहीं करना चाहिये ।। ४८½ ।।

This shows clearly that the focus of the chapter is dharma-yuddha and glorification of courage, not sensual gratification. History itself proves this – Bhīṣma Pitāmah, one of the greatest warriors, was a lifelong brahmacārī, never married, and sought no pleasure even in earthly life. His valor was for dharma, not for desire. Therefore, taking this metaphor literally and reducing it to “Hinduism promises apsarās as a reward” is a shallow, Kaliyugī misinterpretation. The true essence of the passage is that supreme courage and sacrifice command universal admiration, even from the divine.

Coming to false Allegations on Atharva Veda 4.34.2

The Sukta 34 of Atharva Veda is – Brahmaudan Sukta]

ऋषि – अथर्वा । देवता – ब्रह्मौदन । छन्द – त्रिष्टुप् ४ उत्तमा भुरिक् त्रिष्टुप् ५ त्र्यवसाना सप्तपदा कृति, ६ पञ्चपदातिशक्वरी, ७ भुरिक् अतिशक्वरी, ८ जगती ।] इस सूक्त के देवता 'ब्रह्मौदन' हैं। लौकिक संदर्भ में यज्ञीय क्रम में संस्कारयुक्त जो अन्न दान किया जाता है, उसे ब्रह्मौदन कहते हैं। पके हुए भोज्य पदार्थ, बिना पकाये भोज्य (दही, शहद, घृतादि) पदार्थ तथा सूखे अन्न भी यज्ञीय ऊर्जा से संस्कारित करके दिये जाने की परम्परा रही है। यज्ञीय-ब्राह्मी संस्कार युक्त इस सेवन के भी महत्त्वपूर्ण लाभ कहे गये हैं; किन्तु सूक्ष्म सन्दर्भमें 'रेतो वा ओदनः ' (श०ब्रा० १३११४, जैसे सूत्रों के अनुसार तह बहुत व्यापक जत्त्व है। ब्रह्मौदन का अर्थ ब्रह्म का उत्पादक तेजस् होता है। ब्रह्म ने सृष्टि सृजन यज्ञ के लिए अपने तेजस् का एक अंश परिपक्व किया। जिस तरह अन्नमयकोश के पोषण एवं विकास के लिए अन्न आवश्यक है, उसी तरह सृष्टि के मूल घटकों के लिये ब्रह्मौदन सृष्टिकारक तेजस् की भूमिका मानी जा सकती है। ब्रहावर्चस इसी के धारण-सेवन करने से विकसित होता है। इस सूक्त तथा अगले सूक्त के मंत्रों में ब्रह्मौदन की जो महत्ता बतलायी गयी है, वह स्थूल अन्न की अपेक्षा ऐसी ही व्यापक अवधारणा का पोषण करती है

In this hymn the deity is Brahmaudan.

In the worldly context, Brahmaudan refers to the sanctified food that is offered in the sacrificial sequence. Cooked food, uncooked edibles (such as curd, honey, ghee, etc.), and even dry grains were traditionally consecrated through the energy of the sacrifice and then given as offerings. These yajña-imbued, brahma-sanctified consumables were said to have great benefits.

But in the subtler sense, according to formulas such as “Reto vā odanaḥ” (Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa 13.1.14), the meaning is much more expansive. Brahmaudan signifies the radiant power that is the product of Brahman itself. For the cosmic sacrifice of creation, Brahman matured a portion of its own brilliance.

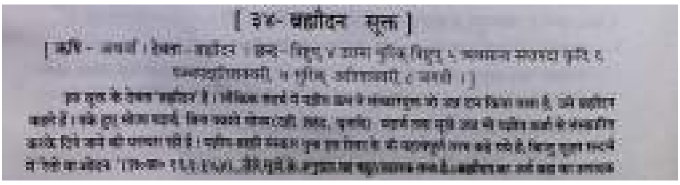
Just as food (anna) is essential for the nourishment and growth of the annamayakośa (the sheath composed of food), in the same way Brahmaudan—as the creative brilliance of Brahman—was regarded as fundamental to the constituents of creation.

Brahmavarcas (spiritual brilliance, the radiance of Brahman) develops through the upholding and assimilation of this Brahmaudan.

Thus, in this hymn and the next one, the greatness of Brahmaudan is described—not merely as gross food, but as a vast concept that sustains creation itself.



[३४- ब्रह्मौदन सूक्त]

"Atharva Veda 4.34.1–2 speaks about Brahmaudan—the creative brilliance of Brahman. It is presented as the foundational principle behind the constituents of creation itself. The hymn does not describe ordinary human beings or their enjoyments, but rather reveals the cosmic yajña, in which Brahman, Vastness, Ṛṣis, Chandas, Satya, and Tapas are symbolically assigned as its limbs. Thus, the focus is on the metaphysical process of creation, not on normal human affairs."

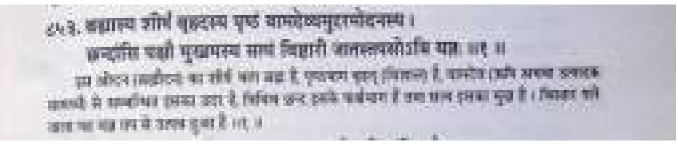
इस ओदन (ब्रह्मौदन) का शीर्ष भाग ब्रह्म है, पृष्ठभाग बृहत् (विशाल) है, वामदेव (ऋषि अथवा उत्पादक सामर्थ्य) से सम्बन्धित इसका उदर है, विविध छन्द इसके पार्श्वभाग हैं तथा सत्य इसका मुख है। विस्तार पाने वाला यह यज्ञ तप से उत्पन्न हुआ है ॥१ ॥

"The top portion of this Odan (Brahmaudan, the cosmic oblation) is Brahman; its back is the Bṛhat (the Vast). Its belly is connected with Vāmadeva (the Ṛṣi or the productive power). The various Chandas (metres of the Veda) are its sides, and Truth is its mouth. This sacrifice, which expands and grows, has been born of tapas (austerity)." (1)



Atharva Veda 4.34.2 is wrongly rendered as speaking of "men without bones, whose male organ is not burned, and who get many women in heaven." In reality, the sūkta describes Brahmaudan—the creative brilliance of Brahman—symbolically, not human beings. The word anasthāḥ ("boneless") means subtle radiance without a gross frame, capable of taking any form. The mention of śiśna does not refer to a physical organ but to the indestructible generative faculty or productive power, which even fire cannot consume. Likewise, bahvyaḥ striyaḥ ("many women") is Vedic symbolism for fertile powers or creative energies (śaktis), not literal women for enjoyment. As Āchārya Rām

Sharma explains, in the worldly sense sacrificial food (havis) retains its sanctity even after fire, and in the subtle sense the pure brilliance of Brahman ascends to higher worlds and empowers creative forces. Thus, the verse is about the metaphysical yajña and cosmic creation, not about human pleasure or sexuality.

Atharva Veda 4.34.2 hindi translation by Shri Ram Sharma Acharya –

यह (ब्रह्मौदन) अस्थिरहित (कोई भी इच्छित आकार लेने में सक्षम) और पवित्र है। वायु से (शरीर में प्राणायाम आदि के द्वारा) शुद्ध और पवित्र होकर यह पवित्र लोकों को ही प्राप्त होता है। अग्नि इसके शिश्न (उत्पादक अंग) को नष्ट नहीं करता। स्वर्ग में (इसका तेजस् धारण करने वाली) इसकी बहुत सी स्त्रियाँ (उत्पादक शक्तियाँ ।) हैं ॥२॥ [लौकिक संदर्भ में यज्ञ से संस्कारित अन्न के दिव्य संस्कार अग्नि पर पकाने से नष्ट नहीं होते। हव्य बनकर यह ऊर्ध्व लोकों में जाकर अनेक उर्वर शक्तियों को अपना तेजस् प्रदान करता है। सूक्ष्म संदर्भ में यह कोई भी रूप लेने में समर्थ तेजस् पवित्र होता है तथा पवित्र माध्यमों द्वारा ही ग्रहणीय है। इसका प्रभाव अग्नि आदि के सम्पर्क से कम नहीं होता ।]

This Brahmaudan is boneless (i.e., without a gross, bony body, capable of taking any desired form) and pure.
Cleansed and sanctified by wind (through prāṇic discipline such as breath-control, or by contact with the life-breath), it attains the pure worlds.
Fire does not destroy its śiśna—that is, its generative faculty / productive power.
In heaven it has many women—meaning, it possesses many productive energies (fertile powers, śaktis) which carry and manifest its brilliance. ॥2॥

Ram Sharma Acharya Explanation-

[लौकिक संदर्भ में यज्ञ से संस्कारित अन्न के दिव्य संस्कार अग्नि पर पकाने से नष्ट नहीं होते। हव्य बनकर यह ऊर्ध्व लोकों में जाकर अनेक उर्वर शक्तियों को अपना तेजस् प्रदान करता है। सूक्ष्म संदर्भ में यह कोई भी रूप लेने में समर्थ तेजस् पवित्र होता है तथा पवित्र माध्यमों द्वारा ही ग्रहणीय है। इसका प्रभाव अग्नि आदि के सम्पर्क से कम नहीं होता ।]

(Worldly context: The divine sanctity infused into sacrificial food is not destroyed by the fire that cooks it. As an offering (havya), it ascends to the higher worlds and transmits its brilliance to many fertile powers.
Subtle context: This brilliance, being able to assume any form, is pure and is receivable only by pure means. Its potency is not diminished by the contact of fire or other forces.)

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmad-bhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sat (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[174] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devī-bhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devi-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and then wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[175] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[176] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[177] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[178] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[179] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

Coming to Allegations on Agni Purana Adhaya 292 slokas 10-11

Here is Agni Purāṇa, Adhyāya 292, ślokas 10–17, Hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications. Nowhere does it state that one who observes cow vows (Govrati) receives prostitutes in heaven for sexual purposes. It simply says — “उस लोक में मानव विमान मैं अप्सराओं के द्वारा नृत्य-गीत से सेवित होकर प्रमुदित होता है” — meaning that in that realm, one rejoices while being served by Apsarās through their dance and music, enjoying divine entertainment and auspicious celebration, not sexual activity.

एक मास तक गोव्रती होकर प्रतिदिन स्नान करना चाहिये, गोरस से जीवन चलावे, गौओं का अनुगमन करना चाहिये और गौओं के भोजन करने के बाद भोजन करना चाहिये। इससे मनुष्य निष्पाप होकर गोलोक को प्राप्त करता है। गोमती विद्या के जप से भी श्रेष्ठतम गोलोक की प्राप्ति हो जाती है। उस लोक में मानव विमान मैं अप्सराओं के द्वारा नृत्य-गीत से सेवित होकर प्रमुदित होता है। गौएँ सदा सुरभिरूपिणी हैं। वे गुग्गुल के समान गन्ध से संयुक्त हैं। गौएँ समस्त प्राणियों की प्रतिष्ठा हैं। गौएँ परम मंगलमयी हैं। गौएँ परम अन्न और देवताओं के हैं और मन्त्रपूज हविष्य से स्वर्ग में स्थित देवताओं को तृप्त करती हैं। ऋषियों के अग्निहोत्र में गौएँ हवनकार्य में प्रयुक्त होती हैं। गौएँ सम्पूर्ण मनुष्यों की श्रेष्ठतम शरण हैं। गौएँ परम पवित्र, महामंगलमयी, स्वर्ग की सोपानभूत, धन्य और सनातन (नित्य) हैं। श्रीमती सुरभि-पुत्री गौओं को नमस्कार है। ब्रह्मसुताओं को नमस्कार । पवित्र गौओं को बारंबार नमस्कार है। ब्राह्मण और गौएँ-एक ही वंश की दो

शाखाएँ हैं। एक के आश्रय में मन्त्र की स्थिति है और दूसरी में हविष्य प्रतिष्ठित है। देवता, ब्राह्मण, गौ, साधु और साध्वी स्त्रियों के बल पर यह सारा संसार टिका हुआ है, इसी से वे परम पूजनीय हैं। गौएँ जिस स्थान पर जल पीती हैं, वह स्थान तीर्थ है। गंगा आदि पवित्र नदियाँ गोस्वरूपा ही हैं। हे सुश्रुत! मैंने यह गौओं के माहात्म्य का वर्णन किया; अधुना उनकी चिकित्सा सुनो।।१२-२२।।

One should observe cow-vows (Govratī) for a month, bathing daily , sustaining life with cow dung, following the cows, and eating only after they have eaten. By doing this, a person becomes sinless and attains Goloka. The chanting of Gomatī Vidyā also grants the attainment of the highest Goloka. In that realm, one rejoices, served by Apsarās through dance and song, while traveling in a celestial vehicle.

Cows are always embodiments of fragrance (surabhirūpī), endowed with a scent like guggula (aromatic resin). They are the honor of all living beings, supremely auspicious, the highest source of nourishment, and belong to the Devas, satisfying them in heaven through mantras, worship, and offerings. Cows are used in the sacred rituals (havan) of sages' fire sacrifices. They are the supreme refuge for all humans, most sacred, supremely auspicious, the stairway to heaven, blessed, and eternal (sanātana). Salutations to the daughters of Surabhi, the cows; salutations to the Brahmasutas; repeated salutations to the holy cows.

Brahmins and cows are like two branches of the same lineage—one harbors mantras, and the other harbors sacrificial offerings (haviṣya). The entire world is sustained by the power of the Devas, Brahmins, cows, and virtuous men and women; this is why they are supremely worshipful. The places where cows drink water become sacred (tīrtha). Sacred rivers like the Ganga are themselves in the form of cows. O Suśruta! I have described the greatness of cows; now hear their treatment and care. (Verses 12–22)

Coming to Allegations on Atharva Veda 4.34.2

The Sukta 34 of Atharva Veda is – Brahmaudan Sukta]

"Āchārya Rām Sharma Āchārya, in his Atharva Veda Bhāṣya, has explained this sūkta by giving its basic background and meaning.

ऋषि – अथर्वा । देवता – ब्रह्मौदन । छन्द – त्रिष्टुप् ४ उत्तमा भुरिक् त्रिष्टुप् ५ त्र्यवसाना सप्तपदा कृति, ६ पञ्चपदातिशक्वरी, ७ भुरिक् अतिशक्वरी, ८ जगती ।] इस सूक्त के देवता 'ब्रह्मौदन' हैं। लौकिक संदर्भ में यज्ञीय क्रम में संस्कारयुक्त जो अन्न दान किया जाता है, उसे ब्रह्मौदन कहते हैं। पके हुए भोज्य पदार्थ, बिना पकाये भोज्य (दही, शहद, घृतादि) पदार्थ तथा सूखे अन्न भी यज्ञीय ऊर्जा से संस्कारित करके दिये जाने की परम्परा रही है। यज्ञीय-ब्राह्मी संस्कार युक्त इस सेवन के भी महत्त्वपूर्ण लाभ कहे गये हैं; किन्तु सूक्ष्म सन्दर्भमें 'रेतो वा ओदनः ' (श०ब्रा० १३१११४, जैसे सूत्रों के अनुसार तह बहुत व्यापक जत्त्व है। ब्रह्मौदन का अर्थ ब्रह्म का उत्पादक तेजस् होता है। ब्रह्म ने सृष्टि सृजन यज्ञ के लिए अपने तेजस् का एक अंश परिपक्व किया। जिस तरह अन्नमयकोश के पोषण एवं विकास के लिए अन्न आवश्यक है, उसी तरह सृष्टि के मूल घटकों के लिये ब्रह्मौदन सृष्टिकारक तेजस् की भूमिका मानी जा सकती है। ब्रहावर्चस इसी के धारण-सेवन करने से विकसित होता है। इस सूक्त तथा अगले सूक्त के मंत्रों में ब्रह्मौदन की जो महत्ता बतलायी गयी है, वह स्थूल अन्न की अपेक्षा ऐसी ही व्यापक अवधारणा का पोषण करती है

In this hymn the deity is Brahmaudan.

In the worldly context, Brahmaudan refers to the sanctified food that is offered in the sacrificial sequence. Cooked food, uncooked edibles (such as curd, honey, ghee, etc.), and even dry grains were traditionally consecrated through the energy of the sacrifice and then given as offerings. These yajña-imbued, brahma-sanctified consumables were said to have great benefits.

But in the subtler sense, according to formulas such as "Reto vā odanaḥ" (Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa 13.1.1.4), the meaning is much more expansive. Brahmaudan signifies the radiant power that is the product of Brahman itself. For the cosmic sacrifice of creation, Brahman matured a portion of its own brilliance.

Just as food (anna) is essential for the nourishment and growth of the annamayakośa (the sheath composed of food), in the same way Brahmaudan—as the creative brilliance of Brahman—was regarded as fundamental to the constituents of creation.

Brahmavarcas (spiritual brilliance, the radiance of Brahman) develops through the upholding and assimilation of this Brahmaudan.

Thus, in this hymn and the next one, the greatness of Brahmaudan is described—not merely as gross food, but as a vast concept that sustains creation itself.

"Atharva Veda 4.34.1–2 speaks about Brahmaudan—the creative brilliance of Brahman. It is presented as the foundational principle behind the constituents of creation itself. The hymn does not describe ordinary human beings or their enjoyments, but rather reveals the cosmic yajña, in which Brahman, Vastness, Ṛṣis, Chandas, Satya, and Tapas are symbolically assigned as its limbs. Thus, the focus is on the metaphysical process of creation, not on normal human affairs."

इस ओदन (ब्रह्मौदन) का शीर्ष भाग ब्रह्म है, पृष्ठभाग बृहत् (विशाल) है, वामदेव (ऋषि अथवा उत्पादक सामर्थ्य) से सम्बन्धित इसका उदर है, विविध छन्द इसके पार्श्वभाग हैं तथा सत्य इसका मुख है। विस्तार पाने वाला यह यज्ञ तप से उत्पन्न हुआ है ॥१ ॥

"The top portion of this Odan (Brahmaudan, the cosmic oblation) is Brahman; its back is the Bṛhat (the Vast). Its belly is connected with Vāmadeva (the Ṛṣi or the productive power). The various Chandas (metres of the Veda) are its sides, and Truth is its mouth. This sacrifice, which expands and grows, has been born of tapas (austerity)." (1)

Atharva Veda 4.34.2 is wrongly rendered as speaking of "men without bones, whose male organ is not burned, and who get many women in heaven." In reality, the sūkta describes Brahmaudan—the creative brilliance of Brahman—symbolically, not human beings. The word anasthāḥ ("boneless") means subtle radiance without a gross frame, capable of taking any form. The mention of śiśna does not refer to a physical organ but to the indestructible generative faculty or productive power, which even fire cannot consume. Likewise, bahvyaḥ striyaḥ ("many women") is Vedic symbolism for fertile powers or creative energies (śaktis), not literal women for enjoyment. As Āchārya Rām Sharma explains, in the worldly sense sacrificial food (havis) retains its sanctity even after fire, and in the subtle sense the pure brilliance of Brahman ascends to higher worlds and empowers creative forces. Thus, the verse is about the metaphysical yajña and cosmic creation, not about human pleasure or sexuality.

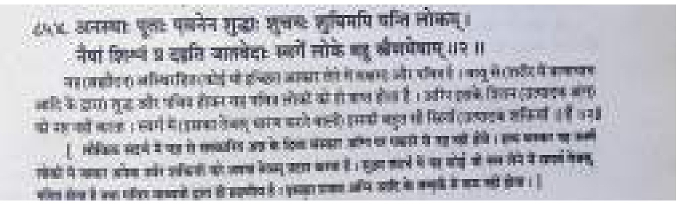
यह (ब्रह्मौदन) अस्थिरहित (कोई भी इच्छित आकार लेने में सक्षम) और पवित्र है। वायु से (शरीर में प्राणायाम आदि के द्वारा) शुद्ध और पवित्र होकर यह पवित्र लोकों को ही प्राप्त होता है। अग्नि इसके शिश्न (उत्पादक अंग) को नष्ट नहीं करता। स्वर्ग में (इसका तेजस् धारण करने वाली) इसकी बहुत सी स्त्रियाँ (उत्पादक शक्तियाँ ।) हैं ॥२॥ [लौकिक संदर्भ में यज्ञ से संस्कारित अन्न के दिव्य संस्कार अग्नि पर पकाने से नष्ट नहीं होते। हव्य बनकर यह ऊर्ध्व लोकों में जाकर अनेक उर्वर शक्तियों को अपना तेजस् प्रदान करता है। सूक्ष्म संदर्भ में यह कोई भी रूप लेने में समर्थ तेजस् पवित्र होता है तथा पवित्र माध्यमों द्वारा ही ग्रहणीय है। इसका प्रभाव अग्नि आदि के सम्पर्क से कम नहीं होता ।]

This Brahmaudan is boneless (i.e., without a gross, bony body, capable of taking any desired form) and pure.
Cleansed and sanctified by wind (through prāṇic discipline such as breath-control, or by contact with the life-breath), it attains the pure worlds.
Fire does not destroy its śiśna—that is, its generative faculty / productive power.
In heaven it has many women—meaning, it possesses many productive energies (fertile powers, śaktis) which carry and manifest its brilliance. ॥2॥

Ram Sharma Acharya Explanation-

[लौकिक संदर्भ में यज्ञ से संस्कारित अन्न के दिव्य संस्कार अग्नि पर पकाने से नष्ट नहीं होते। हव्य बनकर यह ऊर्ध्व लोकों में जाकर अनेक उर्वर शक्तियों को अपना तेजस् प्रदान करता है। सूक्ष्म संदर्भ में यह कोई भी रूप लेने में समर्थ तेजस् पवित्र होता है तथा पवित्र माध्यमों द्वारा ही ग्रहणीय है। इसका प्रभाव अग्नि आदि के सम्पर्क से कम नहीं होता ।]

(Worldly context: The divine sanctity infused into sacrificial food is not destroyed by the fire that cooks it. As an offering (havya), it ascends to the higher worlds and transmits its brilliance to many fertile powers.
Subtle context: This brilliance, being able to assume any form, is pure and is receivable only by pure means. Its potency is not diminished by the contact of fire or other forces.)



Coming to Allegations on Matsya Purana 107.5

In Matsya Purana, Adhyaya 107, shlokas 4–5 (Hindi translation by Gita Press, Gorakhpur), there is no explicit mention that a person engages in sexual intercourse with Apsaras in heaven. The text only describes the soul being welcomed in Swarga, awakened by the melodious songs of Apsaras, and enjoying heavenly pleasures — which are depicted in a dignified and non-explicit manner.

A person attains the same result as he would by actually obtaining the fruit, merely by remembering the holy place in his mind.
A man, whether without desire or with some wish, who dies by drowning in the stream of the Ganga, goes to heaven.
He never has to see the sight of hell; instead, he ascends to the world of the gods, riding a celestial chariot adorned with swans and cranes.
There, he is awakened from sleep by the melodious flow of songs sung by groups of Apsaras (celestial maidens).
O King! In this way, he enjoys the pleasures of heaven for thousands of years.

Coming to Allegations on Mahabharata 13.106.60

Here is Mahabharat 13.106.60 hindi translation by Geeta press Gorakhpur . Here its simply said that pure-souled man, adorned with ornaments, enjoys himself seated upon a golden-like celestial chariot (vimāna) which are filled with hundreds of women (Apsaras) and moves according to his will . Nowhere its said that one enjoys sexual intercourse with woman which is not possible as per Śvetāśvatara Upanishad either . The Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 5.10 clearly states:
“The Self is neither female, nor male, nor neuter; whatever body it adopts, with that body it identifies.”

This directly implies that gender is not an inherent property of the soul (ātman), but only a temporary attribute of the physical body (sthūla śarīra). After death, the gross body—which alone possesses reproductive organs and biological functions—perishes. The surviving subtle body (sūkṣma śarīra) does not possess the physical capacity for sexual intercourse. Therefore, any concept of post-mortem sexual activity, such as “enjoying” sexual intercourse in heaven is both physiologically impossible and philosophically opposed to Vedānta.

अतः वह पवित्रात्मा पुरुष वस्त्राभूषणोंसे अलंकृत हो सैकड़ों स्त्रियोंसे भरे हुए और इच्छानुसार चलनेवाले सुवर्ण-सदृश विमानपर बैठकर रमण करता है। वह स्वस्थ, सफलमनोरथ, सुखी एवं निष्पाप होता है। ॥

Ludo Rucher in his book the Puranas page 172 dated Devi bhagvatm to be written between 1100-1350 AD and not later than that . He also proposed that the writer of this text must have been a Bengali Shakta Smarta Brahmin

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmad-bhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Saiv (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[74] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and then wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[75] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[76] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[77] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[78] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[79] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

THE VEDIC VERDICT: WHY CONCEPT SEXUAL PLEASURE AFTER DEATH LIKE ISLAM IS ANTI VEDIC

The Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 5.10 clearly states:
"The Self is neither female, nor male, nor neuter; whatever body it adopts, with that body it identifies."

This directly implies that gender is not an inherent property of the soul (ātman), but only a temporary attribute of the physical body (sthūla śarīra). After death, the gross body—which alone possesses reproductive organs and biological functions—perishes. The surviving subtle body (sūkṣma śarīra) does not possess the physical capacity for sexual intercourse. Therefore, any concept of post-mortem sexual activity, such as "enjoying" sexual intercourse in heaven is both physiologically impossible and philosophically opposed to Vedānta.

Vedic teaching views the afterlife not as a playground of sensual indulgence but as a transitional state in the cycle of saṃsāra, whose ultimate aim is mokṣa—liberation from rebirth—not eternal gratification. Post-death, the soul's true nature is beyond male/female distinctions, rendering the idea of sexual enjoyment not only baseless but fundamentally anti-Vedic, as it misrepresents the very purpose of existence described in the Upaniṣads.

Shvetashvatara Upanishad Adhaya 5 Mantra 10 Geeta Press Gorakhpur says

यह [विज्ञानात्मा] न स्त्री है, न पुरुष है और न नपुंसक ही है। यह जो-जो शरीर धारण करता है उसी उसीसे सुरक्षित रहता है ॥ १० ॥

This [conscious self/Atma] is neither female, nor male, nor neuter. Whatever body it takes on, by that very body it is protected. (10)

Shankar Bhasya –

'नैव स्त्री' इत्यादि। स्वयं
साक्षात् अद्वितीय ब्रह्मस्वरूप होनेके कारण यह न स्त्री है, न पुरुष है और न पुंसक ही है। यह जिस-जिस स्त्रीशरीर, पुरुषशरीर अथवा नपुंसकशरीरको

धारण करता है उसी-उसीसे यह विज्ञानात्मा रक्षित – सुरक्षित रहता है अर्थात् उसी-उसी शरीरके धर्मोंको अपनेमें आरोपित कर ऐसा मानने लगता है कि 'मैं स्थूल हूँ, मैं कृश हूँ, मैं पुरुष हूँ, मैं स्त्री हूँ, मैं नपुंसक हूँ' इत्यादि ॥ १० ॥

"Neither female," etc.—Since it is itself the direct, non-dual Brahman in nature, it is neither female, nor male, nor neuter. Whatever female body, male body, or neuter body it takes on, by that very body this vijñānātmā is preserved—protected, meaning it superimposes upon itself the qualities (dharma) of that very body and comes to think: "I am stout, I am thin, I am a man, I am a woman, I am a neuter," and so on. (10)

Explanation of Geeta Press on this Shruti Mantra –

एषः = यह जीवात्मा; नन; एव-तो; स्त्री स्त्री है; नन; पुमान् पुरुष है; च=और; न=न; अयम्-यह; नपुंसकः एव नपुंसक ही है; सः वह; यत् यत्- जिस-जिस; शरीरम्-शरीरको; आदत्ते ग्रहण करता है; तेन तेन-उस-उससे; युज्यते सम्बद्ध हो जाता है ॥ १०॥

This [conscious self/Atma] is neither female, nor male, nor neuter. Whatever body it takes on, by that very body it is protected. (10)

व्याख्या – जीवात्मा वास्तवमें न तो स्त्री है, न पुरुष है और न नपुंसक ही है। यह जब जिस शरीरको ग्रहण करता है, उस समय उससे संयुक्त होकर वैसा ही बन जाता है। जो जीवात्मा आज स्त्री है, वही दूसरे जन्ममें पुरुष हो सकता है; जो पुरुष है, वह स्त्री हो सकता है। भाव यह कि ये स्त्री, पुरुष और नपुंसक आदि भेद शरीरको लेकर हैं; जीवात्मा सर्वभेदशून्य है, सारी उपाधियोंसे रहित है ॥ १० ॥

The jīvātmā (individual soul) in reality is neither female, nor male, nor neuter. Whatever body it takes on, at that time it becomes associated with it and appears accordingly. The soul that is now a woman may in another birth become a man; one who is a man now may become a woman. The point is that distinctions such as female, male, and neuter arise only with the taking on of a body; the jīvātmā is entirely free from all such differences and is devoid of all limiting attributes.

यद्यच्छरीरमादत्ते तेन तेन स युज्यते॥१०॥

एषः-यह जीवात्मा; न-न; एव-तो; स्त्री-स्त्री है; न-न; पुमान्-पुरुष है; च-और; न-न; अयम्-यह; नपुंसकः एव-नपुंसक ही है; सः-वह; यत् यत्-

जिस-जिस; शरीरम्-शरीरको; आदत्ते-ग्रहण करता है; तेन तेन-उस-उससे; युज्यते-सम्बद्ध हो जाता है॥१०॥

व्याख्या—जीवात्मा वास्तवमें न तो स्त्री है, न पुरुष है और न नपुंसक ही है। यह जब जिस शरीरको ग्रहण करता है, उस समय उससे संयुक्त होकर वैसा ही बन जाता है। जो जीवात्मा आज स्त्री है, वही दूसरे जन्ममें पुरुष हो सकता है, जो पुरुष है, वह स्त्री हो सकता है। भाव यह कि ये स्त्री, पुरुष और नपुंसक आदि भेद शरीरको लेकर हैं, जीवात्मा सर्वभेदशून्य है, सारी उपाधियोंसे रहित है॥१०॥

This principle is also affirmed in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 145 (p. 1278/2566 Geeta Press Gorakhpur), where it is stated that the Jīva-Ātman is neither male nor female. Being beyond gender distinctions, the soul is free from sexual intercourse in Svarga as well as in all other worlds."

जीवात्मा स्त्रीरूप है या पुरुषरूप? एक है या अलग-अलग ? देव! यह मेरा संशय है। आप इसका निवारण करें ।।

श्रीमहेश्वरने कहा- जीवात्मा सदा ही निर्विकार है! वह न स्त्री है न पुरुष। वह कर्मके अनुसार विभिन्न जातियोंमें जन्म लेता है। पुरुषोचित कर्म करके स्त्री भी पुरुष हो सकती है
और स्त्री-भावनासे युक्त पुरुष तदनुरूप कर्म करके उस कर्मके अनुसार स्त्री हो सकता है ।।

Umā asked:
"O Lord of Lords, O Great God, O Bhagavān! This subject I have already heard well. Now please tell me — does the soul (Ātman) have relation with the class (nature) of woman or of man?

Is the Jīva-soul of the nature of woman or of man? Is it one, or are they separate? O Lord, this is my doubt. Please dispel it."

Śrī Maheśvara (Śiva) said:
"The Jīva (individual soul) is always without modification (nirvikāra). It is neither woman nor man. According to actions (karma), it takes birth in various kinds of beings.

By performing manly deeds, a woman can become a man; and a man, imbued with feminine disposition, by performing such actions, can become a woman according to that karma."

The Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (4.4.17) declares that the Self in which the five beings and the unmanifest space are established is none other than the immortal Brahman, and the knower of that becomes immortal. Later (4.4.20), the same text describes this Brahman as immeasurable, eternal, pure, subtler than unmanifest space, unborn, the Self, great, and imperishable. Together, these mantras clearly establish that one's true Self (Ātman) is not a perishable body but the immortal Brahman itself—unborn, beyond measure, subtler than space, and free from all physical limitations. Since sexual enjoyment belongs only to the gross body, which perishes at death, and the surviving Self is described as beyond birth, gender, and physicality, the idea of post-mortem sexual activity in heaven is both physiologically impossible and philosophically contrary to the Upaniṣadic teaching. The aim of life, as these verses emphasize, is not sensual gratification but realization of the Self as Brahman, leading to immortality and liberation. ब्रह्म अप्रमेय, ध्रुव, निर्मल, [अव्याकृताख्य] आकाशसे भी सूक्ष्म, अजन्मा, आत्मा, महान् और अविनाशी है॥२०॥

विरज—रजोहीन है, रज धर्म-अधर्मादिरूप मलको कहते हैं, उससे रहित है। 'आकाशात्पर:'—अव्याकृत-संज्ञक जो आकाश है, उससे भी पर—व्यतिरिक्त—सूक्ष्म अथवा व्यापक है। अज—जन्म नहीं लेता; जन्मका प्रतिषेध करनेसे 'अस्ति वर्धते' आदि आगेके भावविकारोंका भी प्रतिषेध हो जाता है; क्योंकि सबका आरम्भ जन्मरूप भावविकारसे ही होता है। वह आत्मा है, महान् है—परिमाणमें सबसे बड़ा है तथा ध्रुव—अविनाशी है॥२०॥

In Katha Upanishad 1.1.25–28, Yama Ṛṣi deliberately tested Nachiketas to see whether he was fit for the supreme knowledge of the Ātman. Yama offered him every form of worldly enjoyment—wealth, sons, long life, celestial maidens, music, and dance—but Nachiketas firmly rejected them. He declared such pleasures to be śvobhāvāḥ ("ephemeral, uncertain even of lasting till tomorrow"), pointing out that they only weaken the senses and destroy dharma, strength, wisdom, and fame. Even a long span of life, he argued, is trivial when set against the brevity of existence itself—for if even Brahmā's lifespan is short, what to say of mortals?

He further reasoned that a discerning man who has approached the deathless cannot cling to perishable things like sons, gold, or lustful pleasures, which are the desires of the ignorant. The wise naturally seek higher and higher goals, not to be dragged down by unstable enjoyments. Thus, Nachiketas asked Yama not to tempt him with such illusory pleasures, but to grant him the true knowledge he sought—the truth of what lies beyond death.

These verses are a direct rejection of the idea that lasting happiness can come from sensuality, whether in this life or after death. Yama tempts Nachiketas with women, music, and long life precisely to test him, and Nachiketas dismisses them as fleeting and destructive, saying they weaken the senses and cannot satisfy the soul. The contrast between preyas (what merely pleases, like sexual or material indulgence) and śreyas (what truly benefits, the pursuit of Self-knowledge) shows that sensuality is not only irrelevant to immortality but an obstacle to it. The teaching is clear:

मनुष्यलोकमें जो-जो भोग दुर्लभ हैं उन सब भोगोंको तू स्वच्छन्दतापूर्वक माँग ले। यहाँ रथ और बाजोंके सहित ये रमणियाँ हैं। ऐसी स्त्रियाँ मनुष्योंको प्राप्त होने योग्य नहीं होतीं। मेरे द्वारा दी हुई इन कामिनियोंसे तू अपनी सेवा करा। परन्तु हे नचिकेतः ! तू मरणसम्बन्धी प्रश्न मत पूछ ॥ २५॥

“In the world of men, ask freely for all the enjoyments that are rare and difficult to obtain. Here are chariots with steeds and these maidens with lutes and ornaments. Such women are not attainable by mortals. With these damsels, given by me, you may have them serve you as you wish. But, O Nachiketas, do not ask me about the question concerning death.” (25)

Shankara Bhashya-

इस मर्त्यलोकमें जो-जो कामनाएँ- प्रार्थनीय वस्तुएँ दुर्लभ हैं उन सबको छन्दतः – इच्छानुसार माँग ले। इसके सिवा ये रामा- जो पुरुषोंके साथ रमण करती हैं उन्हें 'रामा' कहते हैं, ऐसी ये दिव्य अप्सराएँ सरथा-रथोंके सहित और सतूर्या-तूर्यो (बाजों) के सहित मौजूद हैं। हम-जैसे देवताओंकी कृपाके बिना ये अर्थात् ऐसी स्त्रियाँ मरणधर्मा मनुष्योंको प्राप्त होने योग्य नहीं हैं। मेरे द्वारा दी हुई इन परिचारिकाओंसे तू अपनी परिचर्या अर्थात् पादप्रक्षालनादि सेवा करा; किन्तु हे नचिकेतः ! मरण अर्थात् मरनेके पश्चात् जीव रहता है या नहीं-ऐसा कौएके दाँतोंकी परीक्षाके समान मरणसम्बन्धी प्रश्न मत पूछ, तुझे ऐसा प्रश्न करना उचित नहीं है॥ २५ ॥

“In this mortal world, whatever desires—whatever objects of longing—are rare and hard to obtain, you may freely ask for them as you wish. Besides, here are the celestial maidens—called Rāmā, for they delight in play with men—these divine Apsarās, present along with chariots and attendants, with lutes, lyres, and musical instruments. Such women are not attainable by mortals subject to death without the grace of gods like me. With these attendants granted by me, you may have your service done—such as foot-washing and other ministrations. But, O Nachiketas, do not ask me about death—whether the soul remains after dying or not. That question is like prying into the impossible, like testing the edge of a razor; it is not proper for you to ask such a thing.” (25)

हे यमराज ! ये भोग 'कल रहेंगे या नहीं' - इस प्रकारके हैं और सम्पूर्ण इन्द्रियोंके तेजको जीर्ण कर देते हैं। यह सारा जीवन भी बहुत थोड़ा ही है। आपके वाहन और नाच-गान आपके ही पास रहें [हमें उनकी आवश्यकता नहीं है] ॥ २६ ॥

"O Lord Yama! These pleasures are such that they are uncertain—whether they will remain till tomorrow or not—and they wear away all the vigor of the senses. This life too is but very short. Let your chariots, your dances, and your songs remain with you [I have no need of them]." (26)

आपने जिन भोगोंका उल्लेख किया है वे तो श्वोभाव हैं- जिनका भाव अर्थात् अस्तित्व 'कल रहेंगे या नहीं' इस प्रकार सन्देहयुक्त हो उन्हें श्वोभाव कहते हैं। बल्कि हे अन्तक- हे मृत्यो ! ये अप्सरा आदि भोग तो मनुष्यका जो यह सम्पूर्ण इन्द्रियोंका तेज है उसे जीर्ण-क्षीण ही कर देते हैं, अतः धर्म, वीर्य, प्रज्ञा, तेज और यश आदिका क्षय करनेवाले होनेसे ये अनर्थके ही कारण हैं। और आप जो दीर्घजीवन देना चाहते हैं उसके विषयमें भी सुनिये। ब्रह्माका जो सम्पूर्ण जीवन-आयु है वह भी अल्प ही है, फिर हम-जैसोंके दीर्घजीवनकी तो बात ही क्या है? अतः आपके रथादि वाहन और नाच-गान आपके ही रहें ॥ २६ ॥

The enjoyments you have spoken of are fleeting (śvobhāvah)—their very existence is uncertain, for who can say whether they will remain even until tomorrow? Moreover, O Antaka, O Death! These pleasures—Apsarās and the like—only wear away and exhaust the vigor of a man's senses. Hence, being causes of the decline of righteousness, strength, wisdom, energy, and fame, they are but sources of misfortune. And as for the long span of life that you wish to bestow—listen: even the full duration of Brahmā's life is indeed but short; then what to say of long life for beings like us? Therefore, let your chariots, your vehicles, and your songs and dances remain with you." (26)

“Having come near to the deathless, who are free from decay, what discerning mortal dwelling on earth would still take delight in long life—seeing the fleeting pleasures that arise only from the passions of the body, such as lust for physical beauty?” (1.1.28)

Shankara Bhashya-

कहीं 'क्वधःस्थः' के स्थानमें 'क्व तदास्थः' ऐसा भी पाठ है। इस पक्षमें अक्षरोंकी योजना इस प्रकार करनी चाहिये। उन पुत्रादिमें जिसकी आस्था – आस्थिति अर्थात् तत्परता-पूर्वक प्रवृत्ति है वह 'तदास्थ' है। जो उनसे भी उत्कृष्टतर और दुष्प्राप्य पुरुषार्थको पानेका इच्छुक है वह पुरुष उनमें आस्था करनेवाला कैसे होगा? अर्थात् उन्हें असार समझनेवाला कोई भी पुरुष उनका अर्थी (इच्छुक) नहीं हो सकता, क्योंकि सभी लोग उत्तरोत्तर उन्नत ही होना चाहते हैं; अतः मैं पुत्र-धन आदि लोभोंसे प्रलोभित नहीं किया जा सकता। तथा वर्णके रागसे प्राप्त होनेवाले अप्सरा आदि सुखोंकी अस्थिररूपमें भावना करता हुआ; उन्हें यथावत् मिथ्यारूपसे) समझता हुआ कौन विवेकी पुरुष अति दीर्घ जीवनमें प्रेम करेगा?

अत: मुझे इन मिथ्या भोगोंसे प्रलोभित करना छोड़कर जिसके लिये मैंने प्रार्थना की है-

“Having attained the presence of the deathless gods who never suffer decay, and knowing that a far higher purpose is to be gained from them, what mortal—himself subject to old age and death—dwelling here upon the earth (called kvadhah, lower in comparison with the higher worlds), would still desire unstable objects such as sons, wealth, or gold that are longed for by the undiscerning? In another reading, instead of kvadhah-sthaḥ it is kva tad-āsthaḥ—meaning, ‘he who places his devotion in such things.’ But one who seeks a higher and rarer goal cannot set his heart on these transient gains, for men by nature desire to rise higher, not lower. Therefore, no wise person, understanding their unsubstantiality, can truly crave them. Likewise, who, perceiving the fleeting pleasures of Apsarās and such enjoyments that arise merely from fascination with bodily form, could delight in long life? Hence, do not tempt me with these illusory pleasures, but grant me that for which I have prayed.” (1.1.28)

In Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.3–4, Yama praises Naciketas for rejecting all worldly temptations, including wealth, sons, and celestial maidens, because they are perishable and cannot grant liberation. The verses clearly distinguish between avidyā (ignorance leading to transient enjoyments) and vidyā (knowledge leading to immortality), and they commend Naciketas for choosing the latter. This shows that the Upaniṣads treat sensual and material pleasures as distractions from the higher goal, not as ideals to be pursued.

हे नचिकेतः ! उस तूने पुत्र-वित्तादि प्रिय और अप्सरा आदि प्रियरूप भोगोंको, उनका असारत्व चिन्तन करके त्याग दिया है और जिसमें बहुत-से मनुष्य डूब जाते हैं, उस इस धनप्राया निन्दित गतिको तू प्राप्त नहीं हुआ ॥ ३॥

"O Nachiketas! You have rejected pleasures such as sons, wealth, and the enjoyments of maidens—having reflected on their worthlessness. You have not fallen into that condemned course, so money-centered, in which many men sink and perish." (1.2.3)

Sankara Bhasya –

'उनमेंसे श्रेयको ग्रहण करनेवालेका शुभ होता है और जो प्रेयको वरण करता है वह स्वार्थसे पतित हो जाता है' ऐसा जो ऊपर (इस वल्लीके प्रथम मन्त्रमें) कहा गया है, सो क्यों ?

"O Nachiketas! Blessed is your wisdom, for though I tempted you again and again with sons and wealth and the delights of celestial maidens, you have, reflecting upon their npermanence and worthlessness, firmly renounced them.

That path, filled with riches, into which foolish men plunge and thereby suffer, you have not chosen. This is precisely why it was said earlier (in the opening verse of this Valli) that well-being comes to him who embraces śreyas (the good), while he who clings to preyas (the merely pleasant) falls from his own true welfare." "That which is known as vidyā (knowledge, spiritual wisdom) and avidyā (ignorance, worldly indulgence) are of entirely opposite nature and yield contrary results.
I consider you, O Naciketā, to be one who longs for vidyā, since even the multitude of enjoyments did not entice you."

Sankara Bhasya-

"These two—śreyas (the good) and preyas (the merely pleasant)—are opposed to one another, as different as light and darkness, utterly distinct and leading to divergent ends: one to liberation, the other to bondage in the world. The wise know them as vidyā (knowledge, leading to the good) and avidyā (ignorance, leading to the pleasant). Of these, O Nachiketas, I regard you as one who longs for vidyā, a true student of the eternal. Why? Because even though many pleasures—such as celestial maidens and other delights that captivate the minds of the foolish—were presented to you, they could not seduce you nor stir a desire for enjoyment in your heart, nor could they turn you away from the path of śreyas. Therefore, I consider you a fit student, one worthy of the higher knowledge." (1.2.4)

Vishnu

Narada Purana, Uttarabhaga 28.35-37 "Visnu whom people meditate upon and truly remember, who is called Yogamurti (Embodiment of Yoga) and who is eternal, was enamoured of courtesans..."

Skanda Purana 2.1.4.40-54 narrates the story of how Vishnu became lusty after seeing Padmavati the daughter of King Asaka, Skanda Purana, Book 2 Vaisṇava khanda, Section 1 Venkatacala mahatmya, chapter 4, verses, 40-54 “The girls replied to him: “Nothing was seen by us. Why have you come to our park wielding an excellent bow. O leader of hunters, none of the animals living here should be killed. Go away quickly from this park which is in the protective jurisdiction of King Âkasa.” On hearing the words of those maidens he got down from the horse. “Who are you all? Who is this lotus-like maiden? She has excellent magnificence. All her limbs are fascinating. Her breasts are plump and protruding. Tell me. After hearing the same I shall go back to my abode in the mountain.” On hearing these words of his the friend and attendant of Padmavati urged by the daughter of Dharani said to the hunter, a resident of the mountain: “This is the daughter of King Akasa. She was born out of the bowels of the earth. O hero, she is our leader and her name is Padmini. Tell us, O youth of handsome features, what is your name? Whose son are you? What is your caste? Where is your residence? Why have you come here?” On being asked thus he replied to them with a smile on his lotus-like face: “Those conversant with ancient traditions say that our family is that of the Sun. Our names are innumerable. They sanctify learned men. By colour and name the ascetics say that I am Krsna. My discus instills fear in the minds of the enemies of Suras and those who hate Brahmanas. On hearing the sound of my conch enemies become confounded. Even among the immortal beings there is no bow equal to mine. They call me the lord of heroes, residing in Venkatadri. It was from the ridge of that mountain that I surrounded (i.e. accompanied) by my Nisada followers have come for hunting, riding on a horse, to your park. A certain animal moving rapidly like the wind has been pursued by me. It went away somewhere. Unable to see it I have now seen this maiden of exalted magnificence. I have come here with love. Can this maiden be obtained by me?” On hearing these words of Krsna they became infuriated and said: “If King Akasa sees you, he will bind you with fetters and take you away. Before this happens go quickly to your own abode.” Threatened by them thus, he mounted the swift horse. Accompanied by all his followers, he went back to the mountain quickly.”

जमदग्निनन्दन परशुराम स्वयंसिद्ध, तपस्वी, दग्धपातक, ईश्वर थे। उन्होंने क्षत्रियवध तथा गर्भस्थ शिशुवध किया। हे द्विज ! ऋषभदेव योगी, लोकशिक्षा देने वाले थे, वे धर्मार्थ कार्य करने वाले निन्दा के पात्र बन गये। नारद तो नारायण के भक्त एवं जनकल्याणकारी देवता थे, वे चगुलखोरी से कदापि वंचित नहीं थे। गौतम ऋषि वेद-शास्त्रतत्वज्ञ, वेदोपकारी ब्राह्मण होकर भी गोपचेष्टा परायण थे।।३८-४१।।

Translation:

“Lord Viṣṇu is the eternal embodiment of yoga, the teacher of Prahlāda and others, the destroyer of demons in the form of Narasiṃha, the God of gods, the one who destroys worldly desires, and who resides in the golden-eyed celestial abode. The yogis always meditate upon Him.

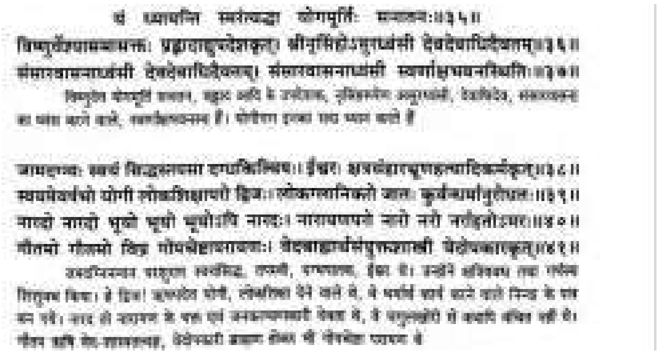
The son of Jamadagni, Paraśurāma, was self-accomplished, an austere sage, destroyer of sins, and divine. Yet he carried out the slaughter of the kṣatriya class and even killed children still in the womb.
O twice-born one! Ṛṣabhadeva was a great yogi, one who instructed the world, and though he acted only for righteousness and duty, he became an object of criticism.
And Nārada, the devotee of Nārāyaṇa and a god devoted to the welfare of beings, could never be completely free from the habit of tale-bearing.
Gautama Ṛṣi, a knower of the essence of the Vedas and a Brahmin who was a benefactor of the Vedas, nevertheless was attached to the playful acts concerning cows (gopaceṣṭā)."



In Skanda Purāṇa 2.1.4.40–54 (Venkatachala Māhātmya), the narrative describes the divine marriage of Padmāvatī, an incarnation of Goddess Lakṣmī, with Lord Viṣṇu in the form of Śrīnivāsa.

According to the account, King Ākāśa Rāja had once received a boon from Lord Viṣṇu that he would be freed from a certain curse when he would offer a crown to the Lord at the time of His marriage with Padmāvatī. While engaged in a hunt, Lord Śrīnivāsa beheld Padmāvatī and, recalling His earlier promise to Ākāśa Rāja, approached the king to request her hand in marriage—thus setting the stage for the fulfillment of both the boon and the destined union.

Skanda Purana Vaishnava Khanda Venkatachala Mahatmya Chapter 4 slokas 40-54 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications

वह अश्वारोही कहता है- हे ललनाओं! पुराविदपण्डितगण मेरे वंश को सूर्यवंश कहते हैं। जिसका नाम अनन्त है, जिनका नाम मनीषीगण के लिये भी पवित्र है, तपस्वीगण जिसका वर्ण भी कृष्ण कहते हैं तथा जिसका नाम भी कृष्ण ही है, जिसका चक्र ब्रह्मद्वेषी दैत्यों के लिये भयावह है, वैरीगण जिसकी शंखध्वनि सुनकर मोहित हो जाते हैं, देवताओं के पास भी जिसके धनुष ऐसा धनुष नहीं है, वैसे मुझको विद्वान् लोग वेंकटाचलवासी वीरपति कहते हैं। मैं उस वेंकटाचल पर्वत की घाटी से निषादों के साथ अश्वारोहण करके आखेट के लिये तुम्हारे वन में आ गया। मैं वन में प्रवेश करते ही एक पशु का पीछा करने लगा। तब वह पशु भी द्रुतवेग से भाग गया। तब मैं उसे न पाकर इस वन में विचरण करते-करते यहां आ गया। तदनन्तर मैंने यहां इस सौम्यमुखी कामिनी को देखा जिसे देखकर कामार्त्त हो गया हूं। क्या मैं इसे प्राप्त कर सकता हूं? ।।४७-५२

वे कुमारीगण इन कृष्ण का कथन सुनते ही क्रोधित हो गयीं तथा वे पुनः कहने लगीं – "इससे पहले कि आकाशराज यहां आकर तुमको जंजीर से बांधकर ले न जाये, उससे पहले तुम यहां से अपने घर भाग जाओ। इस प्रकार कुमारीगण से लांछित होकर कृष्ण अपने तेजगति वाले अश्व पर बैठा तथा अनुचरों के साथ गिरिगुहा में चला गया।।५३-५४।।

Śrī Varāhadeva said – Hearing that man's words, those maidens replied:
"We have not seen anything at all. O best of bowmen! Why have you come to our forest? O lord of Niṣādas! All the animals that wander in this forest are protected and must not be slain. They are cared for by King Ākāśa. You should quickly leave this forest!"

Hearing these words, that man dismounted from his horse and addressed the companions:
"O lotus-faced maidens! Who are all of you? And who is this fortunate maiden, with charming limbs, high and full breasts? Tell me this, and then I shall return to my dwelling in the mountains." (40–43)

Hearing this, and following the sign of the princess—the daughter of Queen Dharanī—her companion Padmāvatī spoke to that Niṣāda (tribal) youth of the mountains:
"O hero! These are the daughters of King Ākāśa, who were born from the Earth herself. This is our leader; her name is Padminī. O gentle-looking one! Now tell us—who are you? Whose son are you? What is your name? What is your lineage? Where do you live? And for what reason have you come into this forest?"

Hearing this, that horse-riding hero, with a lotus-like face and a gentle smile, began to speak. (44–46)

The horseman said:
*"O maidens! The learned know my lineage as the Sūryavaṃśa (Solar Dynasty). My name is Ananta. My very name is considered pure even by the wise; the ascetics describe my form as dark in complexion, and my name is Kṛṣṇa. My discus is terrible for demons who hate Brahmins; my enemies become bewildered when they hear the sound of my conch; and among the gods themselves, no one possesses a bow like mine.
The learned call me the valiant lord of Veṅkaṭācala. I have come from the valleys of Mount Veṅkaṭa, riding horses with the Niṣādas for the sake of hunting in your forest.

As soon as I entered the forest, I began to chase an animal. That creature ran swiftly and escaped me. Unable to catch :, I wandered through the forest and thus came here. Then I saw this gentle-faced maiden; seeing her, I have become overwhelmed with desire to obtain her . Can I obtain her?"* (47–52)

On hearing these words of Kṛṣṇa, the maidens became angry and again said:
"Before King Ākāśa comes here and has you bound in chains, run back to your home!"

Thus reproached by the maidens, Kṛṣṇa mounted his swift horse and, along with his attendants, returned to the caves of the mountain. (53–54)

Scriptures such as the Mahābhārata—particularly the Viṣṇu Sahasranāma in Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149—describe Śrī Nārāyaṇa Deva as being utterly free from all defects, including lust, anger, and greed. He is Hṛṣīkeśa, the supreme master of all senses, and Śuddhātmā, the Pure Soul—completely untouched by impurities, attachments, and worldly illusions. Nārāyaṇa embodies absolute truth, divine onsciousness, and eternal bliss, remaining beyond all material limitations and entirely free from sexual or any other form of desire or impurity. He is sinless—pure in every act, thought, and intention. As Dharmakṛt, He not only upholds dharma but practices it perfectly to establish it in the world. As Nivṛttātmā, His nature is intrinsically free from all worldly cravings, including lust and greed, and His mind remains eternally pure.

Allegations-

Shiva

Shiva shamelessly went to the pine forest and seduced the wives of sages, He went to the pine forest in Bhikshatana form, readers can Google the image of Bhikshatana which is fully nude with a snake tied around his waist,

Shiva Purana, Kotirudra Samhita 4.12.8-13 "Once the leading Brahmin devotees of Siva engrossed in the meditation of Siva went into the forest for bringing sacrificial twigs. In the meantime Siva himself assuming a very hideous form came there in order to test their devotion. He was very brilliant but stark naked. He had smeared ashes all over his body as the sole ornament. Standing there and holding his penis he began to show all sorts of vicious tricks. It was with a mind to do something pleasing to the forest-dwellers that Siva, favourite of the devotees, came to the forest at his will. The wives of the sages were extremely frightened at this sight. The other women excited and surprised approached the lord. Some embraced him. Others held his hands. The women were engrossed in struggling with one another. " Tr. Board of Scholars, Edited by J.L. Shastri

Skanda Purana V.iii.38.23-38 "…One lady who was over proud of her beauty and youthful form forgot to breast-feed her son lying on her lap. On seeing Mahadeva, another lady became struck by the arrows of Kama. She pressed down her protruding breasts with her arms…" Tr. Ganesh Vasudeo Tagare

Previous verses of Shiva Purana tell us that Shiva went there to test them. As far as my opinion on this issue is concerned, Shiva actually wanted to enjoy sages' wives on the pretext of the test, just like Krishna stole the clothes of Gopis to watch them naked and later gave a lame reason for this. In the Skanda Purana I.i.34.116-129, Parvati the wife of Shiva says that Shiva went to Daruvanam forest nude only to seduce women of sages on the pretext of begging alms, Parvati had denuded Shiva in front of gods and their servants after Shiva lost the bet in the game of dice,

Skanda Purana, Part 1, Mahesvarakhanda book 1, Kedarkhanda section 1, chapter 34, verses 11-129 “After saying thus, Parvati, the goddess, beloved of Sankara, became furious. She held Sankara by the hand. The lady of slender limbs took away the serpent Vasuki from his neck. Similarly she removed many other ornaments also. The infuriated lady hurriedly took away the ornaments of Sambhu. His crescent moon and his excellent elephant hide removed. The serpents Kambala and Asvatara tha thad been worn by Mahesa as ornaments were removed by the great goddess laughingly with tricky words. Even his loincloth was taken away laughingly with the utterance of tricky words. At that time the Ganas and the friends (of Parvati) felt embarrassed and ashamed. (The friends and others) turned their faces away. Bhrngi of great oenance, Candi, Munda, Mahaloman, Mahodara and many other Ganas became miserable. On seeing them in that plight, Mahesa became ashamed. Sankara who became angry spoke these words to Parvati: ‘All these sages are laughing satirically. Similarly Brahma, Visnu and these Devas, Indra and others all of them laughing (at me)…On being told thus by Sambhu, the Yogin, Parvati, the chaste lady of charming face, laughed and spoke these words: ‘What have you to do with a loincloth? You are a sage of sanctified soul. (Some time back) you wandered through Daruvana with the cardinal points alone for your garment (i.e. you were naked). Under the pretext of begging for alms, the wives of the sages were enchanted. While you were going, you were greatly adored by them. Your loincloth fell down (penis?) there…” Tr. G.V. Tagare

It is proved that the purpose of Shiva going to the pine forest in a nude state was only to enjoy sages’ wives. For the sake of the argument let’s accept that Shiva’s motive was really to test them. My question is, Is it befitting for a god to hold his erected penis in hand and appear fully naked before chaste women? Imagine someone doing this to your mother, sister, or daughter, you will start beating the guy and this is what the Rishis did, yes you read it right. Shiva was beaten up severely by the Rishis and even his penis was cut off,

Kurma Purana II.38.52 ”The sages said: A certain highly brilliant person has entered the holy Daruvana along with his wife, who was very beautiful in all her limbs. But he was naked. The lordly person fascinated our entire women and daughters, with his charming personality. While his beloved defiled our sons. We heaped various imprecations and curses on him but they were defied and set at nought. He was beaten soundly by us. His Linga was struck down.” Tr. G.V. Tagare

This story of Shiva being beaten up is supported by Brahmanda Purana, Brahmanda Purana I.2.27.45 ”He [Shiva] was scolded and beaten. His Linga (?penis) was taken out. It is to alleviate his anger that we have sought refuge in you.” Tr. G.V. Tagare

Skanda Purana V.i.26.71-72”After the Manvantara came to a close and Vaivasvata Manvantara arrived again, Mahesvara entered the sacrificial hall of Brahma with the same guise of and insance person with erected penis. [75-77b] Other asked him whether it was one of his Vratas and if so by whom was it demonstrated. They continued: "There are women here. How is it that this has been committed by you... You are worthy of being killed by us today." On being hit and hurt by the Brahmanas, thus, Sankara, the great holy Lord, smiled and told all those Brahmanas: "Why do you hit me-a lunatic who has lost his senses?

Refutation-

Next he alleged on Daruvan Incident Story from Various Puranas. Before understanding this story we have to keep in mind that This incident is of previous kalpa and not the current kalpa . It doesn't talk about origin of Shiv linga but only talks about formation of Hatkeshwar Linga In Fact the Shiv Linga was manifested during the formation of Universe only . Further he quoted JL Shastri translation over this story which are totally wrong and mistranslated without understanding the context of this story from other Puranas or from commentaries and explanations over Puranas like Purana Digdarshan etc

The Daruvan Incident comes in Various Puranas such as Linga, Shiva, Brahma Purana so we will be seeing them as well to understand this story Before Proceeding let me state that as Malechas claim that this incident is responsible for the formation of Shiv Linga, you are totally wrong its only responsible for formation of Hatkeshwar Linga
Shiv Purana 4.12.4

4. O brahmins, the story of a different Kalpa was heard from Vyāsa by me. O excellent sages, I shall narrate the same. Please listen.
   Means this incident is of another kalpa . Kalpa in Puranas refers to another time period of Creation. So this incident did not occur in the present kalpa or creation

WHY SHIV JI CAME AND WHAT WAS THE REASON FOR THIS INCIDENT..?

व्यासजीसे जो कल्पभेदकी कथा सुनी है, उसीका आज वर्णन कर रहा हूँ, आपलोग सुनें ॥ ४॥
पूर्वकालमें दारुवनमें ब्राह्मणोंके साथ जो घटना घटी, उसीको आप लोग सुनें। जैसा मैंने सुना है, वैसा ही कहता हूँ। हे ऋषिसत्तमो ! जो दारु नामक श्रेष्ठ वन है, वहाँ नित्य शिवजीके ध्यानमें तत्पर शिवभक्त [ब्राह्मण] रहा करते थे ॥ ५-६ ॥
हे मुनीश्वरो ! वे तीनों कालोंमें सदा शिवजीकी पूजा करते थे और नाना प्रकारके स्तोत्रोंसे उनकी स्तुति किया करते थे। शिवध्यानमें मग्न रहनेवाले वे शिवभक्त श्रेष्ठ ब्राह्मण किसी समय समिधा लेनेके लिये वनमें गये हुए थे ॥ ७-८ ॥

इसी बीच उन लोगोंकी परीक्षा लेनेहेतु साक्षात् नीललोहित [भगवान्] शंकर विकट रूप धारणकर वहाँ आये। वे दिगम्बर, भस्मरूप भूषणसे विभूषित तथा महातेजस्वी भगवान् शंकर हाथमें [तेजोमय] लिंगको धारणकर विचित्र लीला करने लगे ॥ ९-१० ॥

Verse 4:
"I am now narrating the story of the different cosmic cycles (Kalpa-bheda) that I heard from Sage Vyasa. All of you, please listen attentively."

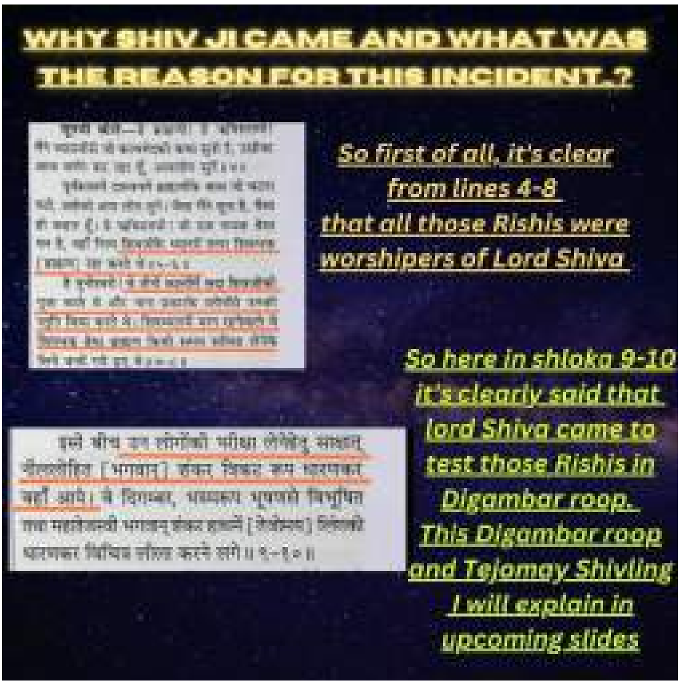
Verses 5–6:
"In ancient times, in the Daru forest, an event occurred involving a group of Brahmins. Listen to that story as I have heard it. O best of sages! In the forest known as Daru — a most excellent forest — there lived devoted Brahmins who were always engaged in meditating on Lord Shiva."

Verses 7–8:
"O great sages! Those Brahmins, devoted to Shiva, worshipped Him at all times — past, present, and future — and praised Him with various hymns. Absorbed in the meditation of Shiva, these noble Brahmins had once gone into the forest to collect sacrificial firewood (samidha)."

Verses 9–10:
"Meanwhile, to test them, Lord Shankara Himself — the blue-throated (Neelalohita), appeared there in a fierce and unusual form. Naked (digambara), adorned with sacred ash as His ornament, and radiating immense brilliance, Lord Shiva held a blazing, radiant linga in His hand and began performing a wondrous divine play (leela)."

So first of all, it's clear from lines 4-8 that all those Rishis were worshipers of Lord Shiva

So here in shloka 9-10 it's clearly said that lord Shiva came to test those Rishis in Digambar roop. This Digambar roop and Tejomay Shivling
I will explain in upcoming slides



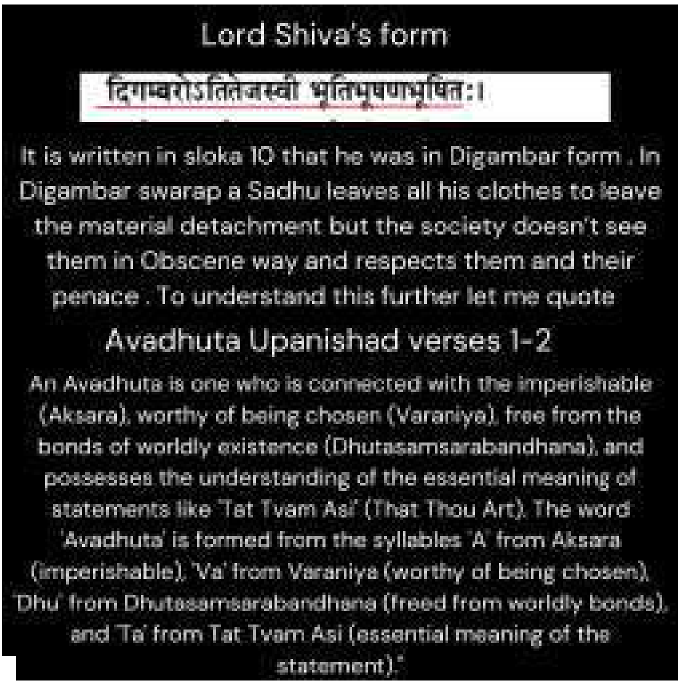
Lord Shiva's form

दिगम्बरोऽतितेजस्वी भूतिभूषणभूषितः ।

It is written in sloka 10 that he was in Digambar form. In Digambar swarap a Sadhu leaves all his clothes to leave the material detachment but the society doesn't see them in Obscene way and respects them and their penace. To understand this further let me quote

Avadhuta Upanishad verses 1-2

An Avadhuta is one who is connected with the imperishable (Aksara), worthy of being chosen (Varaniya), free from the bonds of worldly existence (Dhutasamsarabandhana), and possesses the understanding of the essential meaning of statements like 'Tat Tvam Asi' (That Thou Art). The word 'Avadhuta' is formed from the syllables 'A' from Aksara (imperishable), 'Va' from Varaniya (worthy of being chosen), 'Dhu' from Dhutasamsarabandhana (freed from worldly bonds), and 'Ta' from Tat Tvam Asi (essential meaning of the statement)."



What was lord Shiva holding in his hand

इसी बीच उन लोगोंकी परीक्षा लेनेहेतु साक्षात् नीललोहित [भगवान्] शंकर विकट रूप धारणकर वहाँ आये। वे दिगम्बर, भस्मरूप भूषणसे विभूषित तथा महातेजस्वी भगवान् शंकर हाथमें तेजोमय लिंगको धारणकर विचित्र लीला करने लगे ॥ ९-१०॥

"Meanwhile, to test those people, the Supreme Lord Shiva Himself—manifesting as Nīlalohita—appeared there in a fierce form. He was sky-clad (digambara), adorned with ashes as ornaments, and was immensely radiant. Holding a blazing, luminous liṅga in His hand, Lord Shiva began to perform a wondrous and extraordinary play.

Brahmanda Purana 2.27
10-12. Then the lord came to that forest in order to confer grace on them. His limbs were grey due to the appli-cation of Bhasman (ashes). He was naked. He had hideous features. His hairs were dishevelled and ugly. His teeth were terrific. His hands eagerly got hold of a firebrand.

Linga Purana 1.31
28-32. The lord had vulgar traits. He was stark nude. He had smeared his limbs with ashes. His hands were engaged in whirling a firebrand. His eyes were red and tawny. Sometimes he laughed biosteriously, sometimes he sang surprisingly.
Thus its clear from this that lord Shiva was holding a Fire Brand and not his penis as per Shiva, Brahmanda and Linga Purana

Linga Purana 1.31

he laughed biosteriously, sometimes he sang surprisingly. Sometimes he danced amorously and sometimes he cried epeatedly. He roamed round the hermitages and begged for alms. He assumed forms of his choice by his mäyä.

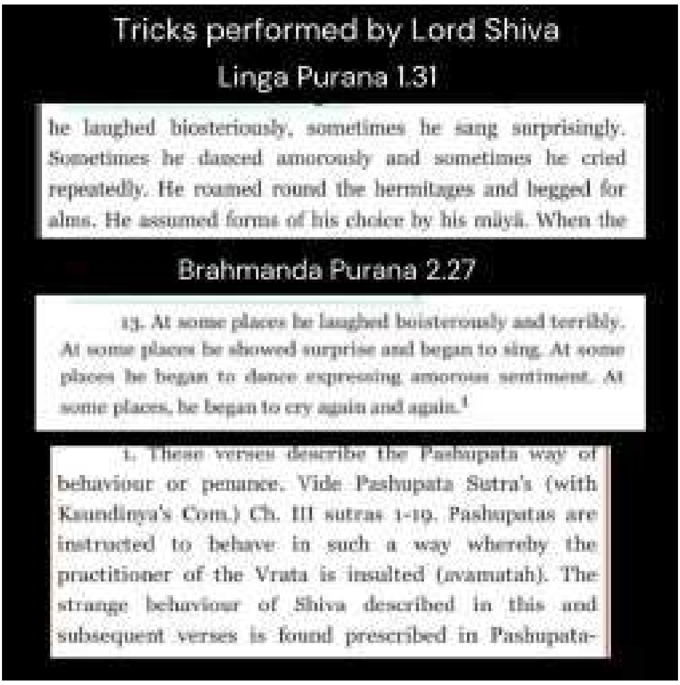
Pashupatas are instructed to behave in such a way whereby the practitioner of the Vrata is insulted (avamatah). The strange behaviour of Shiva described in this and subsequent verses is found prescribed in Pashupata-



Curse of Rishis explained

Brahmanda Purana 2.27

14. Deluded and enchanted by him the wives of the sages immediately prevented him from dancing. After coming to the hermitage as a guest, he began to beg again and again.
15. He created a wife unto himself, similar in form and bedecked in ornaments. He roared and bellowed like a bull and brayed like a donkey.
16. He began to befool them making all the embodied ones laugh. Thereupon, the sages became angry. They were over-whelmed by fury.
17. Fascinated by his deluding power (Māyā) they approached him in order to curse him. "Since you sing (bray) like a (donkey) you will become a donkey.

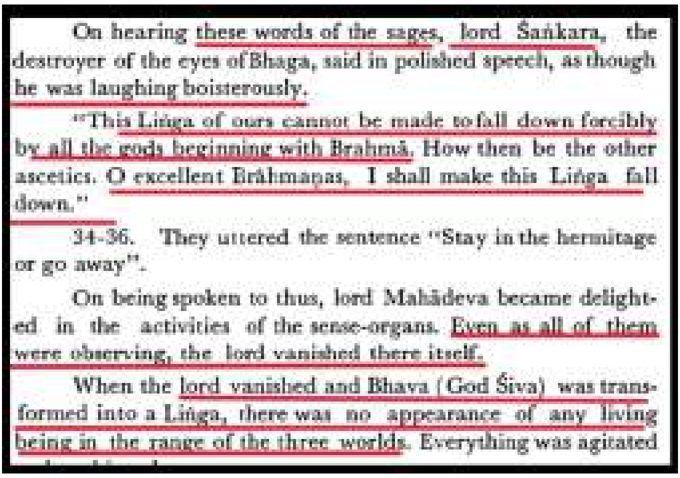
On hearing these words of the sages, Lord Sankara, the destroyer of the eyes of Bhaga, said in polished speech, as though he was laughing boisterously.
"This Linga of ours cannot be made to fall down forcibly by all the gods beginning with Brahmā. How then be the other ascetics. O excellent Brahmaṇas, I shall make this Linga fall down."

34-36. They uttered the sentence "Stay in the hermitage or go away".
On being spoken to thus, lord Mahādeva became delight-ed in the activities of the sense-organs. Even as all of them were observing, the lord vanished there itself.
When the lord vanished and Bhava (God Śiva) was trans-formed into a Linga, there was no appearance of any living being in the range of the three worlds. Everything was agitated



On hearing these words of the sages, lord Śaṅkara, the destroyer of the eyes of Bhaga, said in polished speech, as though he was laughing boisterously.

"This Liṅga of ours cannot be made to fall down forcibly by all the gods beginning with Brahmā. How then be the other ascetics. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, I shall make this Liṅga fall down."

34-36. They uttered the sentence "Stay in the hermitage or go away".

On being spoken to thus, lord Mahādeva became delight-ed in the activities of the sense-organs. Even as all of them were observing, the lord vanished there itself.

When the lord vanished and Bhava (God Śiva) was trans-formed into a Liṅga, there was no appearance of any living being in the range of the three worlds. Everything was agitated

Mata Parvati's Yoni roop:-
Sometimes I really think that how stupid these translators like JL Shastri are, in Shiv Puran 4.12, in verse 3 he clearly mentions Arrow form of Devi Parvati

3. Parvati, the beloved of Śiva, is heard in the world in the form of an arrow. O Sūta, what is the reason for this? Please satisfy our curiosity in this respect by giving the account you have heard.

Now see how this stupid translated verse 32 and 37 as viginal passage

Now this clear hypocrisy can be seen in these verses (i.e 32&37)
In Verse 32 yoni roopa is refers to Arrow बाणरूपा श्रुता लोके पार्वती (verse 3)The term Bana(Arrow) is related to the number five as devi holds 5 arrows as one arrorw symbolizing Panchattvamika Prakriti.

Maheshwara (Shiva) said —
“O Devas! O Rishis! Please listen to my words with reverence. If this Shivalinga, which is established in the Yoni-pitha form (i.e., as the cosmic womb, the source of all creation), is borne by the great goddess Mahashakti who gives birth to the entire universe, only then will you all attain happiness.
Other than Parvati, no one else is capable of bearing this form of mine.
When this form of mine is borne by that supreme Shakti, it will soon bring peace to my formless (Nishkala) aspect.”

Prakrti, made

Prakṛti, made up of the fivefold elements (pañcatattvātmakā), is the yoni, the support for the brilliant energy of the Absolute (brahma teja kā ādhāra), this linga of light. Therefore, to say that Pārvatī took the shape of a yoni to hold the linga means that, becoming prakṛti — in the form of the five elements — she supported the Universe. Could a worldly yoni, a urinary organ, a scrap of leather, support the jyotirlinga, made of fire, that burns everything?[76]

SHIVA PURAN 12.4

In the world it is heard that Parvati, the beloved of Śiva, is of the form of an arrow (bāṇa)."

The meaning of the form of the yoni is the same as that of the form of the arrow. The word 'arrow' (bāṇa) is indicative of the number five: it is applied with regards to Kāma, by reason of his five arrows; when addressed towards Śiva, it regards his five faces and when to Parvati, the perspective is her nature comprised of by the five elements. Just as a mass of electricity (vidyut puñja) pervades the five elements, yet is more predominant within water and in mountain ranges, similarly did Parvati become arrow-shaped, that is of the form of a mountain range, and into her the effulgent linga (tejomaya linga) entered. If the mass of electricity were to fall into her yoni that is, into earth or water it would become stable; otherwise, it would reduce trees, men and everything else to ashes. It was said by Śiva: Except Pārvatī, no one is able to sustain the linga; my linga, supported by her, quickly find peace.

पार्वती कहती हैं- "हे भृङ्गी! तुम मौन धारण करके बैठो, अथवा यहां से चले जाओ। तुम यह नहीं जानते कि क्या कहना चाहिये अथवा क्या नहीं कहना चाहिये। तुम पिशाचों जैसा क्या बोल रहे हो? किस तपस्या बल से शिव को लाकर पाया? मैं कौन, ये शिव कौन? तुमने भेदबुद्धि से मेरा तत्व क्या जाना? मुझे बताओ, तुम किसके साथ युक्त हुये हो? क्यों अनेक वाक्य बोलते हो? मैं तुमको शापित करूंगी। देखूं कि तुम्हारे शिव क्या करते हैं?" इस प्रकार देवी ने भृंगी के प्रति कुपित होकर उसका तिरस्कार करते हुये शाप प्रदान किया। "हे मन्द! हे शंकरप्रिय भृंगी ! तुम मांसरहित हो जाओ।" शंकरप्रिया पार्वती ने तत्काल यह कहकर कोपपूर्वक तत्काल शंकर के सभी आभूषणों को ले लिया। तनुगात्री शिवा ने शिव के कण्ठ से वासुकि को उतार कर अपने हाथों में लिया। इस प्रकार शिव के अनेक भुजंग (सर्प) भूषणों को शिवदेह से उतारा। उनकी चन्द्रकला, उत्तम गजचर्म, कम्बल तथा अश्वतर नामक नागों के कर्णकुण्डल उन महादेवी ने छलोक्ति द्वारा हास्यपूर्वक ले लिया। भगवान् शिव ने जो कौपीन धारण कर रक्खी थी, उसे भी देवी ने हास्यपूर्वक हर लिया। तब प्रमथगण तथा सभी सखीगण लज्जा से वहां से हट गये। महातपा भृंगी, चण्ड, मुण्ड, महालोमा, महोदर तथा अन्य बहुत से गण यह देखकर दुःखी हो गये। उनकी यह अवस्था देखकर महेश लज्जित हो गये तथा कुपित होकर पार्वती से कहा ।।११२-१२३।।

Pārvatī said:
*"O Bhṛṅgī! Either sit here in silence or leave this place at once. You do not know what should be spoken and what should not. Why are you uttering words like those of a piśāca (ghoul)? By what power of penance have you been able to bring Śiva here?

Who am I and who is this Śiva? With such a mind that discriminates between us, what essence of mine have you understood? Tell me—on whose side are you? Why do you speak so many words? I will curse you. Let me see what your Śiva can do for you then!"*

Thus, the Goddess, angry at Bhṛṅgī, reproached him and pronounced a curse:
"O slow-witted one! O Bhṛṅgī, beloved of Śaṅkara! Be without flesh!"

Having spoken thus in wrath, Pārvatī, beloved of Śaṅkara, at once seized all the ornaments of Śiva. The slender-bodied Devī removed Vāsuki from around the neck of Śiva with her own hands. In this way, that great goddess stripped from his body the many serpent ornaments of Śiva.

She even took away his crescent moon, his fine elephant-hide garment, his blanket, and the ear-ornaments made from the serpents named Aśvatara, all with pretended jest and laughter.

Finally, the goddess even playfully snatched away the loincloth that the Lord had been wearing. At this, the hosts of Pramathas and all her own attendants, out of shame, withdrew from there.

Beholding this condition, Bhṛṅgī, Caṇḍa, Muṇḍa, Mahāloma, Mahodara and many other gaṇas were distressed. Seeing them thus, the great Lord Maheśa became embarrassed, and with anger he spoke to Pārvatī.*

Skanda Purana Maheshwara Khanda book 1 Kedarakhanda section 1 chapter 34 slokas 11-129 hindi translation by Choukhamba publications nowhere its written that Maheshwar came to entice the wives of the Rishis

लोमश कहते हैं- देवदेव जगत्पति रुद्रदेव अब वीरभद्र तथा अन्य प्रमथगण, इन्द्रादि देवता तथा ऋषियों के साथ कैलास पर्वत पर निवास करने लगे। ब्रह्मा उनके स्तुतिगायक थे। भृत्यवत् विष्णु स्थित रहते थे तथा इन्द्रादि देवता उनकी सेवा करते थे। उनका छत्र चन्द्र वहन करते। वायु चामर झलते, अग्नि जातवेदा उत्तम अन्न प्रस्तुत करते तथा गन्धर्वगण उनके गायक तथा स्तावक थे (स्तावक प्रशंसक)। विद्याधर तथा अप्सरायें भगवान् महादेव के समक्ष नृत्यादि किया करते। इस प्रकार प्रियतमा गिरिजा तथा प्रतापी पुत्र गणेश एवं स्कन्द कुमार के साथ वहां निःशङ्क भाव से भगवान् त्रिपुरारी शंकर विराजमान थे। वे इस प्रकार राज्य सुखानुभव करने लगे।।१-६ ।।

जिन्होंने देवताओं के शत्रु महादैत्य दुर्वृत्त अन्धकासुर का भेदन शूल से किया था तथा उसे चिरकाल हेतु उसी पर लटका रखा था, जिन्होंने गजासुर का वध करके उसके चर्म को स्वयं धारण किया था, जिनके प्रभाव से त्रिपुर दग्ध हो सका था, जो प्रतिपाल्य स्थानीय (सबके पालनकर्त्ता) विष्णु के साथ सर्वाङ्ग सुन्दर रूप से विराजमान रहते हैं, उनको देखने दिव्यदर्शन भगवान् नारद चन्द्रवत् पाण्डुर आभा वाले कैलास नामक उस महान् पर्वत पर पहुंचे। वहां पहुंच कर उन्होंने परम सुधासेवित परम अद्भुद् कर्पूरवत् गौरवर्ण सुमहाबल महादेव को देखा। महादेव का दर्शन पाकर वे विस्मयापन्न हो गये। इस प्रकार नारद ने गन्धमादन में प्रवेश किया।। ७-१०।।

हे विप्रगण! वहां महात्मा नारद ने देखा कि वहां सब कुछ दो भागों में विभाजित था। यह विस्मय देखते तथा पर्वत की शोभा देखते नारद ने तत्काल शिवदर्शनार्थ प्रस्थान किया। जैसे ही वे (शिव निवास के) द्वार पर पहुंचे, वहां भी उन्होंने एक विस्मय देखा। वहां विश्वकर्मा द्वारा निर्मित दो कृत्रिम द्वारपाल खड़े थे। नारद ने मोहित होकर उनसे कहा- "मैं शिवदर्शनेच्छा से अन्दर जाना चाहता हूं। अतः मुझे जाने की अनुमति प्रदान करो।" जब नारद को अपने प्रश्न का कोई उत्तर नहीं मिला, तब वे वास्तविकता जान कर विस्मित हो गये। उन्होंने ज्ञाननेत्र से सब जान लिया तथा मौनी हो गये। उन्होंने समझा था कि ये द्वारपाल कृत्रिम हैं। अब वे स्वयं द्वार से भीतर गये। वहां जाकर देखते हैं कि वहां ऐसी अनेक कृत्रिम मूर्त्ति स्थित हैं। अन्दर उन सबने भगवान् नारद को प्रीतिपूर्वक प्रणाम भी किया। इससे नारद मुदित हो गये।। २२-२८।।

तदनन्तर नारद देखते हैं कि व्यक्त मूर्ति त्र्यम्बक गिरिजा के साथ वहां स्थित हैं। साध्वी देवी गौरी उन प्रभु शंकर के आधे आसन पर बैठी हैं। वे पर्वतराज पुत्री हैं तथा तीनों लोकों में विराजित हैं। वे चारुलोचना, तनुगात्री तथा प्रसन्न मुख वाली हैं। उन्होंने ही महादेव को रूपवान् तथा उपमेय किया है। महादेव निर्विकार हैं। तथापि इन गिरिजा देवी ने उनको विकारों से विकलीकृत किया है। नारद देखते हैं कि वे शिव की अर्द्धाङ्ग संगिनी होकर स्थित हैं। तदनन्तर नारद ने देखा कि त्रिभुवनेश्वर शम्भु भी विराजित हैं। उनकी देहप्रभा शुद्ध स्वर्णवत् है। सुर-असुर उनकी सेवा में लगे हैं। सर्पराज शंख उनके चरणकमल की सेवा कर रहे हैं। धृतराष्ट्र, तक्षक, महापद्म, अनन्त तथा अन्य महानागगण उनकी सेवा में सदैव लगे रहते हैं। महाप्रभायुक्त वासुकि उनके कण्ठ में हाररूपेण शोभायमान हैं।। २९-३५।।

नारद देखते हैं कि शिव सीमन्तिनी सती सौभाग्य तथा लावण्यरूपी महाविभूति द्वारा परम शोभा से शोभित हैं। इस तीनों लोकों के मूलभूत, परम पावन, इन देव दम्पति को देखकर भगवान् के प्रिय नारद ने उनकी प्रेमपूर्वक वन्दना किया। ये दम्पति अभिन्न होकर भी (बाह्य दृष्टि से) भिन्नतया प्रतीत होते हैं। ये निर्गुण होकर भी सगुण हैं। साकार होकर भी निराकार हैं। निरातङ्क होकर भी सुखविधायक भी हैं। नारद उनको बारम्बार प्रणाम करते तथा पुनः उठकर उन जगदीश्वर तथा जगदीश्वरी की स्तुति करते ! ।।४५-५२।।

तब महादेव ने उनसे प्रश्न किया – "आप प्रसन्न तो हैं? हे ब्रह्मन् ! कहिये आपका क्या काम करूं?" शंभु का वचन सुनकर नारद ने कहा- "हे विभो! आपके दर्शन से ही मैं सन्तुष्ट हो गया। हे शम्भु ! इसी से मुझे निःसंदिग्ध रूप से सब कुछ मिल गया। मैं क्रीड़ार्थ ही इस पर्वतप्रवर कैलास आया था। हे प्रभो, भगवान्! आप सदा मनुष्यों के हृदय में अवस्थित रहते हैं तथापि आपका साक्षात्कार प्रत्येक को अवश्य करना चाहिये।।५६-५९।।

गिरिजा कहती हैं- "हे मुनिवर ! आपने कैसी क्रीड़ा करनी चाही है, आप किस क्रीड़ा के पक्षपाती हैं? उसे शीघ्र मुझसे कहें।" यह सुनकर नारद ने हास्यपूर्वक कहा- हे महादेवी! जगत् में नाना द्यूतक्रीड़ा परिलक्षित होती है। दो व्यक्ति द्यूत में प्रवृत्त होकर रमण से भी अधिक महासुख प्राप्त करते हैं।" नारद की यह उक्ति सुनकर देवी विरत हो गयीं तथा ऋषि नारद के प्रति अत्यन्त क्रोध से कहने लगीं- "आपने किस प्रकार द्यूत को ही प्रसिद्ध क्रीड़ा कहा? मनस्वी लोग इसे त्याज्य कहते हैं। हे मुनिवर! आप तो ब्रह्मा के पुत्र हैं। इस त्रिभुवन में आप सर्वत्र विचरण करते हैं। आपने अपने उत्तम वाक्यविन्यास द्वारा मनीषीगण तक को शिक्षित किया है। आपकी अपेक्षा प्रधान मनस्वी और कौन है? देवी द्वारा यह कहे जाने पर देवदर्शन नारद ने शिव के ही समीप गिरिजा से कहा- ।।६०-६४।।

नारद कहते हैं- देवी द्वारा यह कहे जाने पर देवदर्शन नारद ने शिव के ही समीप गिरिजा से कहा- "मैं तपस्वी तथा शिवकिंकर हूं। द्यूत क्या है? मैं नहीं जानता, उसका कभी आश्रय भी नहीं लिया। हे गिरिराजकन्ये! हे योगीगण हेतु परम पावन ! आप मुझसे इस सम्बन्ध में क्यों पूछ रही हैं?" गिरिजा ने नारद का यह कथन सुनकर उनसे कहा- "हे बटु ! आप सब जानते हैं। मैं आपके समक्ष महेश के साथ यह क्रीड़ा करूंगी। आप यहां रह कर उसे देखें।" यह कहकर भुवनों में एकमात्र सुन्दरी गिरिराज कन्या ने अक्ष लिया तथा महादेव शिव के साथ वे क्रीड़ारत हो गयीं। जब वे देवदम्पति क्रीड़ारत थे, तब नारद उस क्रीड़ा को देख रहे थे। विस्मय के कारण उनका अन्तर्मन उत्फुल्ल हो गया। मनस्वी नारद ने इस क्रीड़ाव्यापार का अवलोकन किया तथा सन्तुष्ट हो गये। सती तब सखियों के साथ द्यूत क्रीड़ा में संलग्न हो गईं तथा छलपूर्वक द्यूत क्रीड़ा करने लगीं। तदनन्तर शिव भी विपुल छल के साथ द्यूतक्रीड़ारत हो गये। उन्होंने भवानी को पराजित कर दिया।।६५-७० ।।

वे दोनों ही अक्षविद्या के परम पण्डित थे। अतः यह क्रीड़ा अत्यन्त दक्षभाव से चलने लगी। भवानी ने अनेक आभूषण जीत लिये। अब गौरी ने शंकर से हंसते हुये कहा- "हे शंकर! आपको मैंने क्रीड़ा में परास्त किया। अब जो बाजी तय थी, वह मुझे दीजिये।" तब महेश ने हंसकर कहा- "हे साध्वी! तत्वतः विचार करके देखो! मैं तुमसे हारा नहीं हूं। हे साध्वी! इस त्रिभुवन के सभी प्राणियों से मैं अविजित हूं। हे तन्वी! ऐसा वाक्य न बोलो। पुनः द्यूत क्रीड़ा में प्रवृत्त हो जाओ। देखना! मैं तुमको पराजित कर दूंगा।" अम्बिका अपने पति शंकर से कहने लगीं- "हे देव! मैंने आपको क्रीड़ा में पराजित किया है। इसमें विस्मित होने वाला कुछ भी नहीं है।" यह कहकर वरानना गौरी ने शंकर की बांह पकड़ कर पुनः कहा- "हे शंकर! आप नहीं जानते। आपको मैंने जीत लिया। इसमें संदेह नहीं है।" तदनन्तर देवी ने मधुर हास्य के साथ शंकर की ओर देखते हुये मधुर वाणी में यह व्यंग्य वाक्य कहा- "हे सर्वमंगल समूह का भी मंगल करने वाले ! कामरिपु ! आपने वाक्य से अनुमोदन करके जो बाजी लगाई थी, वह मुझे अर्पित करें।। ७८-८३।।

पार्वती कहती हैं- हे भृङ्गी! तुमने पक्षपात के कारण मेरे प्रति अयुक्त बातों को कहा है। हे मन्दबुद्धि ! तुम शिवप्रिय, भेदबुद्धिधारी हो। हे मूढ़! मैं शिवात्मिका हूं। शिव भी मुझमें नित्य स्थित हैं। तुमने किस प्रकार से अपने वाक्यबल द्वारा शिव-शिवा का भेद व्यक्त किया?" पार्वती का यह शुभ वाक्य भृङ्गी ने सुना तथा शिव के पास ही रहते पार्वती से कहने लगे- "पिता दक्ष के यज्ञ में आपने शिवनिन्दा सुनी थी। उस अप्रिय विषय को सुनकर आपने प्राणत्याग कर दिया था! हे तन्वङ्गी! अब आपने क्या किया? भ्रम के कारण आपने शिवनिन्दा को नहीं समझा? हे रवर्णिनी! आपने किस प्रकार पर्वतश्रेष्ठ के यहां जन्म लिया था? हे सुमध्यमे !

पार्वती कहती हैं- "हे भृङ्गी! तुम मौन धारण करके बैठो, अथवा यहां से चले जाओ। तुम यह नहीं जानते कि क्या कहना चाहिये अथवा क्या नहीं कहना चाहिये। तुम पिशाचों जैसा क्या बोल रहे हो? किस तपस्या बल से शिव को लाकर पाया? मैं कौन, ये शिव कौन? तुमने भेदबुद्धि से मेरा तत्व क्या जाना ? मुझे बताओ, तुम किसके साथ युक्त हुये हो? क्यों अनेक वाक्य बोलते हो? मैं तुमको शापित करूंगी। देखूं कि तुम्हारे शिव क्या करते हैं?" इस प्रकार देवी ने भृंगी के प्रति कुपित होकर उसका तिरस्कार करते हुये शाप प्रदान किया। "हे मन्द ! हे शंकरप्रिय भृंगी ! तुम मांसरहित हो जाओ।" शंकरप्रिया पार्वती ने तत्काल यह कहकर कोपपूर्वक तत्काल शंकर के सभी आभूषणों को ले लिया। तनुगात्री शिवा ने शिव के कण्ठ से वासुकि को उतार कर अपने हाथों में लिया। इस प्रकार शिव के अनेक भुजंग (सर्प) भूषणों को शिवदेह से उतारा। उनकी चन्द्रकला, उत्तम गजचर्म, कम्बल तथा अश्वतर नामक नागों के कर्णकुण्डल उन महादेवी ने छलोक्ति द्वारा हास्यपूर्वक ले लिया। भगवान् शिव ने जो कौपीन धारण कर रक्खी थी, उसे भी देवी ने हास्यपूर्वक हर लिया। तब प्रमथगण तथा सभी सखीगण लज्जा से वहां से हट गये। महातपा भृंगी, चण्ड, मुण्ड, महालोमा, महोदर तथा अन्य बहुत से गण यह देखकर दुःखी हो गये। उनकी यह अवस्था देखकर महेश लज्जित हो गये तथा कुपित होकर पार्वती से कहा।।११२-१२३।।

Sage Lomaśa narrates: Lord Rudra, the god of gods and master of the universe, now resides on Mount Kailāsa along with Vīrabhadra and other attendants (Pramathas), the gods led by Indra, and the sages. Brahmā sings his praises, Viṣṇu stands by him like a servant, and the gods serve him with devotion. The moon bears his royal umbrella, the wind fans him with a yak-tail whisk, Agni (fire) offers divine food, and the Gandharvas sing and praise him. The Vidyādharas and Apsarās dance before him. Thus, Lord Tripurāri Śiva dwells there fearlessly with his beloved Pārvatī and his mighty sons Gaṇeśa and Skanda, enjoying the bliss of divine sovereignty.

This is the same Śiva who slew the great demon Andhakāsura with his trident and hung him upon it for eternity, who killed Gajāsura and wore his hide, who burned the triple cities (Tripura) with his power, and who sits in radiant form beside Viṣṇu, the protector of all beings. To behold him, the divine sage Nārada arrived at the glorious Mount Kailāsa, shining like the moon. There he saw the wondrous, camphor-white, immensely powerful Śiva, bathed in divine nectar. Overwhelmed with awe, Nārada entered the region of Gandhamādana.

He saw the mountain adorned with countless marvels—glowing with gold, filled with singing Vidyādharīs, and radiant with divine light. There stood many wish-fulfilling trees entwined with vines, under whose shade the sacred cows (Kāmadhenu) rested. The forest of Pārijāta was buzzing with bees, and swans played in the mountain lakes. Peacocks cried joyfully, birds sang in melodious fifth notes, elephants frolicked with their mates, and lions roared. Nandī and other Pramathas danced and played joyfully. The mountain was filled with divine trees and sandalwood groves.

There were Nāga trees, Bakula, Campā, Nāgakeśara, wild jambu, golden ketaka, Kalhāra, Karavīra, Kumuda, Mandāra, Badarī, Krāmuka, Pāṭala, and hundreds more that delighted Lord Śiva. The groves were rich with trees and vines. A wondrous stream of the Ganges flowed down from the sky onto the mountain peak. Sage Nārada saw this sacred river split into two streams.

O sages! Nārada observed that everything there was divided into two parts. Amazed by this and the mountain's beauty, he proceeded toward Śiva's abode. At the entrance, he saw two artificial gatekeepers crafted by Viśvakarmā. Enchanted, he asked them for permission to enter and see Śiva. Receiving no reply, he realized they were not real and entered on his own. Inside, he saw many artificial figures who greeted him with reverence, which pleased him greatly.

Then Nārada saw the manifest form of Lord Tryambaka seated with Goddess Girijā. The virtuous Goddess Gaurī sat on half of Śiva's seat. She is the daughter of the mountain king and revered across the three worlds. She has beautiful eyes, a slender form, and a radiant face. Though Śiva is beyond all attributes, she has adorned him with beauty and form. Nārada saw her as the inseparable half of Śiva. He then saw Lord Śiva himself, glowing like pure gold, served by gods and demons alike. Serpent kings like Śaṅkha served his lotus feet. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Takṣaka, Mahāpadma, Ananta, and other great serpents were always at his service. Vāsuki adorned his neck like a garland.

Kambala and Aśvatara shone like earrings. Many other serpents rested at the roots of his matted locks. Serpents like Takṣaka, Kulīraka, Śaṅkha, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Padma, Dambha, Sudanta, Karāla, and Bhīṣaṇa—each with various colors and venom—were part of Śiva's divine form. Some had one hood, others two, three, four, five, six, seven, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, eighteen, nineteen, forty, fifty, seventy, eighty, ninety, a hundred, a thousand, ten thousand, a hundred thousand, or countless hoods. Those with infinite hoods also adorned Śiva as ornaments. Nārada saw all this with wonder.

These serpents were wise, radiant, adorned with jewels, and served as Śiva's garlands and ornaments. Śiva's matted locks bore the crescent moon, and his forehead held the third eye. He had five faces and ten arms. His bracelets were emerald-colored, his chest was beautiful, his thighs broad, and his legs divine. Nārada saw his feet shining like the evening sky—auspicious, supreme, and destroyers of all sin and suffering. Śiva's feet were radiant, transcendent, graceful, and sources of joy and prosperity. Then Nārada beheld the supremely beautiful Goddess Gaurī.

He saw that Śiva was adorned with the divine beauty and fortune of Sati. These divine spouses, though one in essence, appeared distinct. Though beyond attributes, they manifested with form. Though formless, they appeared embodied. Though free from fear, they bestowed bliss. Nārada bowed to them repeatedly and praised them with devotion.

Nārada said: "O supreme divine couple! Though you are beyond form, you appear in partial form before my eyes. You are the seed of the entire universe. I bow to you. Now I understand this truth clearly. By your grace, I have attained this knowledge. There is no doubt." Pleased by his praise, Pārvatī and Śiva smiled.

Then Śiva asked: "Are you pleased? O Brāhmaṇa, tell me what I can do for you." Nārada replied: "O Lord! Your darśana alone has satisfied me. I have received everything. I came to this great mountain Kailāsa for divine play. O Lord! Though you dwell in the hearts of all beings, your direct vision is essential for everyone."

Pārvatī said: "O sage! What kind of play do you wish to see? What kind of game do you favor? Tell me quickly." Smiling, Nārada said: "O great Goddess! In this world, many kinds of dice games are seen. Two people playing dice often experience joy greater than even romantic pleasure." Hearing this, the Goddess became displeased and angrily said: "How can you call gambling a noble game? Wise people reject it. O sage! You are the son of Brahmā and travel throughout the three worlds. You have taught even the wisest with your eloquence. Who is greater than you?"

Hearing this, Nārada replied to Pārvatī in Śiva's presence: "I am an ascetic and servant of Śiva. What do I know of gambling? I have never engaged in it. O daughter of the mountain! O purifier of yogis! Why do you ask me about this?" Pārvatī replied: "O sage! You know everything. I will now play this game with Mahādeva before you. Stay and watch."

Saying this, the beautiful daughter of the mountain took the dice and began to play with Śiva. As the divine couple played, Nārada watched with wonder and joy. The wise sage observed their game and was delighted. Sati, along with her companions, played the dice game with trickery. Then Śiva also joined with great cunning and defeated Bhavānī.

Sage Nārada joined Lord Śiva in playful mockery after Goddess Pārvatī lost in a game of dice. Seeing this, Pārvatī became extremely angry and threatened Nārada with the gesture of "Ardhachandra" — a symbolic dismissal made by placing the palm at the neck. Her beautiful crown trembled with rage, and her lovely face, now flushed with anger, appeared even more radiant. Śiva, enchanted by her fiery xpression, was inspired to continue the game.

Pārvatī then said to Śiva, "I have lost the game. Now place a wager, O Śambhu! What will you bet?" Śiva, laughing, replied, "O Bhavānī! I wager my great ornaments — this crescent moon, the mighty serpent necklace (Vāsuki), and the serpent earrings (Kambala and Aśvatara). Win, and they are yours." Thus, the divine couple resumed their dice game.

Both were masters of the game, and the play became highly skillful. Pārvatī won many ornaments and said with a smile, "O Śaṅkara! I have defeated you. Now give me what you wagered." Śiva laughed and replied, "O virtuous one! Think carefully. I have not truly lost. I am undefeated by all beings in the three worlds. Do not speak such words. Let us play again, and I shall defeat you."

Pārvatī insisted, "O Lord! I have won. There is no doubt." She held Śiva's arm and said sweetly, "You don't realize it, but I have truly defeated you." Then, with gentle laughter and playful sarcasm, she said, "O destroyer of desire! You agreed to the wager. Now give me what you promised."

Śiva replied, "O wide-eyed one! I am invincible. Your prideful words deserve reflection." Pārvatī responded, "O Mahādeva! It is true you are unconquerable, but it is also true that I alone have defeated you in this pure game. I am determined in this matter."

As the couple debated, Sage Nārada laughed and said, "O Goddess! Hear my words, which bring welfare to the world. Lord Śiva is revered even by the most fortunate. Why do you falsely claim to have defeated him? He is the supreme teacher of the gods, beyond form and attributes, the embodiment of divine light. He is the soul of the universe and the benefactor of all worlds. How can you claim victory over him? O beautiful one! Due to your feminine nature, you have not truly understood him."

Hearing this, Pārvatī became furious and said, "O son of Brahmā! Though I respect you, do not speak out of turn. Your words have truly frightened me. Be silent, O sage! You praise Śiva's greatness, but he exists only by my grace."

Nārada, hearing these harsh words, chose silence. Then Bhṛṅgī, Śiva's attendant, began to speak.

Bhṛṅgī said, "O passionate one! Do not speak such words again. My Lord Śiva is invincible and beyond change. You are influenced by feminine nature and thus fail to understand the supreme deity. You once sent Kāma (the god of desire) to approach Śiva. Do you not remember how Śiva reduced him to ashes? Your father Dakṣa was punished by Śiva. Later, you yourself performed intense penance to attain him."

Angered by Bhṛṅgī's words, Pārvatī retorted, "You speak unjustly due to bias. You are dull-witted and partial to Śiva. I am the essence of Śiva, and he eternally resides in me. How dare you speak of a difference between us?"

Bhṛṅgī replied, "At Dakṣa's sacrifice, you heard Śiva being insulted and gave up your life. Now, in delusion, you speak against him again. You were born in the house of the mountain king and performed severe penance. But now I see your devotion to Śiva has waned. You are his beloved, and that is why I speak. There is none greater than Śiva in the three worlds. Serve him with devotion and hold no other thoughts."

Pārvatī responded, "Be silent or leave this place. You do not know what to say or what not to say. You speak like a demon. What penance did you perform to attain Śiva? Who are you, and who is Śiva? You speak many words, but I shall curse you. Let us see what your Śiva does then."

Enraged, the Goddess cursed Bhṛṅgī: "O fool! O devotee of Śiva! Become fleshless." Then, in anger, she took all of Śiva's ornaments. She removed Vāsuki from his neck and took many serpent ornaments from his body. She playfully took his crescent moon, the elephant skin, and the serpent earrings. She even took his loincloth with laughter.

Seeing this, the attendants and companions withdrew in shame. Bhṛṅgī, Caṇḍa, Muṇḍa, Mahāloma, Mahodara, and many others were saddened. Witnessing this, Lord Śiva felt ashamed and angrily addressed Pārvatī.

Allegations-

Shiva lusted after goddess Girija as per Skanda Purana 1.1.35.12-20, Skanda Purana Book 1 Mahesvara khanda, Section 1 Kedara khanḍa, chapter 35, verses 12-20 "After saying thus, the goddess Girija, the (cause) of all auspiciousness, became desirous of going to Mähesvara after assuming the form of a female Sahara huntress…She had to bend down slightly on account of the weight of the heavy breasts. Her smooth glossy tresses had grown abundantly. She was very slender and thin in her waist. The buttocks were large. Gaur's thighs were like the golden plantain stem…(From a distance) she saw Girija. The lady of beautiful face thus went along, served and accompanied by many friends and attendants. Through the loud humming sound of the bees, she made the three worlds reverberate.

Refutation-

Here is Skanda Purana 1.1.35.12-25 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications

The Skanda Purāṇa 1.1.35.12–20 does not portray Śiva as succumbing to lust, but as participating in a divine play (līlā) initiated and controlled entirely by Goddess Girijā. Disguised as a śabarī (tribal huntress), Girijā approaches Śiva in order to rouse him from meditation and test his awareness. The moment he reaches for her, she vanishes — showing that she governs the encounter and that his pursuit is part of her deliberate sport. In the very same episode, Girijā asserts her eternal unity with Śiva and rebukes him for abandoning her, proving that this scene expresses theological truths about Śakti's supremacy and the inseparability of the divine couple, not an instance of lust.

लोमश कहते हैं- महादेव के वनगमन करने पर विरह से आतुर तन्वंगी गिरिजा गृह में तथा अन्य कहीं भी रम्य स्थल में, कहीं पर सुख नहीं पा रही थीं। शोभना सती तब केवल सर्वभाव से शिव की ही भावना करने लगी। सखी विजया ने शिवा को चिन्तामग्न देखकर कहा- "हे शोभने ! तुमने महान् तप से शिव को पाया था। तपस्वी शंकर के साथ तुमने व्यर्थ में द्यूत क्रीड़ा किया! हे निष्पाप! क्या तुमने सुना नहीं था कि द्यूत में नाना दोष विद्यमान रहते हैं? हे विचक्षणे! तुम हम लोगों के साथ शीघ्र शिव के पास जाकर क्षमा मांगो। जब तक वे अति दूर न चले जायें, उसके पहले ही वहां जाकर क्षमा याचना करो। हे देवी! यदि तुम शिव के पास जाकर क्षमा प्रार्थना शीघ्र नहीं करती, तब बाद में तुमको अत्यन्त दुःख होना अवश्यम्भावी है" ।। १-६ ।।गिरिजा ने विजया की बात सुनकर धीर चित्त से हंसते हुये उससे एक आश्चर्यमय परमार्थपूर्ण वाक्य कहा। गिरिजा ने कहा- "इन निर्लज्ज महादेव का वरण पूर्व काल में परम विभूति योग के साथ मैंने किया था। मैंने ही इनको जीता था। अब मेरा कोई कर्तव्य नहीं है। मुझसे भिन्न रह कर ये सदा विरूप होकर ही अवस्थित रहेंगे। मैंने ही देवदेव महेश को सुरूप किया था, अतः अब कुछ भी न कहना। मेरे साथ शिव का संयोग-वियोग कदापि नहीं होता। देव समन्वित होकर इस सचराचर विश्व को मैंने ही क्रीड़ार्थ रचा था। मैंने ही महेश्वर को साकार तथा निराकार किया है।।७-१०।। यह समस्त विश्व मैंने ही क्रीड़ार्थ सृष्ट किया है। इस जगदुत्पत्ति प्रभृति का यही हेतु है। हे विजये ! तुम मेरी क्रीड़ा को देखो।" सर्वमंगला गिरिजा देवी ने यह कहकर तत्काल एक शबरी का रूप धारण किया तथा महेश्वर की ओर गमनोद्यत हो गयीं। वे श्यामा, शिखरवदना, बिम्बोष्ठि, सुन्दर ग्रीवा वाली, कुच (स्तन) भार से अवनता, स्निग्धकेशी, क्षीण मध्या, पृथु कटितटा, हेमरम्भोरु, गौरी पल्लीयुक्ता, वर वलयधारी, वर्हिवतंसिता होकर विराजित थीं। उनके हाथ में मृणाल के समान धनुष तथा पीठ पर केतकी के समान तरकश था। ये सुवदना अनेक सखीगण से सेवित होकर तब प्रभु महेश का अवलोकन करने लगीं।। ११-१४।। उनके द्वारा कृत भृंगी नाद से तीनों लोक नादित हो गया। मानों गिरिजा ने अभी-अभी कामदेव को पुनर्जीवित कर दिया हो। जहां महेश्वर एकाकी समाधिस्थ थे, वहां राजहंस, द्विरेफ (भौरे) तथा मयूर आदि भी मदनान्वित हो उठे। भृंगीनाद से मोहित महादेव को तब देवी ने देखा। शबरी को देखकर महादेव प्रबुद्ध होकर उठे। महेश मदनान्वित होकर तत्काल समाधि से उठ कर गिरिजा के पास आये। तथा जैसे ही उनका हाथ पकड़ना चाहा, गिरिजा अन्तर्हित हो गयीं। जो देवदेव स्वयं भ्रान्ति का हरण करने वाले थे, वे यह दृश्य देखते ही तत्क्षण भ्रान्तचित्त हो घूमने लगे। कैसे उस सुन्दरी असितेक्षणा का साक्षात्कार मिले ! तब ज्ञानरूप शम्भु मदन शत्रु होकर भी मदन के वशीभूत हो गये। वे अब निर्मोही होकर भी मोहग्रस्त थे। तदनन्तर शिव ने पुनः उस शबरीरूपा गिरिजा को देखा तथा तत्कालोचित वाक्य कहने लगे।।१५-२२।। शिव कहते हैं- "हे तन्वङ्गी! मेरी बात सुनकर तदनुरूप कार्य करो। हे सुमध्यमे ! तुम कौन हो? तुम किसकी हो? किसलिए इस वन में आई हो? हे महाभागे ! यह सब मुझसे यथायथ कहो" ।। २३ ।। शिवा ने कहा- "मैं एक सर्वज्ञ, सकलार्थप्रद, स्वतन्त्र, निर्विकार, जगदीश, वरेण्य पति की खोज में घूम रही हूं।" वृषध्वज ने गिरिजा का कथन सुनकर प्रत्युत्तर दिया- "हे भद्रे! मैं ही तुम्हारा उपयुक्त पति हूं। हे भामिनि ! मेरे सिवाय अन्य पति है ही नहीं। हे वरारोहे! यह यथार्थतः विचार करो।" तब पार्वती ने रुद्र का वाक्य सुनकर कहा- "जो इच्छा हो, आप कहिये, तथापि हे महाभाग ! आप मेरे योग्य पति नहीं हैं। हे महाभाग! पक्षान्तरेण आप मेरे प्रार्थित पति हैं, ऐसी अन्यथा बात न कहें। आपका मंगल हो। परन्तु एक बात पूछती हूं। आप निर्गुण तथा परन्तप हैं। आपके लिए परम तपस्या करके जिस भामिनी ने आपका पतिरूप से वरण किया था, उसे आपने क्षण में त्याग दिया" ।।२४-२८।।

Lomaśa said:

When Mahadeva (Śiva) had gone away into the forest, the slender Parvati (Girijā), distressed with longing, found no appiness either in her home or in any other pleasant place.

Then, fair and virtuous Sati thought of nothing but Śiva with all her heart.

Seeing Śiva absorbed in worry, her companion Vijaya spoke:

"O beautiful one! You obtained Lord Śiva through great austerities. Yet, foolishly, you engaged in a game of dice with that ascetic! O sinless one! Have you not heard that gambling brings many faults and disasters?
O wise lady! Go quickly with us to Lord Śiva and beg his forgiveness. Before he goes too far away, approach him and plead. O Devi! If you do not quickly go to him and ask forgiveness, later you will surely face great suffering." (1–6)

Hearing Vijaya's words, Girijā became calm and, smiling, spoke to her in an extraordinary, deeply philosophical way:

"These shameless Mahādeva I had chosen long ago, through supreme union with spiritual glory. It was I who conquered him.
Now I have no duty remaining. Apart from me, he always exists in a distorted form.
It was I who gave form and beauty to the Lord of the gods. So, say no more!
For me there is neither union with Śiva nor separation from him.
United with the divine, I myself created this moving and unmoving universe for play.
I alone have made Maheśvara both with form and without form.
This entire cosmos I have created only for sport, and the creation of the world is solely for this reason.
O Vijaya! Now watch my play." (7–10)

Having spoken thus, the all-auspicious Goddess Girijā instantly assumed the form of a Śabarī (a tribal huntress) and set out towards Maheśvara.

She now appeared dark in complexion, with a face like a mountain peak, lips red as the bimba fruit, a beautiful neck, bosom bending her slender form with its weight, glossy hair, a thin waist, broad hips, golden bamboo-like thighs, and hands adorned with fair bangles. She was decorated with parrot-feather ear ornaments, carrying in her hands a bow like a lotus stalk, and on her back a quiver like a ketakī flower. Surrounded by many companions, this fair maiden then went to behold the Lord Maheśa. (11–14)

From the buzzing sound of the bees that followed her, all the three worlds resonated—as though Girijā had just revived Kāma (the god of love) himself.

Where Śiva sat alone in deep meditation, even the royal swans, the black bees, and the peacocks became intoxicated with desire because of that humming. Hearing the bee's drone, Maheśvara, slightly enchanted, opened his eyes, and thus the Goddess beheld him.

On seeing the Śabarī form, Mahādeva rose from his meditation. Love-struck, he immediately approached her, and as soon as he tried to grasp her hand, Girijā vanished on the spot.

He, the Lord of Lords, who removes delusion itself, on witnessing this, suddenly became bewildered and roamed about in distraction, wondering how to again behold that beautiful dark-eyed huntress!

Then Śiva, embodiment of knowledge and conqueror of Kāma, though ordinarily beyond passion, now fell under the sway of love. Soon again he saw that same huntress form of Girijā and spoke to her in words suited to the moment: (15–22)

"O slender-limbed one! Listen to me and act according to my words.
O fair-waisted maiden! Who are you? Whose are you? For what purpose have you come into this forest?
O most fortunate lady! Tell me everything truly." (23)

Śivā replied:

"I am one who is all-knowing, who grants every desire, independent, changeless, and sovereign. I wander in search of a worthy husband."

Hearing her words, the bull-bannered Lord (Vṛṣadhvaja) answered:

"O blessed one! I am indeed your suitable husband. There is no other husband besides me. O fair-bosomed lady! Think of this truth deeply."

Then Pārvatī, hearing the speech of Rudra, said:

"Speak whatever you desire. However, O great-souled one, you are not fit to be my husband.
And yet, in another sense, you are indeed the husband I seek—so do not speak otherwise.
Blessings be upon you! But I ask you this:
You are formless, beyond qualities, the destroyer of foes—
How is it that, after a maiden performed the greatest austerities and chose you as her husband, you abandoned her in a moment?" (24–28)

Allegations-

Vishwakarma

Vishwakarma was enamored of an Apsara named Ghirtachi who was going for pilgrimage. He invited her for having sex, but she refused. He even tried to rape her, but she resisted the rape just by warning him about the consequences.

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Brahma Khanda, 10.24-31 Sauti answered, 'O best of saints, once upon a time the celestial nymph Ghritachi, being extremely excited with passion put on a lovely dress and proceeded in the direction of Puskara for pilgrimage iin the mean time, Viswakarma cheefully arrived there from the solar region and suddenly observed the sportive damsel. As soon as he saw her, he was pierced with the darts of Cupid. Having lost all control over his will he demanded carnal intercourse from that nymph…" Tr. Rajendra Nath Sen

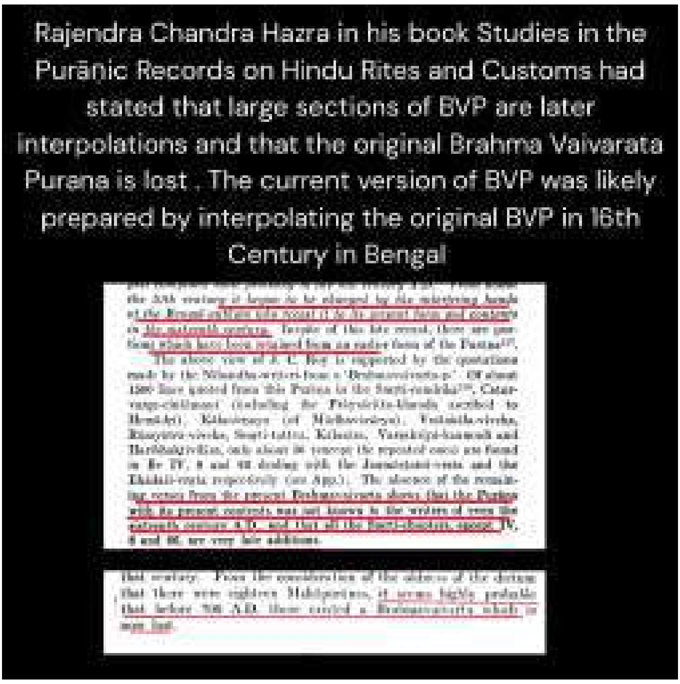
Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. क्रीड़ा करने का स्थल और महान् आरण्य मञ्चकों के नीचे का भाग-वृक्षों की छाया से युक्त स्थल-अन्तः प्राणियों का अवपर्णरु-दूर्वा का स्थान-कुशा जहाँ पर लगे हुये हों वह स्थल सर्पों की बाँबी जहाँ पर हो वह स्थान-वृक्षों के आरोपण करने की भूमि का स्थल और जो भूमि का स्थान किसी भी कार्य सम्पादन करने के लिये परिष्कृत किया गया हो – इन समस्त उपर्युक्त स्थलों का परित्याग मलादि के त्याग करने में कर देना चाहिए और सूर्य के ताप से वर्जित स्थान को भी त्याग देवे । गत्ते करके पुरीष (मल) और मूत्र को परिजित करना चाहिए ।।२२।। २३॥२४॥ दिन के समय में सर्वदा मल-मूत्र का त्याग उत्तर की ओर मुख करके करना चाहिए रात्रि के समय में पश्चिम दिशा की ओर मुख करने वाला होकर त्याग करे तथा सन्ध्या के समय में दक्षिणभिमुख होकर त्याग करै ।॥ २५।। मोनो होकर त्याग करे और निःश्वास ऐसा रखे जिमस गन्ध का सञ्चाराणा न होगे। मलादि का त्याग करके मिट्टी से उनको समाच्छाहित करके लोक फिर विचक्षण पुरुष को शुद्धि करनी चाहिए ॥ २६।। पहिले लोष्ठ शौच करके फिर जल से शोच अर्थात् शुद्धि करे और वह जल भी मृत्तिका से युक्त होना चाहिये । अब उसका प्रमाण बताता हूँ। उसका श्रवण करो ॥ २७।। लिङ्ग में एक वार मिट्टी लगाकर उसकी शुद्धि करे – वाम हस्त से चार वार मिट्टी से मले। दोनों हाथों को दो बार मिट्टी लगाकर मले। यह तो मूत्रोत्सर्ग करने का शौच होता है ।। २८ ।।

यदि मैथुन के पश्चात् मूत्रोत्सर्ग करे तो मूत्र की शुद्धि उक्त विधि से दुगुनी करनी चाहिये। मैथुन के अनन्तर शौच और मूत्र शौच चतुर्गुण हो जाता है ।।२६।। अब मलके त्याग में शुद्धि का विधान बताया जाता है-एक बार लिङ्ग को मिट्टी से मले। गुदा में तीन बार मृत्तिका लेपन कर उसकी शुद्धि करे- वायें हाथ से दशवार मिट्टी लगाकर मले दोनों हाथों को मिलाकर सातवार मृत्तिका लेपन कर शुद्धि करनी चाहिये। छटे से कद शुद्ध होता है। यह मलत्याग की शुद्धि विप्रों की और गृहाश्रमियों की

३५१७ अब शौच और उसका नियम मुझसे तुम सावधान होकर श्रवण करो- मृतशौच में शुचि भी विप्र व्यतिक्रम होजाने पर थशुचि हो जाता है ॥ ३६॥ सर्पों की बल्मीक की तथा चूहों के द्वारा खोदी हुई मृत्तिका को और जो जलके अन्दर में रहने वाली मिट्टी होती है उसको शौच से अवशिष्ट मिट्टी को और लेप से उत्पन्न मिट्टी को नहीं देना चाहिये ।। ३७ ।। अन्तः प्राण्यन-वपर्ण और विशेष करके हल से उत्खात मिट्टी को तथा कुशा के मूल से निकली हुई तथा दूभ की जड़ से उठी हुई मिट्टी को पीपल वृक्ष की मूल से उखड़ी हुई एवं शयन से उठी हुई मृत्तिका को भी नहीं लेना चाहिये ॥३८ ।। चौराहे की- गोष्टों की और गौओं के खुरों की शस्थों के स्थलों की खेतों की और उद्यानों की मृत्तिका का त्याग कर दना चाहिये ॥ ३६।। स्नान किया हुआ हो अथवा स्नान न किया हुआ हो विप्र शौच से शुद्ध हो जाता है। जो शौच से हीन है वह नित्य ही अशुचि रहा करता है और समस्त कर्मों के सम्पादन करने के अयोग्य होता है ।॥४०॥ इस प्रकार के शौच को करके जो उक्त विधि से बताया गया है उसे करके सुधी ब्राह्मण को अपने मुख का प्रक्षालन करना चाहिये ।॥४१॥ आदि में सोलह कुल्लों के द्वारा मुख की पहले शुद्धि करे फिर दन्त काष्ठ (दाँतुन) से दाँतों का भली भाँति परिमार्जन करना चाहिये ॥४२।।

The places to be avoided for the excretion of faeces and urine are as follows:
The grounds meant for sports and play, the great forest platforms and the area beneath them,
the place shaded by trees,
the spots where creatures dwell inside (burrows etc.),
the place covered with fallen leaves or overgrown with grass,
the places where kuśa grass grows, the ground where a serpent's anthill (termite mound) exists, the ground meant for planting trees, and the land that has been purified and prepared for any ritual or work—all these places must be avoided for the act of excretion.
One should also avoid a place that is shielded from sunlight.

After passing urine or stool, one must cover the excrement with soil (using a lump of earth). (Verses 22–24)

During the daytime, one should always relieve oneself facing north;
at night, one should face west;
and at twilight (dawn and dusk), one should face south.
(Verse 25)

One should excrete silently and hold the breath in such a way that the smell does not spread. After defecation, the waste must be covered with soil, and then a wise person should purify himself. (Verse 26)

First, one should clean with a lump of earth, and then purify with water; this water too should be mixed with clay. Now I shall tell you the exact rules for this; listen. (Verse 27)

For urination:
Apply soil once to the organ and cleanse it;
then, with the left hand, rub with soil four times.
Clean both hands two times with soil.
This is the prescribed cleansing after passing urine.
(Verse 28)

If urination occurs after sexual intercourse, then the cleansing must be done double the usual amount. After intercourse, both defecation and urination require four times the normal cleansing. (Verse 29)

Now the rule for purification after defecation is given:
Apply soil once to the organ;
apply soil three times around the anus for cleansing;
rub with the left hand ten times with soil;
and clean both hands together seven times with soil.
Purity is obtained from the sixth (application).
This is the rule of purification for Brahmins (vipras) and householders.
For widows, double the cleansing is prescribed. (Verses 30–31)

For ascetics (yatis), Vaishnavas, and celibate students (brahmacharins), the cleansing must be four times what is prescribed for householders. (Verse 32)

Until the upanayana (sacred thread ceremony) has been performed, a dvija (twice-born) is considered like a shudra, and the same applies to women; their cleansing is only for removing visible dirt. (Verse 33)

The kshatriyas and vaishyas have the same cleansing rules as the household Brahmins.
For Vaishnavas and sages, double that of these is prescribed. (Verse 34)

Anyone who truly wishes to be pure must neither do less nor more than these measures. If there is a transgression, one must perform expiation. (Verse 35)

Now, listen carefully to the rules of shaucha (purification). In the case of death-impurity (mritashaucha), even a pure Brahmin becomes impure. (Verse 36)

The following types of soil must not be used for cleansing:
soil from a snake's mound,
soil dug out by rats,
mud from inside water bodies, soil that has been left after previous cleansing, soil formed from plaster or smeared layers. (Verse 37)

Also, soil that comes from burrows of living creatures, soil dug up by a plough, soil from the roots of kusa grass, soil from the roots of doob grass, soil taken from the roots of a peepal tree, and soil taken from a bed or sleeping place must not be used. (Verse 38)

Soil from crossroads, cow pens,
from the ground where cows' hooves have churned,
from fields and gardens,
must all be avoided. (Verse 39)

Whether bathed or not, a Brahmin becomes pure by proper cleansing.
One who neglects cleansing remains perpetually impure and becomes unfit for all religious acts. (Verse 40)

Having completed the prescribed cleansing, the wise Brahmin should rinse his mouth. (Verse 41)

First, purify the mouth by rinsing sixteen times, and then lean the teeth thoroughly with a dantakaṣṭha (tooth- stick). (Verse 42)

Several Hindu Gods Lusting After Urja

Brahma Purana 110.13-15 "When the holy god Moon did not see his daughter Urja, he was upset. Where she may have gone? He thought to himself. The Soma came to know the facts. He knew that manes were after her, that they were sexually inclined to her and had accepted by the virtue of their penance. The moon was overcome with anger."

दधीचि मुनि ने जब देव अतिथिगण को देखा था तभी से वे अत्यन्त हर्षित थे। तदनन्तर उन्होंने देवगण से कुशल प्रश्न पूछा। देवताओं ने कुशल वार्ता कहने के उपरान्त ऋषि को पुनः पुनः प्रणिपात करके कहा- ।।१३-१४।। देवगण कहते हैं-

हे ऋषिगण! आपके समान मृत्युलोक के कल्पवृक्षरूप मुनि ने हम पर दयालु रहकर कृपा किया है, तब जगत् में हमारे लिये क्या दुर्लभ है? हे मुनिश्रेष्ठ! इस जगत् में तीर्थस्नान, भूतगण (प्राणियों) पर दया तथा आप जैसे महापुरुषों का दर्शन मिलना ही देहधारियों के लिये परम फल है। हे मुनिवर! आपने स्नेह पूर्वक पूछा था, तभी हम कहते हैं। सुनिये। हमने दैत्यों पर जय पाकर तथा प्रबल राक्षसों का वध करके यहां आगमन किया है।।१५-१७।।

When Sage Dadhīci saw the host of Devas (devas and other celestial guests), from that very moment he became exceedingly delighted.
Afterwards, he inquired about the well-being of the Devas.

After exchanging words of well-being, the Devas , bowing down to the sage again and again, spoke as follows: (Verses 13–14)

The Devas said:

“O revered sage! You are like the wish-fulfilling Kalpavṛkṣa among the sages of the mortal world. Since you have shown compassion and kindness towards us, what thing in this world can ever be unattainable for us?

O best among sages! In this world, for embodied beings, there are three supreme blessings:
bathing at holy places, showing mercy to all creatures,
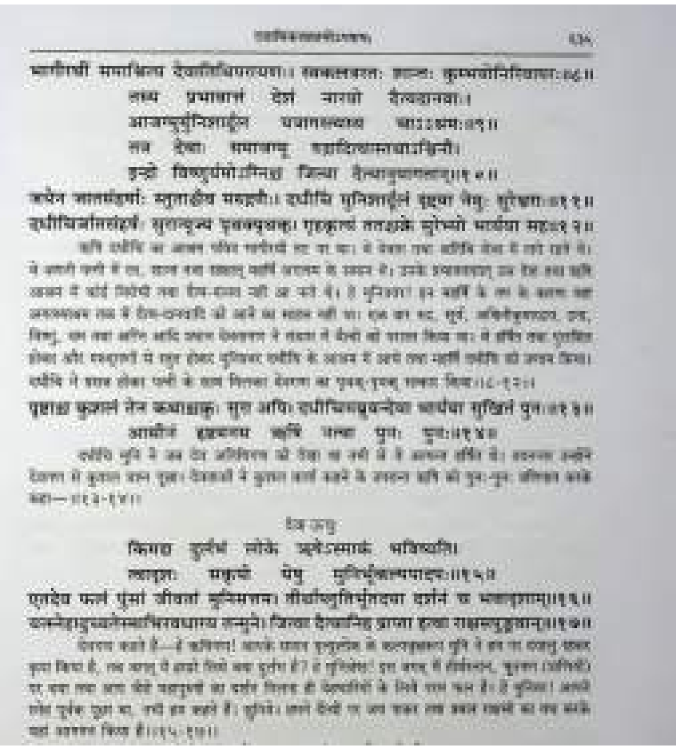
and beholding great souls such as yourself.

O noble sage! Out of affection, you have asked us, so we shall tell you:
Having gained victory over the demons (daityas) and having slain the mighty rākṣasas, we have now come here.” (Verses 15–17)



Allegations-

Ashwins lusted after the wife of old Rishi Chyavana named Sukanya. They tried to seduce her but all in vain so at last, they gave her an offer that they will rejuvenate her old husband and in return, she will have to marry one of them. After consulting with her husband she agreed. So Ashwins told Chyavan to enter the water so he entered the water. Ashwins were playing tricks here and they too entered the water and when three of them (two Ashwin brothers and Chyavana) came out of the water all of them had the same appearance. Rishi Chyvana was rejuvenated. Ashwins made the same appearance in order to disflower Sukanya.

This story of Rishi Chyavana been rejuvenated is also mentioned in Rig Veda, Nirukta, several Puranas, and Pancavimsa Brahmana.

Mahabharata 3.123.1-9 "Lomasa said, 'Once on a time, O king, those celestials, namely the twin Aswins, happened to behold Sukanya, when she had (just) bathed, and when her person was bare. And seeing that one of excellent limbs, and like unto the daughter of the lord of celestials, the nose-born Aswins neared her, and addressed her, saying, 'O thou of shapely thighs, whose daughter art thou? And what doest thou in this wood? O auspicious one, O thou of excellent grace, we desire to know this, do thou therefore tell us.' Thereupon she replied bashfully unto those foremost of celestials. 'Know me as Sarayati's daughter, and Chyavana's wife...O thou of luminous smiles?

Refutation-

The twin Aśvinī-kumāras did not visit the hermitage of Sage Cyavana out of lust for his wife Sukanyā, nor with any intention to violate her. Their purpose was to test the steadfastness and purity of Devi Sukanyā's pativratā-dharma (wifely fidelity).

Upon testing her, they were fully satisfied with her unwavering devotion to her husband and returned to Svargaloka without so much as touching or harming her in any way.

As narrated in Śrīmad Bhāgavatam (9.3.11–18), if the Aśvinī-kumāras had come with an evil intention, they would never have assisted her in recognizing and choosing her rejuvenated husband, Sage Cyavana, after his transformation.

Instead, they honored her chastity and left after fulfilling their divine purpose.

कुछ समय बीत जानेपर उनके आश्रमपर दोनों अश्विनीकुमार आये। च्यवन मुनिने उनका यथोचित सत्कार किया और कहा कि 'आप दोनों समर्थ हैं, इसलिये मुझे युवा-अवस्था प्रदान कीजिये। मेरा रूप एवं अवस्था ऐसी कर दीजिये, जिसे युवती स्त्रियाँ चाहती हैं। मैं जानता हूँ कि आपलोग सोमपानके अधिकारी नहीं हैं, फिर भी मैं आपको यज्ञमें सोमरसका भाग दूँगा' । वैद्यशिरोमणि अश्विनीकुमारोंने महर्षि च्यवनका अभिनन्दन करके कहा, 'ठीक है।' और इसके बाद उनसे कहा कि 'यह सिद्धोंके द्वारा बनाया हुआ कुण्ड है, आप इसमें स्नान कीजिये' ।।१३।। च्यवन मुनिके शरीरको बुढ़ापेने घेर रखा था। सब ओर नसें दीख रही थीं, झुर्रियाँ पड़ जाने एवं बाल पक जानेके कारण वे देखनेमें बहुत भद्दे लगते थे। अश्विनीकुमारोंने उन्हें अपने साथ लेकर कुण्डमें प्रवेश किया ।।१४।। उसी समय कुण्डसे तीन पुरुष बाहर निकले। वे तीनों ही कमलोंकी माला, कुण्डल और सुन्दर वस्त्र पहने एक-से मालूम होते थे। वे बड़े ही सुन्दर एवं स्त्रियोंको प्रिय लगनेवाले थे ।।१५।। परम साध्वी सन्दरी सुकन्याने जब देखा कि ये तीनों ही एक आकृतिके तथा सूर्यके समान तेजस्वी हैं, तब अपने पतिको न पहचानकर उसने अश्विनीकुमारोंकी शरण ली ।। १६।। उसके पातिव्रत्यसे अश्विनीकुमार बहुत सन्तुष्ट हुए। उन्होंने उसके पतिको बतला दिया और फिर च्यवन मुनिसे आज्ञा लेकर विमानके द्वारा वे स्वर्गको चले गये ।।१७।।

After some time had passed, both the Ashvinī Kumāras came to his hermitage. Sage Cyavana welcomed them with due honor and said:
"You both are capable of anything, so please grant me youth again. Transform my appearance and condition into such a form as is desired by young women. I know that you are not entitled to drink Soma in sacrifices, yet I promise to offer you a share of Soma in the yajña."

The two Ashvinī Kumāras, foremost among physicians, gladly accepted the sage's words and said, "Very well." Then they pointed to a pond and said, "This is a pond prepared by the Siddhas; bathe in it." (Verse 13)

Old age had taken complete hold of the body of Cyavana. All his veins were visible, his body was wrinkled, and his hair had turned white, so that he appeared very unattractive. The Ashvinī Kumāras took him with them and entered the pond. (Verse 14)

At that very moment, three men emerged from the pond. All three wore garlands of lotuses, earrings, and fine garments, and they all looked exactly alike. They were extremely handsome and pleasing to women. (Verse 15)

The supremely chaste and beautiful Sukanyā, when she saw that all three of them had the same form and were radiant like the sun, could not recognize her husband. She therefore sought the protection of the Ashvinī Kumāras. (Verse 16)

Pleased by her fidelity, the Ashvinī Kumāras revealed to her which one was her husband. After taking leave of Sage Cyavana, they ascended to heaven in their celestial chariot. (Verse 17)

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the account of the divine physicians—the Ashvinī Kumāras—states that if a sacrifice is performed without invoking both Ashvinī Kumāras, it is considered headless, meaning the ritual is incomplete or invalid.

It is further explained that these two Ashvinī Kumāras are none other than the Earth, adorned with fire, and the Heaven (Dyuloka), adorned with the solar garland. One Ashvinī is associated with the Earth and its fire, and since the sacrificial altar is built upon the Earth and fire is kindled upon it, it is evident that without these elements, the acrifice holds no meaning.

Who can perform a sacrifice without the blazing fire on Earth? Therefore, the Earth, garlanded with fire and referred to as an Ashvinī Kumāra in this context, is central to the ritual. Similarly, the Sun is also described in this symbolic manner.

Satapatha Brahmana 4/1/5/16

वे बोले इम अध्वर्यु है। हमी यश में मुख्य है। हमारे इस पहले ग्रह को द्विदे-वत्यों के लिये दे दो। उन्होंने उस पहले ग्रह को द्विदेवत्यों को दे दिया। इसलिये यह दसवाँ ग्रह है और तीसरा वषट्कार होता है। यह अश्विन कौन हैं, द्यौ और पृथिषी । यही दो तो हैं जो सच को अश्नुवातां या प्राप्त करते हैं। यह पुष्कर सज अर्थात् पुष्कर की माला वाले हैं। क्योंकि पृथिवी का पुष्कर अग्नि है और यौ का सूर्य ।।१६।।

They said, "This is the Adhvaryu. We are the principal ones in this sacrifice. Give our first oblation to the dual deities." So they offered the first oblation to the dual deities. Therefore, this is the tenth oblation and the third vaṣaṭkāra (sacrificial exclamation).

Who are the Ashvins? They are Heaven (Dyau) and Earth (Pṛthivī). These two alone are the ones who attain or partake of the truth (sat). They are adorned with garlands of Pushkara (lotus or sacred essence). For the Earth, the Pushkara is fire (Agni), and for Heaven, it is the Sun (Sūrya).

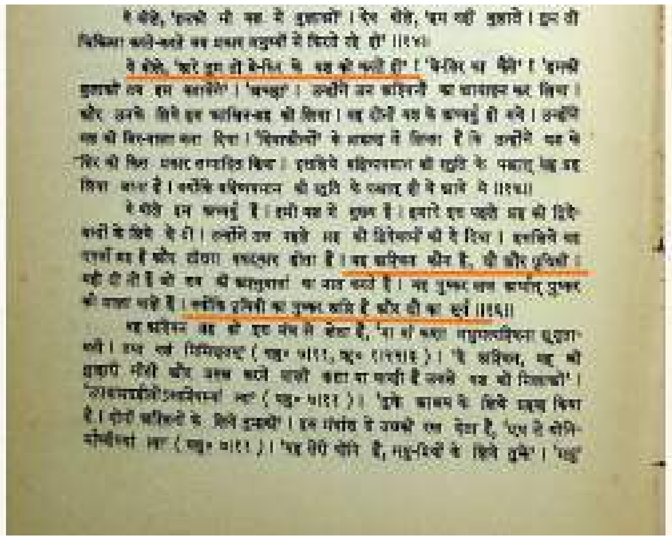
Sayana Bhasya says –

The question arises: "Who are the Aśvins?" The answer: "These visible Dyāvā-Pṛthivī are the Aśvins." Based on the rule "vā chandasī" (Pāṇini 6.1.106), the long vowel is formed.

Since Dyāvā-Pṛthivī pervade the entire world, the Aśvins, being of their nature, are also pervasive. The term puṣkarasrajau supports their horse-like nature. Their garlanded form is mentioned in a mantra: "medhāṁ me aśvināvubhāvācattāṁ puṣkarasrajau" (Pāraskara Gṛhya Sūtra 1.3.19).



Allegations-

Mahabharata 13.40.13-18 "…The Creator himself is incapable of restraining them within the limits that are proper: what need then be said of men? This, O chief of men, I heard in former days, viz., how Vipula had succeeded in protecting his preceptor's spouse in ancient times. There was in days of yore a highly blessed Rishi of the name of Devasarman of great celebrity. He had a wife, Ruchi by name, who was unequalled on earth for beauty. Her loveliness intoxicated every beholder among the deities and Gandharvas and Danavas. The chastiser of Paka, viz., Indra, the slayer of Vritra, O monarch, was in particular enamoured of her and coveted her person. The great ascetic Devasarman was fully cognisant of the disposition of women. He, therefore, to the best of his power and energy, protected her (from every kind of evil influence). The Rishi knew that Indra was restrained by no scruples in the matter of seeking the companionship of other people's wives. It was for this reason that he used to protect his spouse, putting forth all his power…" Tr. K.M. Ganguli

So now I am free from all the allegations that I am using bad words against Indra, as the Rishi himself has described the truth about Indra.

Indra in old age had lusted after another lady named Sukala and tried to make sexual advances to her, but she in anger insulted him,

Padma Purana II.58.25-28a "Sukala said:- Well being to you. I am protected by the magnanimous sons of my husband, and by companions; so I am not at all alone. From whom (then) do I have fear? I am protected by brave men everywhere. I do not have much time to talk. I am engaged in my duty towards him. O you very intelligent one, why do you not feel ashamed of dallying with me while your eyes are trickling (i.e. while you are old). Who are you that you have come here, and are not afraid even of death?" Tr. N.A. Deshpande

Indra addressed Ahalya the wife of Sage Gautama in the following way,

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 61.22-41 "… What an indescribable asceticism the great devotee Gautama had practiced by virtue of which he luckily secured the possession of a very beautiful wife! By the worship of the eternal goddess of Nature, (Parvati) who is the emblem of the spell of Visnu and by the adoration of Kamala, he was undoubtedly secured a wife like Kamala having looks of a lotus, who is a woman of the first four classes (Padmini), of slender waist, huge buttocks, hard breast; of the colour of heated gold, of fine teeth and soft and pure complexion, the touch of whose body is agreeably warm in winter and delightfully cool in summer. Fair one, Cupid versed in sexual science or the lustful moon-god alone knows how to cohabit with a damsel like you. How can Gautama resourceful only in meditations know that? In sexual science I am a past-master, and on this score I am always eulogised by the above named clever individuals and by the celestial whores Urvasi etc. O nymph possessing an excellent face, I shall make Sachi your maid-servant…" Tr. Rajendra Nath Sen

Indra is called the जार (Destroyer) of Ahalya (Night) in these sections of Shruti :

ShadVimsa Brahmana 1.1: -अहल्यायै जारोऽसी।अहलायाया ह मैत्रेय्या जार आस that is Indra is Destroyer of Ahilya

Shatpath Brahmana 3.3.4.18: -अहल्यायै जारोऽसी that is Indra (Sun) is destroyed of Ahilya (Night)

Satapatha Brahmana 4.5.9.4 says वै शुक्रो य एष तपत्येष उ एवेन्द्रस्तस्माच्छुक्राग्रान्गृह्णाति that is Sun is Indra

Taittriya Aranyaka Prapathak 1 Anuvak 12 says इन्द्राऽऽगच्छ हरिव आगच्छ मेधातिथेः । मेष वृषणश्वस्य मेने (३) । गौरावस्क-न्दिन्नहल्यायै जार that is Indra (sun) is the destroyer of Ahilya (night) and Indra comes to the sacrifice of Medhatithi

Drahyāyaṇa Śrautasūtram Patala 1 khanda 3 says इन्द्रागच्छ हरिव आगच्छ मेधातिथेर्मेषवृषणश्वस्य मेने गौरावास्कन्दिन्नहल्यायै जारकौशिकब्राह्मण गौतमब्रुवाणेति that is Indra comes to the Sacrifice of Medhatithi and Indra (Sun) is the destroyer of Ahilya (night)

In Nirukta 3.16, 3.3.4- सूर्य (Sun) is clearly called the जार (destroyer) of रात्रि (Night).

You might be wandering what is the meaning of गौतम (gautam) then? "उत्तमा गावो रश्मयो यस्य सः" That which has Excellent rays is Gautam. Here "चंद्रमा (moon) is Gautama

And Gautama means चन्द्र i.e. kaanta of Ahilya रश्मी गै उच्यते, गौ with तम meaning who shines bright. here because of Surya from whom the moon shines, has been called गौ (Gautam) The meaning that has to be taken as "Sun(Indra) is the

सूय्यै की सुषुम्णा नामक रश्मि चन्द्रमा को रूप- सम्पन्न बनाती है- यह वैदिक सिद्धान्त है, सो उस रश्मि को 'गो' कहते हैं, अथवा सभी रश्मियों का नाम 'गौ' है

The sunray named Sushumna, directed toward the moon, makes it beautiful and radiant — this is a Vedic principle. That ray is called 'go', or alternatively, all rays are referred to as 'gau'.

वेद में आदित्य (सूर्य) को ही जार कहते हैं क्योंकि वह रात को जीणं परिसमाप्त खत्म करने वाला है।

(b) In the Vedas, Āditya (the Sun) is called a 'jāra' (lover/Destroyer), because he brings the night (symbol of decay or darkness) to an end — that is, he destroys or finishes it."

(2) The word "Indra"—proceeding from the root 'Idi' which signifies great glory—would signify one possessed of a resplendent glory; and as such it is taken as another name of the Sun; and he is the 'jāra'—destroyer (jarati-nāçayati)—of 'Ahalyā'—(ahani līyate) that which disappears during the day, i.e., Night; as it is only when the Sun rises that the darkness of night is destroyed; and it is in this sense that we should take the sentence—"Indro' halyāyā jārah,"—which cannot be taken in its ordinary sense, of an illicit connection with a woman.

According to Ancient Acharya Kumarila Bhatta, in his commentary Tantravartika on the Mimamsa Darshan (page 189), writes that the name "Indra" refers to the Sun, and "Ahalya" refers to the night. When the Sun rises, the night is destroyed. This is why Indra is called the "Destroyer" (jar) of Ahalya. This does not mean that a deity named Indra had an illicit relationship with a woman named Ahalya. In Texts like Ramayana and Mahabharat this Scientific philosphy was adopted only in the form of a narrative and this is the real meaning of that Narrative and it should be understood within this context only

Coming on to Allegations on Padma Purana II.58.25-28a

Here is Padma Purana Bhumi khanda chapter 58 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications with proper context

In this episode of the Padma Purāṇa (Bhūmikhaṇḍa), Indra Deva is not portrayed as an lustful or adulterous being, The entire incident is a divine test arranged by Lord Vishnu to examine the unwavering chastity (pativratā-dharma) of Sukalā, the wife of sage Sudāmā. Acting under Vishnu's order, first Kāma (the god of desire) tries to disturb her mind and fails; then Indra approaches in the form of a handsome young man and speaks tempting words. Sukalā rejects him with powerful arguments, and Indra admits defeat without any attempt at force. There is no assault, no adultery, and no independent lustful motive in this incident; rather, the story glorifies Sukalā's strength of character and shows that even the Devas cannot shake the resolve of a virtuous woman. Therefore, this passage cannot be used to brand Indra as lustful —it is a moral allegory, not a scandal.

काम और इन्द्र का सुकला से पराजित होना
भगवान् विष्णु ने कहा- वैश्य कृकल की पत्नी सुकला क्रीड़ा के द्वारा प्रेरित होकर उस वन में
उसने सम्पूर्ण मनोहर वन को देखा और उस सती ने अपनी सखी क्रीड़ा से पूछा ॥
१॥ हे सखी! अत्यन्त मनोहर यह दिव्य तथा पवित्र वन किसका है ? सभी मनोहर
वस्तुओं से यह परिपूर्ण है, इस तरह से सुकला ने क्रीड़ा से पूछा ॥२॥ क्रीड़ा ने
कहा- यह वन सिद्ध स्वभाव वाले, दिव्य गुणों वाले के द्वारा निर्मित है। यह कामदेव
का वन सुन्दर पुष्पों और फलों से युक्त है, इसे देखो ॥३॥ उसके बाद इस वाक्य को
सुनकर दुष्ट काम के महान् वृत्तान्त को देखकर हर्षित हुयी ॥४॥ वायु के द्वारा
लायी जाने वाली सुगन्धि को उसने नहीं सूंघा । सुगन्धित से भरी हुयी हवा
स्वाभाविक रूप से चल रही थी ॥५॥ काम का बाण किसी तरह उसके नाक में
प्रवेश करता था किन्तु वह सुन्दरी पुष्पों की सुगन्धि को ग्रहण ही नहीं करती थी।।
६।। महासती सुन्दर रसों को भी ग्रहण नहीं करती थी। इस तरह कामदेव का मित्र
वसंत पराजित हो गया ॥७॥ वह लज्जित होकर युद्ध पराङ्मुख हो गया और कणों
के माध्यम से पृथिवी पर गिर पड़ा ॥८॥ पके हुए फलों तथा पुष्प मञ्जरी के
संस्कार से संस्कृत वह लवरूपी से पृथिवी पर गिर पड़ा और कामदेव का रस बाण
पराजित हो गया। अत्यन्त दीन बना हुआ मकरन्द भी पृथिवी पर गिर पड़ा ॥९॥
मक्खियाँ उस पर उसी तरह भिन-भिनाने लगी जिस तरह प्रवाह से प्रवाहित मरे
हुए पर मक्खियाँ भिन-भिनाती हैं।।१०।। वह धीरे-धीरे जा रहा था और पक्षिगग्ण
सका उपहास कर रहे थे। वे सुख तथा आनन्द से भरे हुए तथा अवाज करते हुए

The Defeat of Kāma and Indra by Sūkalā

Lord Viṣṇu said: Sūkalā, the devoted wife of the merchant Kṛkala, was inspired by her companion Krīḍā (Play) and entered a beautiful forest. She saw the entire enchanting forest and asked Krīḍā:

“O friend! This divine and sacred forest is so beautiful—whose is it? It is filled with all delightful things.”

Krīḍā replied: "This forest was created by one with divine qualities and a perfected nature. It belongs to Kāma, the god of desire. It is filled with beautiful flowers and fruits—look around."

Hearing this, Sūkalā smiled and remained unaffected by Kāma's charms. Though the breeze carried sweet fragrances, she did not inhale them. The air was naturally filled with scent, yet she ignored it.

Kāma's arrows tried to enter her nose through the scented air, but she did not absorb the fragrance of the flowers. Even the beautiful tastes and juices of the forest did not tempt her. Thus, Kāma's companion Spring (Vasanta) was defeated.

Ashamed, Spring turned away from battle and fell to the ground like scattered pollen. The ripe fruits and flower clusters lost their essence and fell to the earth. Kāma's nectar-like arrows were defeated. Even the sweet pollen (makaranda) fell to the ground, humbled.

Flies buzzed around it like they do around a dead body carried by a stream. Kāma moved slowly, mocked by the birds. They chirped joyfully, full of delight.

The birds sitting on the mountains in the forest said, "Sūkalā has defeated the one who chose the path of lust."

Then Kāma's wife Rati, along with Preeti (Affection), approached Sūkalā and said with a smile: "O blessed one! Welcome. Please roam freely in this delightful forest."

"Your pure form is desired by Indra. If you agree, shall I bring him here?"

Sūta said: Seeing and hearing the words of those two women, Sūkalā replied to Rati: "My husband has gone away with my love. I can only be united with him. Only with him will I experience desire and affection. My body is without shelter."

Hearing her words, Rati and Preeti were ashamed and returned to the mighty Kāma.

Rati and Preeti, having seen Sūkalā's unwavering resolve, turned to Kāma—who stood within Indra's body, ready to unleash his arrows of desire—and said:

"O wise one! She is invincible. Abandon your attempt. This noble lady is always immersed in thoughts of her husband."

Kāma replied: "O goddess! When she sees Indra's divine beauty, I will strike her with my arrows."

Then Indra, adorned in splendid attire and divine ornaments, smeared with sacred sandalwood, arrived with Rati. He approached Sūkalā, the virtuous wife devoted to truth, and said:

"I had sent my messengers—Dūti and Rati—to you before. O graceful one! I desire you. Why do you not desire me? I have come to you."

Sūkalā replied: "I am protected by my husband's sons. Even lone, I am guarded—why should I fear anyone?"

“I am surrounded by brave beings shaped in my husband’s image. I am absorbed in his duties. Please do not make further proposals.”

“O wise one! As long as tears flow from my eyes, how can you not feel shame in seeking pleasure with me?”

“Who are you? Do you not fear death?”

Indra said: “I came to this forest only to see you.”

“You mentioned your husband’s brave sons—show them to me.”

Sūkalā responded: “O Indra, they are leaders of all virtues—steadfast in patience, intellect, movement, and wisdom. They have surrendered to truth and uphold all dharmas. They always protect me.”

“Behold! Truth stands before me, accompanied by Peace and Forgiveness. Mighty Knowledge never abandons me. I am bound by these virtues—they are always with me.”

“Right now, Truth and others guard me. Dharma, Self-restraint, Wisdom, and Valor are my protectors.”

“All these qualities shield me. Who are you to seek me so boldly? Who are you to arrive here fearlessly with a messenger?”

“Truth, Dharma, Virtue, and Knowledge are my husband’s powerful allies. They protect me at home.”

“I am immersed in Self-restraint and Peace. Even Indra himself cannot conquer me.”

“Even mighty Kāma cannot prevail—I am protected by Truth.”

“Kāma’s arrows will surely fail. Dharma and its warriors will destroy you.”

“Flee far away—do not stay here. If you linger despite warnings, you will be reduced to ashes.”

“If you gaze upon my form without my husband, I will burn you like fire consumes wood.”

Hearing these words, Indra turned to Kāma and said: “If you possess true strength, fight her and witness her power!”

But Indra and the others, terrified by the threat of a curse, departed in fear.

After they left, the virtuous Sūkalā, filled with merit, meditated upon her husband and returned peacefully to her home.

O King, Sūkalā—embodiment of sacredness and sacrifice—returned to her home, radiant with spiritual power.

Coming to Mahabharata 13.40.16-18 this Prakaran is Ved- Virodh – Anti Vedic so it will be Rejected

This Prakaran is Ved Virodh . Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7 and Chandogya Upanishad says that Indra Deva and other Devas are eternal Brahmachari and follow Brahmacharya and as part of their vow of Brahmacharya abstains from all Types of Illicit Sexual Intercourse and lustful activities and follow Strict Celibacy . As per Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 Devas (including Devraj Indra) do not commit and avoid all Sinful activities and are free from Sin and Mortal Activities of Humans

Vyasa Smriti 1.4 -Shruti > Smriti (Including Mahabharata) > Puranas

In matters of discrepancy between the Shrutis , Smritis, and Puranas, the former should be held as decisive, whereas the Smritis should have preference in all topics where there would be a difference of opinion between them and the Puranas. (4)

THE TRUE CHARACTER OF INDRA DEVA BASED ON VEDAS

Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7/19

ब्रह्मचर्य रूपी तप के द्वारा देवों ने मृत्यु का हनन कर दिया अर्थात् देव अमर हो गए. इंद्र ने ब्रह्मचर्य के द्वारा देवों के लिए स्वर्ग पर अधिकार किया

Through the penance of Brahmacharya , the Devas defeated death, that is, the Devas became immortal. Indra took control of Swarga for the Devas through Brahmacharya.

Atharva Veda 11/7/14 states all Devas including Devraj Indra follow Strict Brahmacharya and live in Brahmacharya

ब्रह्मचर्य का पालन करने वाला पुरुष दीप्ति वाले वेदरूपी ब्रह्म को धारण करता है. उस वेद से सभी देव संबंधित हैं. देवों का निवास बना हुआ ब्रह्मचारी प्राण और अपान के बाद ज्ञान को, मन, वाणी, हृदय और मेधा को उत्पन्न करता है

A man who practices Brahmacharya attains the Brahm in the form of the Veda which is full of light. All the Devas are related to that Veda. Brahmacharya is the abode of the Devas it produces knowledge, mind, speech, heart and intelligence after Prana and Apan.

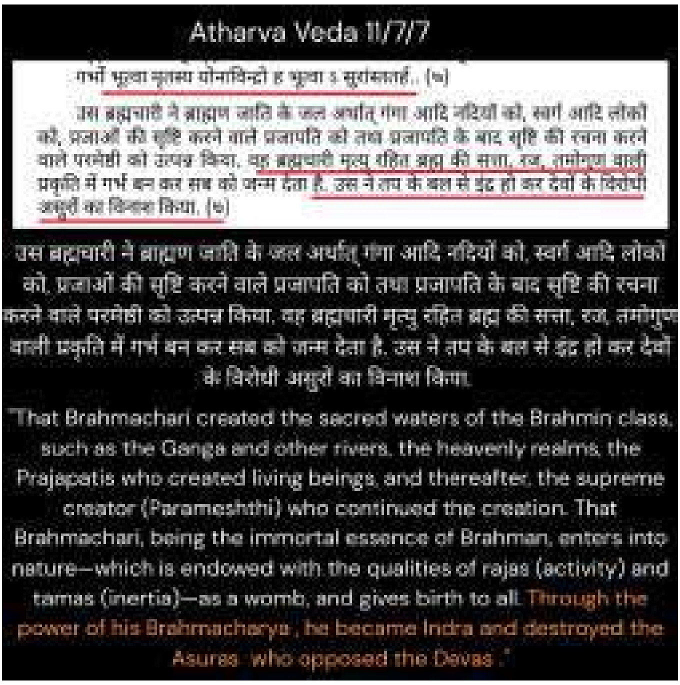
उस ब्रह्मचारी ने ब्राह्मण जाति के जल अर्थात् गंगा आदि नदियों को, स्वर्ग आदि लोकों को, प्रजाओं की सृष्टि करने वाले प्रजापति को तथा प्रजापति के बाद सृष्टि की रचना करने वाले परमेष्ठी को उत्पन्न किया. वह ब्रह्मचारी मृत्यु रहित ब्रह्म की सत्ता, रज, तमोगुण वाली प्रकृति में गर्भ बन कर सब को जन्म देता है. उस ने तप के बल से इंद्र हो कर देवों के विरोधी असुरों का विनाश किया.

"That Brahmachari created the sacred waters of the Brahmin class, such as the Ganga and other rivers, the heavenly realms, the Prajapatis who created living beings, and thereafter, the supreme creator (Parameshthi) who continued the creation. That Brahmachari, being the immortal essence of Brahman, enters into nature—which is endowed with the qualities of rajas (activity) and tamas (inertia)—as a womb, and gives birth to all. Through the power of his Brahmacharya , he became Indra and destroyed the Asuras who opposed the Devas ."



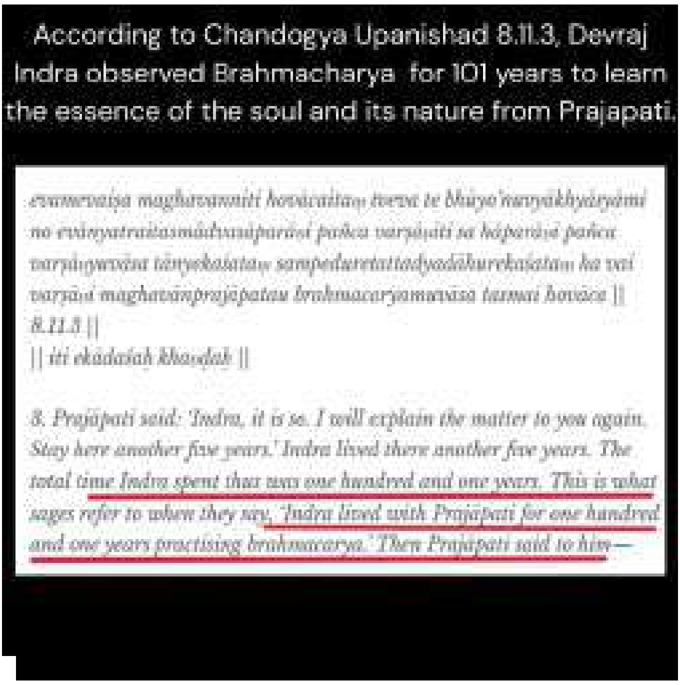
Atharva Veda 11/7/11 states only By Brahmacharya one can become Devas including Devraj Indra

इस स्वर्ग के नीचे एक सूर्यात्मक अग्नि है और दूसरी पृथ्वी के ऊपर है. इस स्वर्ग और धरती के मध्य दोनों अग्नियां आपस में मिल कर उदय होती हैं. उन सूर्य और अग्नि से संबंधित किरणें धरती और स्वर्ग के मध्य आश्रय लेती हैं. ब्रह्मचारी अपने तप की महिमा से उन का देवता बनता है.

Beneath this heaven, there is a solar fire, and another exists above the earth. Between heaven and earth, these two fires unite and rise together. The rays associated with that sun and fire take refuge in the space between earth and heaven. Through the greatness of his austerity (tapas), the Brahmachari becomes the Devas

According to Chandogya Upanishad 8.11.3, Devraj Indra observed Brahmacharya for 101 years to learn the essence of the soul and its nature from Prajapati.

Prajāpati said: 'Indra, it is so. I will explain the matter to you again. Stay here another five years.' Indra lived there another five years. The total time Indra spent thus was one hundred and one years. This is what sages refer to when they say, 'Indra lived with Prajāpati for one hundred and one years practising brahmacarya.' Then Prajapati said to him-



Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 says अपहतपाप्मानो देवा अप पाप्मानं हतेऽमृता देवा नामृतत्वस्याशास्ति। that is Devas do not do any sinful activity and Devas attained immortality by destroying Sins

Acharya Sayana in his commentary on Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 said – तदेतत् प्रशंसति अपहतपाप्मान इति । देवानां पाप। हित्यान्मरणधर्मराहित्याच्च तत्सम्बन्धि-न्ययनेऽग्न्याधानकारिणोऽपि तदुभयं सिद्धयतीत्यर्थः ' This is praised with the expression 'Apahatapāpman' (i.e., one who is free from sin). Because the Devas are free from sin and from the condition of mortality, therefore, even one who performs the Agnyādheya (the rite of establishing the sacred fire), by becoming related to them, attains both

Allegations-

Chyavana

A sage named Chyavana was attracted to a Princess named Sukanya, Mahabharata 3.122.1-11 "Lomasa said, 'A son was born to the great saint Bhrigu, Chyavana by name…Now after the lapse of a long space of time, that ruler of earth, Saryati by name, for amusement visited this pleasant and excellent lake. With him were four thousand females, espoused by him, O son of Bharata's race! there was also his only daughter endued with beautiful brows, named Sukanya. She surrounded by her maids, and decked out with jewels fit for the celestials, while walking about, approached the anthill where Bhrigu's son was seated. And surrounded by her maids, she began to amuse herself there, viewing the beautiful scenery, and looking at the lofty trees of the wood. And she was handsome and in the prime of her youth; and she was amorous and bent on frolicking. And she began to break the twigs of the forest trees bearing blossoms. And Bhrigu's son endued with intelligence beheld her wandering like lightning, without her maids, and wearing a single piece of cloth and decked with ornaments. And seeing her in the lone forest, that ascetic of exceeding effulgence was inspired with desire. And that regenerate Rishi possessing ascetic energy, who had a low voice, called the auspicious one,–but she heard him not."

Refutation-

Here is Mahabharata Vana Parva Adhaya 122 Geeta Press Gorakhpur . A detailed reading will debunk his allegations here –

Cyavana, the aged son of Bhṛgu, was immersed in such deep tapas that his body was buried under an anthill, unmoving for years. King Śaryāti's young daughter, wandering by, saw the two glowing eyes inside the mound and—out of mere curiosity—pierced them with a thorn, injuring the sage. In anger he cursed the king's entire retinue, and when the king came humbly to beg forgiveness, Cyavana declared that the offence could only be atoned by giving Sukanyā in marriage to him. This union was thus a form of penance and reconciliation, not a product of passion. Only long afterward, when the Ashvinī twins restored his youth as a boon, did they live as husband and wife. Far from being a story of lust, the episode underlines the consequences of careless actions and the greatness of ascetic power and forgiveness.

लोमशजी कहते हैं- युधिष्ठिर ! महर्षि भृगुके पुत्र च्यवन मुनि हुए, जो महान् तेजस्वी थे। उन्होंने उस सरोवरके समीप तपस्या आरम्भ की। पाण्डुनन्दन ! परम तेजस्वी महात्मा च्यवन वीरासनसे बैठकर ढूँठे काठके समान जान पड़ते थे। राजन् ! वे एक ही स्थानपर दीर्घकालतक अविचलभावसे बैठे रहे ।। १-२ ।। धीरे-धीरे अधिक समय बीतनेपर उनका शरीर चींटियोंसे व्याप्त हो गया। वे महर्षि लताओंसे आच्छादित हो गये और बाँबीके समान प्रतीत होने लगे ।। ३ ।। इस प्रकार लता-वेलोंसे आच्छादित हो बुद्धिमान् च्यवन मुनि सब ओरसे केवल मिट्टीके लोंदेके समान जान पड़ने लगे। दीमकोंद्वारा जमा की हुई मिट्टीके ढेरसे ढके हुए वे बड़ी भारी तपस्या कर रहे थे ।। ४ ।। इस प्रकार दीर्घकाल व्यतीत होनेपर राजा शर्याति इस उत्तम एवं रमणीय सरोवरके तटपर विहारके लिये आये ।। ५ ।। युधिष्ठिर ! उनके अन्तः पुरमें चार हजार स्त्रियाँ थीं, परंतु संतानके नामपर केवल एक ही सुन्दरी पुत्री थी, जिसका नाम सुकन्या था ।। ६ ।। वह कन्या दिव्य वस्त्राभूषणोंसे विभूषित हो सखियोंसे घिरी हुई वनमें इधर-उधर घूमने लगी। घूमती-घामती वह भृगुनन्दन च्यवनकी बाँबीके पास जा पहुँची ।। ७ ।। वहाँकी भूमि उसे बड़ी मनोहर दिखायी दी। वह सखियोंके साथ वृक्षोंके फल-फूल तोड़ती हुई चारों ओर घूमने लगी ।। ८ ।। सुन्दर रूप, नयी अवस्था, कामभावके उदय और यौवनके मदसे प्रेरित हो सुकन्याने उत्तम फूलोंसे भरी हुई वन-वृक्षोंकी बहुत-सी शाखाएँ तोड़ लीं। वह सखियोंका साथ छोड़कर अकेली टहलने लगी। उस समय उसके शरीरपर एक ही वस्त्र था और वह भाँति-भाँतिके अलंकारोंसे अलंकृत थी। बुद्धिमान् च्यवन मुनिने उसे देखा। वह चमकती हुई विद्युत्के समान चारों ओर विचर रही थी ।। ९-१० ।। उसे एकान्तमें देखकर परम कान्तिमान्, तपोबल-सम्पन्न एवं दुर्बल कण्ठवाले ब्रह्मर्षि च्यवनको बड़ी प्रसन्नता हुई ।। ११ ।। उन्होंने उस कल्याणमयी राजकन्याको पुकारा; परंतु वह (ब्रह्मर्षिका कण्ठ दुर्बल होनेके कारण) उनकी आवाज नहीं सुनती थी। उस बाँबीमें मुनिवर च्यवनकी चमकती हुई आँखोंको देखकर उसे बहुत कौतूहल हुआ। उसकी बुद्धिपर मोह छा गया और उसने विवश होकर यह कहती हुई कि 'देखूँ यह क्या है?' एक काँटेसे उन्हें छेद दिया। उसके द्वारा आँखें बिंध जानेके कारण परम क्रोधी ब्रह्मर्षि च्यवन अत्यन्त कुपित हो उठे। फिर तो उन्होंने शर्यातिकी सेनाके मल-मूत्र बंद कर दिये। मल-मूत्रका द्वार बंद हो जानेसे मलावरोधके कारण सारी सेनाको बहुत दुःख होने लगा। सैनिकोंकी ऐसी अवस्था देखकर राजाने सबसे पूछा- 'यहाँ नित्य-निरन्तर तपस्यामें संलग्न रहनेवाले वयोवृद्ध महामना च्यवन रहते हैं। वे स्वभावतः बड़े क्रोधी हैं। उनका जानकर या बिना जाने आज किसने अपकार किया है? जिन लोगोंने भी ब्रह्मर्षिका अपराध किया हो, वे तुरंत सब कुछ बता दें, विलम्ब न करें।'

Lomaśa said:
"O Yudhiṣṭhira! There was a great sage, Cyavana, the son of the great sage Bhṛgu, who was endowed with tremendous spiritual power. Near that lake, he began performing severe penance.

O son of Pāṇḍu! That great and radiant soul, Cyavana Muni, sat firm in the heroic posture (vīrāsana), appearing like a dry log of wood. O King! Remaining unmoving in the same spot for a very long time, he continued his penance. (1–2)

Gradually, as much time passed, his body became covered with ants. The great sage became enveloped in creepers and vines, and began to look like an anthill. (3)

Covered by the climbing plants, the wise sage Cyavana, from all sides, appeared like a mere lump of earth. Covered by a mound of earth created by the termites, he continued his intense penance. (4)

After a long period had passed in this way, King Śaryāti came to that beautiful and excellent lake to enjoy recreation. (5)

O Yudhiṣṭhira! In his inner palace there were four thousand women, yet he had only one child—a beautiful daughter named Sukanyā. (6)

That maiden, adorned with divine garments and ornaments, wandered in the forest surrounded by her companions. Roaming about, she reached the anthill of Cyavana, the son of Bhṛgu. (7)

She found the surroundings there very delightful. Together with her companions she went around plucking fruits and flowers from the trees. (8)

Being young, beautiful, in the bloom of youth, overcome by the stirrings of desire and the intoxication of her age, Sukanyā plucked many branches of forest trees laden with fine flowers. Leaving her companions behind, she began strolling alone. At that time, she was wearing only a single garment, and she was decorated with various kinds of ornaments. The wise sage Cyavana saw her. She was shining, wandering around like a flash of lightning. (9–10)

Seeing her alone, the great ascetic Cyavana, full of penance and radiance but with a weak voice due to long austerity, became very pleased. (11)

He called out to that auspicious princess; but because the voice of the sage was feeble, she did not hear him. From within the anthill, she noticed the shining eyes of the sage. Out of curiosity and confusion of mind, she thought: 'What is this? Let me see!' and with a thorn she pierced them.

Because his eyes were injured in this way, the highly irate sage Cyavana became extremely angry. By his curse, he caused the entire army of King Śaryāti to be unable to pass urine or stool. Because of this blockage, all the soldiers began to suffer greatly.

Seeing his army in such a miserable condition, the king asked everyone:
'Here dwells the aged and great-minded sage Cyavana, who is constantly absorbed in penance. By nature he is quick to anger. Who among you has knowingly or unknowingly offended the sage today? Whoever has committed this offence against the brahmarṣi must immediately confess everything without delay.'

Allegations-

Pippalada

There is a story of another sage named Pippalada who was very old and had also threatened to curse the king if he doesn't give his daughter to him, unlike Chyavana he wasn't harmed at all by the Princess. He became lustful after seeing the beautiful daughter of the king even in his old stricken age,

Shiva Purana, Satarudra Samhita 3.25.2-14 "Once while going to the river Pushpabhadra for his ablution, the great sage saw the beautiful youthful maiden Padma, a part of Siva herself. Desirious of getting her, the sage traversing the world and an expert in following the established conventions went to the abode of king Anaranya, her father…The sage repeated the request, saying "Give me your daughter devoutly. Otherwise I will reduce everything to ashes along with you."…Then the king was much frightened and he lamented again and again. He gave his daughter Padma, fully bedecked in ornaments to the old sage. After marrying her Padma, the daughter of the king and part of Siva, the sage Pippalada joyously took her to his hermitage… Then the excellent sage Pippalada, a part of Siva, became a young man by means of his divine sport and sported with that young lady. Ten noble sons, all of them great sons, were born to the sage."

.Refutation-

According to R.C. Hazra, the Uma Saṁhitā of the Shiva Purāṇa is a very late addition. He notes that it draws heavily from the Jñāna Saṁhitā, which itself is dated to around 950 CE. Based on this, it can be reasonably inferred that the Uma Saṁhitā was incorporated into the Shiva Purāṇa sometime after the 10th century CE.

IV. The Bhasmasaṁhitā,[99] also called Aṭṭha/Umāsaṁhitā, is represented in the class B editions only. The text introduces Kṛṣṇa on a visit to Kailāsa and performing penance there to Śiva, in order to obtain a son. He meets Upamanyu, and requests him to tell him about the greatness of Śiva. Upamanyu complies, and praises Śiva and his trident; he extols Śiva's power to save his devotees from hell. This discussion leads into several chapters on different types of sins, and on the description of hell and the suffering in it. Ways to avoid this suffering include gifts of food, performing penance, listening to the purāṇas, etc. The saṁhitā subsequently describes the seven dvīpas of the earth, and other component parts of the universe. It ends with discourses on a variety of topics, such as the development of man, from the foetus, through childhood, youth, marriage, old age, etc.; creation and manvantaras, etc. In Hazra's opinion the text borrows most of its chapters from the Jñānasaṁhitā.

XIII. The Jñānasaṁhitā[10] has already been referred to on several occasions in this description of the Śiva°. Indeed, in Hazra's opinion, other saṁhitās borrowed verses and even chapters from it. The text recognizes the Vedas as the highest authority, but it was Śiva, as [illegible], who communicated them to Viṣṇu. Śiva shall be worshiped with Vedic mantras, even though the saṁhitā does not, therefore, reject the authority of the Tantras and eventual Śiva worship with Āgamic rather than Vedic mantras. The nirguṇa Śiva is identical with the parabrahma; in his saguṇa form he manifests himself as Rudra. Prakṛti was born from Śiva's wish, and, from her, were born the other gods including Brahmā and Viṣṇu. This saṁhitā, like some of those discussed earlier, strongly encourages liṅga worship as the ideal way to worship Śiva himself. It urges worship under the guidance of a competent teacher; worship will lead to bhakti, then to jñāna, and, ultimately, to vijñāna, i.e. the realization that the only real thing is Śiva. Hazra points out that the text was influenced by the Kumārasambhava, Raghuvaṃśa, and Kirātārjunīya. He surmises that it may have been composed in Banaras, by someone who was also familiar with the banks of the Narmadā, not before A.D. 950.

The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript (Including Uma Samhita) are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Uma Saṁhitā.

saṁhitās, with different titles and different arrangements; two of their saṁhitās are not even listed in the Śiva° passages.[9] The following is a comparative survey of the saṁhitās, in the two passages of the Śiva° itself, and in the two sets of editions — which from now on I will refer to as class A and class B editions.

Śiva°	Class A Bombay 1884 Venkat 1895–96 Venga		Class B Venkat 1906, 1965 Paṇḍitapustakālaya [illegible]
I. Vidyeśvara	XIII. Jñāna	ch. 78	Vidyeśvara/	ch. 25
II. Raudra	Vidyeśvara	25	Vighneśa
III. Vaināyaka	(Venga 18)		Rudra	197
IV. Bhauma/Auma	Kailāsa	12	Śatarudra	42
V. Mātṛ(purāṇa)	XIV. Sanatkumāra	59	Koṭirudra	43
VI. Rudraikādaśa	Vāyu/Vāyavīya		Umā/Auma	51
VII. Kailāsa	pūrvabhāga	30	Kailāsa	23
VIII. Śatarudra	uttarabhāga	30	Vāyavīya
IX. Koṭirudra	Dharma	65	pūrvabhāga	35
X. Sahasrakoṭirudra			uttarabhāga	41
XI. Vāyavīya
XII. Dharma(purāṇa)

It is clear from all this that the Śiva° is one of the more composite and unwieldy purāṇas, sections of which "were written by different hands in different times and ages," it is also evident that "there were different traditions regarding the text of the Śiva-purāṇa." [illegible] Hazra, who did not include the Śiva° in his volume on the mahāpurāṇas, later published an extensive and comparative study of the various saṃhitās, which is repeatedly referred to in these pages. [illegible] In view of the great disparity between the two sets of editions, I will follow the order of the saṃhitās as set forth in the purāṇa itself.

Allegations-

Brahmins

When the Sages possessing mystic powers can do these things then why can't a normal Brahmin do the same?

Brahma Purana 120.120-122. "The Siddha roamed over the earth as he pleased. The excellent lady Urvasi went to Varanasi and took her bath in the waters of Matsyodari assuming her divine form. This foolish Brahman too had gone to the river Matsyodari. On seeing Urvasi bathing there he was overwhelmed by passionate love that agitated him too much."

An old-aged Brahmin was so aroused that he ordered his sons to get a woman to satisfy him, Padma Purana II.1.28-30 "Having ordered the glorious one, devoted to this father, the brahmana (i.e. Sivasarman), thinking of the second son, called (him viz.) Vedasarman (and said to him): "Go by my order; being stuperfied by passion of love (i.e. sex) I cannot stand without a woman (by my side)." He presented, by means of his magical power, a woman full of all charm (before Vedasarman). (He told him:0 "O boy, determined for me, bring this woman to me."

Regarding Padma Purana 2.1.28-30

Here is Padma Purana 2.1.28-30 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications

हे महाभाग ! जिसने हमलोगों को अपने गर्भ में पाला, वह हमलोगों की माँ अपने शरीर का परित्याग करके चली गयी ॥२३॥ हे तारक वह शरीर का त्याग करके स्वर्ग चली गयी अब आपका क्या आदेश है?।॥२४॥ द्विजश्रेष्ठ, शिवशर्मा ने अपने सबसे बड़े तथा भक्तिभाव सम्पन्न पुत्र यज्ञशर्मा को बुलाकर कहा।।२५॥ शिवशर्मा ने कहा- तुम इस तीक्ष्ण तथा धारदार शस्त्र के द्वारा इसके सभी अङ्गों को काटकर जहाँ-तहाँ फेंक दो ॥२६।। पिता की जैसी आज्ञा थी उस पुत्र ने वैसा ही किया और उसके बाद वह अपने पिता के पास आया और कहा ॥२७॥ हे पितः आपने जैसा आदेश दिया था वैसा मैंने कर दिया अब आप बतलाएँ कि मुझे क्या करना है ? हे पिताजी। आप जो कहेंगे उस कठोर तथा दुर्लभ कार्य को भी मैं करूँगा ॥२८॥ वे ब्राह्मण जान गये कि यह मेरा पुत्र पितृभक्त है, इस तरह का निश्चय करके उन्होंने दूसरे पुत्र के विषय में विचार करते हुए वेदशर्मा को बुलाकर कहा- तुम उस नारी के पास जाओ कामार्त मैं स्त्री के बिना नहीं रह सकता हूँ ॥२९-३०॥ उन्होंने उसे सभी सौभाग्यों से सम्पन्न नारी को दिखाया और कहा- हे वत्स ! निश्चय करके तुम इसे मेरे लिए लाओ ॥३१॥ इस तरह से कहने पर वेदशर्मा ने कहा- मैं आपका प्रिय कार्य करूंगा। पिता को नमस्कार करके उस स्त्री के पास जाकर उन्होंने कहा।। ३२॥ हे देवि । मेरे पिता काम के बाणों से पीड़ित हैं और आपको प्राप्त करना चाहते हैं। अतएव हे सुन्दरी ! आप मेरे वृद्ध पिता पर प्रसन्न हो जाइये ॥३३॥ हे सर्वाङ्ग सुन्दरि मेरे पिता को अपना लीजिये। इस तरह से उस माया ने वेदशर्मा की बातों को सुना ॥३४॥

23. “O highly fortunate one! The mother who carried us in her womb and nurtured us has now abandoned her body and departed.”

24. “O Tāraka, she has given up her body and gone to heaven. Now, what is your command?”

25. The best of the twice-born, Śivaśarmā, summoned his eldest and most devoted son, Yajñaśarmā, and said—

26. “With this sharp and keen-edged weapon, cut all her limbs into pieces and scatter them here and there.”

27. As his father had ordered, the son did exactly that. Then he returned to his father and said—

28. “O father, I have done as you commanded. Now tell me, what should I do? I will even carry out any harsh or rare task you give me.”

29–30. The Brāhmaṇa understood, “This son of mine is truly devoted to his father.” Thinking thus, he considered his second son, Vedasharmā, and said— “Go to that woman, for I am afflicted by desire and cannot live without a wife.”

31. Showing him a woman endowed with all forms of good fortune, he said— “O dear son, go and bring her for me.”

32. Hearing this, Vedasharmā said— “I will do what pleases you.” Bowing to his father, he went to the woman and said—

33. “O lady, my father is tormented by the arrows of love and wishes to have you. Therefore, O beautiful one, be pleased with my aged father.”

34. “O lady of perfect limbs, take my father as yours.” Thus, the Māyā (woman) heard Vedasharmā’s words.

This story centers on the unwavering devotion of Vedasharmā toward his sinful father—one who had failed to master his senses—and on the son's willingness to sacrifice his own life in order to fulfill his father's final, immoral desire. It primarily highlights the ideal of a son's supreme sacrifice and steadfast duty toward his father, irrespective of whether the father's conduct is righteous or sinful.

However, the Śāstras, including the Mahābhārata, declare that Brāhmaṇas such as Vedasharmā's father—those overcome by lust, acting in defiance of scriptural injunctions, and desiring parastrī—are to be regarded as chāṇḍālas (outcastes), removed from the line of Brāhmaṇas. For such persons, it is determined that the gates of heaven remain closed, and their destiny is to fall into hell.

Allegations-

Saubhari

Leave aside those Rishis getting aroused on seeing beautiful girls, an old sage named Saubhari was aroused just by seeing the sexual intercourse of fishes,

Srimad Bhagavatam 9.6.39-43 ”Saubhari Ṛṣi was engaged in austerity, deep in the water of the river Yamuna, when he saw a pair of fish engaged in sexual affairs. Thus he perceived the pleasure of sex life, and induced by this desire he went to King Mandhata and begged for one of the King’s daughters. In response to this request, the King said, “O brahmaṇa, any of my daughters may accept any husband according to her personal selection.” Saubhari Muni thought: I am now feeble because of old age. My hair has become grey, my skin is slack, and my head always trembles. Besides, I am a yogi. Therefore women do not like me. Since the King has thus rejected me, I shall reform my body in such a way

A sage Vedasiras ejaculated seeing an Apsara Suci, not to confuse this Suci as Sage Suci, Skanda Purana IV.ii.59.19-21 “Formerly there was a sage of reat penance named Vedasiras, born in the family of Bhrgu.

It was as though he was another embodied form of the Vedas. While that sage was performing the penance, Suci, the most excellent one of the celestial damsels, endowed with beauty and well-shaped limbs came into his view. Merely at her sight the mind of the sage became extremely agitated. He had an emission of semen immediately. The excellent celestial damsel became frightened." Tr. G.V. Tagare

Suci

Another Sage named Suci was attracted to the wife of a Rakshasa, Skanda Purana III.i.11.44-56 "There was a sage named Suci in that forest. He was engaged in penance and meditation. He was devoted to the study of the Vedas. That lady of excellent complexion went to his hermitage. On seeing her the sage became afflicted with erotic passion and he lost all his steadiness and composure. Approaching the beautiful lady, the excellent sage spoke thus: Suci said:- O young lady, welcome to you. O lady of bright smiles, whose wife are you? What is the task for which you have come to this extremely dreadful forest? You are excessively tired.

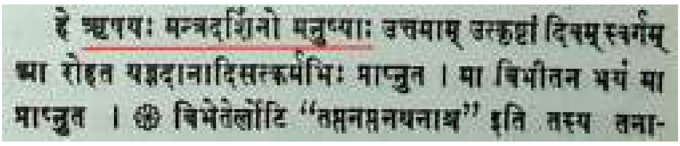
Refutation-

Now these Halala Putras — pedophile followers — have begun hurling baseless accusations against Rishis In truth, the Rishis were normal human beings, just like us, in the early stages of their sādhanā.

Ācārya Sāyaṇa, in his commentary on Atharvaveda 18.3.64, makes this explicitly clear:

"ऋषयः मंत्रदर्शिनो मनुष्याः"
"The Ṛṣis — seers of the mantras — are humans."



हे ऋषयः मन्त्रदर्शिनो मनुष्याः उत्तमाम् उत्कृष्टां दिवम् स्वर्गम् आ रोहत यज्ञदानादिसत्कर्मभिः प्राप्नुत । मा बिभीतन भयं मा प्राप्नुत । ❀ बिभेतेर्लोटि "तप्तनप्तनथनाश्च" इति तस्य तना-

Before they had fully mastered their senses and completed their austerities, some were at times overcome by Kāma (desire) and felt attraction toward the Apsarās.

As the Atharvaveda states:

अथर्ववेदः / काण्डं ४/ सूक्तम् ३७ –
यद्धस्ताभ्यां चकृम किल्बिषाण्यक्षाणां गत्नुमुपलिप्समानाः ।
उग्रंपश्ये उग्रजितौ तदद्याप्सरसावनु दत्तामृणं नः ॥
उग्रंपश्ये राष्ट्रभृत्किल्बिषाणि यदक्षवृत्तमनु दत्तं न एतत्।
ऋणान् नो न ऋणमेर्त्समानो यमस्य लोके अधिरज्जुरायत्॥

Here, Kāma — love or desire — is described as being under the influence of Apsarās such as Urvaśī:

अप्सरसाम् उर्वशीप्रभृतीनां संबंधी अयं स्मरः कामः । तदधीने वर्तत इत्यर्थः ।

This is why even advanced sages, in the earlier stages of their tapas, could be swayed by the beauty and māyā of celestial Apsaras.

But the truly great Rishis — such as Rishi Mārkaṇḍeya, Nara–Nārāyaṇa Rishi, and millions of other Rishis — had attained complete mastery over their senses through intense austerities and unwavering meditation upon the Supreme Lord. They rose entirely above such temptations. Having conquered lust and anger, they remained immovable even before the most alluring and seductively beautiful Apsarās, untouched by their most potent illusions.

THE STORY OF NARA–NĀRĀYAṆA RISHI: THEIR TRIUMPH OVER LUST AND COMPLETE MASTERY OF THE SENSES THROUGH INTENSE AND UNYIELDING PENANCE

Nara and Nārāyaṇa Rishi, who are considered incarnations of Lord Vishnu and whose later manifestations were Arjuna (as Nara) and Shri Krishna (as Nārāyaṇa), performed an intense and unparalleled penance in the holy region of Badarikāśrama, near present-day Badrinath Dham. The brilliance and power of their tapasya spread across the three worlds and caused even Indra, the king of the Devas, to become fearful of losing his position. To test the strength of their austerity and to divert their concentration, Indra sent many celestial nymphs (Apsarās) to allure and disturb them. However, such was the firmness of their vow and the purity of their meditation that the charms of the Apsarās could not shake them at all. Then, in order to teach Indra a lesson and demonstrate the futility of such temptations, Nārāyaṇa Rishi gently struck his own thigh and from it manifested the supremely beautiful Urvaśī, an Apsarā of unparalleled grace and charm, far surpassing all those sent by Indra. Awestruck and humbled, Indra realized the greatness of Nara-Nārāyaṇa and, bowing before them, returned to his abode with deep respect. This episode eternally glorifies the sages as symbols of supreme self-control, divine power, and unshakable devotion.

6. As Nārāyaṇa and Nara, the foremost of the sages and of perfectly serene mind, he was born of Dharma and his spouse Mūrti, the daughter of Daksa. He expounded to sages (like Narada) the path of action leading to the realization of the Soul (who is characterised by actionlessness). He practised (an ideal type of) penance and his feet are still served (and worshipped) by prominent sages.
7. Suspecting with the apprehension that this sage (Nārāyaṇa-Nara) covets to take possession of his position (as the king of heaven), Indra deputed Kämadeva, the god of love, along with his troupe. Being ignorant of his (Nārāyana's) spiritual greatness, Kamadeva went with his paraphernalia-a bevy of celestial damsels, the vernal season and the gentle wind (from the sandal-forests of Malaya) to his hermitage at Badarī, and hit him with shafts in the forms of side-glances of heavenly damsels.
8. Knowing perfectly well that the indiscretion has been committed by Indra, he laughed loudly without even slightly feeling the touch of pride (at his own moral strength). He assured the trembling visitors, "O (mighty) god of Love, O (South) wind, O heavenly damsels, do not be afraid. Please accept our hospitality (If no hospitality is offered, the hermitage would be as good as void). May our hermitage be non-void (i. e. worthy of its existence)."
9. When the sage Narayana who removed their fear addressed them thus, the gods who bent their head low with shame, submitted to him, "O all-pervading Lord who are trans-cendental to the Mâyà, this unpurturbedness in you is not sur-prising. You are the Supreme Self subject to no modifications, and your lotus-feet are respected with obeisance by hosts of sages who revel in the bliss of self-realization.
10. (It is not surprising that we should behave according to our nature and create obstacles in your penance). A number of obstacles are created by gods in the path of your servants (devotees) who want to transcend the abode of gods (the heaven), and attain directly to your highest region. No impedi-ments obstruct the path of others who offer in sacrifices the respective shares of gods as oblations. But as you are the pro-tector of your devotees, your votary sets his foot on the heads of obstacles (and trampling them down ascends to Vaikuntha).

They are like ocean-crossers who get themselves drowned in the cavity caused by a cow's hoof."

12. While they were praising him thus, the Almighty Lord, (in order to humble down the pride of beauty of celestial nymphs and others) created by Yogic Power and showed them women of marvellous beauty, all well adorned with costly orna-ments and raiments, waiting upon himself.

13. When those attendants of gods (viz. Kama, the spring season, heavenly ladies) saw women beautiful like goddess Śrī, (their pride for their own beauty was humbled down and) their own complexion became faded at the excellence of the superior beauty of those women and they were enraptur-ed with fragrance of their bodies.

Īśvara (Śiva) said:
“Nārada! In ancient times, the eternal Lord Viṣṇu once took birth as the son of Dharma and engaged in great penance on Mount Gandhamādana. Seeing his severe austerities, Indra became fearful and, in order to create obstacles, sent along with the Apsarās the spring season (Vasanta) and Kāma (god of love).

At that time, Śrī Hari was neither affected by their singing, music, perfumes, and ornaments nor was his mind disturbed by the sensual enjoyments presented by Vasanta and Kāma. Seeing this, Kāma, Vasanta, and the group of Apsarās fell into deep dejection.

Then, Nārāyaṇa, the elder of the two brothers (Nara and Nārāyaṇa), to especially agitate them, produced from his own thigh a woman so enchanting that she could captivate all beings in the three worlds. That woman thoroughly disturbed all the gods and even those two foremost deities (Kāma and Vasanta).

At that moment, Śrī Hari said in front of the Apsarās to the gods:
'O Devas! This is an Apsarā. In the world, she will be renowned by the name Urvashī.'”

THE LEGEND OF RISHI MĀRKAṆḌEYA: HIS VICTORY OVER LUST AND ABSOLUTE MASTERY OF THE SENSES THROUGH STEADFAST AND AUSTERE PENANCE

"Another similar episode is described about Rishi Markandeya, considered a partial incarnation of Narayana. While he was engaged in intense penance, Indra sent numerous Apsaras to distract and tempt him. However, Rishi Markandeya remained completely unmoved by their beauty and steadfast in his tapasya. As a result of his unwavering devotion, he was ultimately blessed with the divine darshan of Nara and Narayana Rishi."

Srimad Bhagvatam Skanda 12 Adhaya 8 Slokas 8-32

He observed the great vow of celibacy for life, was quiescent (as he brought passions under his control). He wore matted hair (on his head), bark garments, the sacred thread and the girdle of Kuśa grass. He carried a water jar of gourd and a staff in his hands.

He wore a deer skin and had a rosary of Rudrākṣa beads and Kusa grass. For the enhancement of his disciplined life and merits, he worshipped Hari present in the (sacrificial) fire, the sun, his preceptor, Brāhmaṇas and within himself both in the morning and in the evening.

He brought food received as alms, both morning and in the evening, and offered it to his preceptor silently. If per-mitted by his preceptor, he partook of the food once (in a day) and observed fast if no permission was given (due to the arrival of an unexpected guest, etc.)

In this way, while absorbed in the performance of penance and Vedic studies, he engaged himself in worshipping Lord Hari for millions of years and conquered death which is extremely difficult to overcome.

By this (conquest over death) god Brahmā, Bhrgu, god Śiva, Dakşa and other sons of god Brahma (such as Narada and men, gods, manes and all other beings (in the world) mar-velled greatly (at his wonderful achievement).

Possessed of austere penance, deep Vedic studies and self-control, he observed the great vow of life-long celibacy. All the distracting passions in his heart were destroyed. With his mind drawn within, that Yogin meditated upon the Supra-sensuous Lord Hari.

Even as the Yogin was engaged in concentrating his mind through the great Yoga on the Supreme person, a long period of time extending over six Manvantaras had passed away.

It is said that when Indra came to know of this (performance of penance) in the present seventh Manvantara, he became alarmed at it and began to create interruptions in it, O Brahmaṇa (Saunaka).

(with a view to interrupting his penance and pre- cipitating his own fall) he deputed to the sage, divine musicians, celestial dancing girls, Cupid (god of Love), the presiding deities of the spring season and the gentle breeze from the Malaya mountain wafting (love-exciting) fragrance as well as greed and pride, the sons (or the products) of rajas.

While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and

All of them went to the northern slopes of the Himalayas where the river Puspabhadrā flows and to the slab of stone called Citra, O Lord (Saunaka).

The premises of that holy hermitage were adorned with sacred trees (like Aśvattha) and creepers, densely occupied with families of holy Brahmaṇa sages and were full of pools of holy crystal-clear water.

It was resonant with the melodious humming of in-toxicated bees and loud with the cooing of joyous cuckoos. It was full of the vivacious movements of ecstatic dancing of the peacocks and of the flights of various birds in joy (displaying their delight).

Bearing with it the cool spray of mountain cascades and embraced by fragrant flowers (and hence wafting their sweet scent), the (southern Malaya) wind entered and blew gently exciting the passion of love (in the hearts of men).

The spring season manifested itself with the rising moon as the face of the night (i. e evenings beautiful with the rising moon), with rows of tender leaves and branches of flowers and clusters of trees entwined with creepers (as if in close embrace).

Followed by the celestial singers (Gandharvas) with companies of artistes experts in vocal and instrumental music, and accompanied with a troupe of divine damsels, the god of love appeared with a bow and arrows.

Those servants of Indra saw the sage sitting steadfast with his eyes closed after offering oblations to the sacrificial fire, looking formidable (and hence unassailable) like fire in the human form.

The celestial damsels danced before him and the singers began to sing and the players of instrumental music played upon the Mrdanga, lute, Paṇavakas and horns.

While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and son of rajas (Greed were trying to agitate his mind, Kama (the god of love) set his missile of five-pointed shaft[1] to his bow.
26-27. While Puñjika-sthali (a celestial damsel in her role of a temptress was plying with balls (in the presence of the sage), her slim waist was as if afflicted (and hence unstable) under the weight of her full breasts, wreaths of flowers were dropping from her hair. Her eyes were (as if) wandering (i.e. she was constantly looking) this way or that way. While she was running after the balls the wind blew away her fine garment (sāri) as the zone (which was fastened round it) got snapped (and slipped).

In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Visṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa

Feeling confident that the sage is now (as good as) subdued, Smara (the god of love) discharged that shaft, but like all the endeavours put forth by an unfortunate person, his attempt (against the sage) proved futile.

Thus while committing that offence against the sage, they were being scorched by his spiritual lustre (and being afraid of what would be the consequence of their offence) they ran away as children do after rousing a snake, O sage.

There is certainly nothing wonderful in the case of the great-souled ones, O Saunaka, that the great sage, despite his being thus attacked by the minions of Indra, was not affect-ed by anger, infatuation and such other perturbing feelings resulting from ahaṁkāra.

Perceiving the paleness of expression (on the coun-tenance) of Kama and his troop of followers and hearing from them the spiritual splendour and power of the Brahmaṇa sage, (even) the glorious lord of the celestial region (Indra) was extremely astonished.

In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Visṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa

8. He observed the great vow of celibacy for life, was quiescent (as he brought passions under his control). He wore matted hair (on his head), bark garments, the sacred thread and the girdle of Kuśa grass. He carried a water jar of gourd and a staff in his hands.

9. He wore a deer skin and had a rosary of Rudrākṣa beads and Kuśa grass. For the enhancement of his disciplined life and merits, he worshipped Hari present in the (sacrificial) fire, the sun, his preceptor, Brāhmaṇas and within himself both in the morning and in the evening.

10. He brought food received as alms, both morning and in the evening, and offered it to his preceptor silently. If permitted by his preceptor, he partook of the food once (in a day) and observed fast if no permission was given (due to the arrival of an unexpected guest, etc.)

11. In this way, while absorbed in the performance of penance and Vedic studies, he engaged himself in worshipping Lord Hari for millions of years and conquered death which is extremely difficult to overcome.

12. By this (conquest over death) god Brahmā, Bhṛgu, god Śiva, Dakṣa and other sons of god Brahmā (such as Nārada and men, gods, manes and all other beings (in the world) marvelled greatly (at his wonderful achievement).

13. Possessed of austere penance, deep Vedic studies and self-control, he observed the great vow of life-long celibacy. All the distracting passions in his heart were destroyed. With his mind drawn within, that Yogin meditated upon the Suprasensuous Lord Hari.

14. Even as the Yogin was engaged in concentrating his mind through the great Yoga on the Supreme person, a long period of time extending over six Manvantaras had passed away.

15. It is said that when Indra came to know of this (performance of penance) in the present seventh Manvantara, he became alarmed at it and began to create interruptions in it, O Brāhmaṇa (Śaunaka).

16. (with a view to interrupting his penance and precipitating his own fall) he deputed to the sage, divine musicians, celestial dancing girls, Cupid (god of Love), the presiding deities of the spring season and the gentle breeze from the Malaya mountain wafting (love-exciting) fragrance as well as greed and pride, the sons (or the products) of rajas.

17. All of them went to the northern slopes of the Himālayas where the river Puṣpabhadrā flows and to the slab of stone called Citra, O Lord (Śaunaka).

18. The premises of that holy hermitage were adorned with sacred trees (like Aśvattha) and creepers, densely occupied with families of holy Brāhmaṇa sages and were full of pools of holy crystal-clear water.

19. It was resonant with the melodious humming of intoxicated bees and loud with the cooing of joyous cuckoos. It was full of the vivacious movements of ecstatic dancing of the peacocks and of the flights of various birds in joy (displaying their delight).

20. Bearing with it the cool spray of mountain cascades and embraced by fragrant flowers (and hence wafting their sweet scent), the (southern Malaya) wind entered and blew gently exciting the passion of love (in the hearts of men).

21. The spring season manifested itself with the rising moon as the face of the night (i. e evenings beautiful with the rising moon), with rows of tender leaves and branches of flowers and clusters of trees entwined with creepers (as if in close embrace).

22. Followed by the celestial singers (Gandharvas) with companies of artistes experts in vocal and instrumental music, and accompanied with a troupe of divine damsels, the god of love appeared with a bow and arrows.

23. Those servants of Indra saw the sage sitting steadfast with his eyes closed after offering oblations to the sacrificial fire, looking formidable (and hence unassailable) like fire in the human form.

24. The celestial damsels danced before him and the singers began to sing and the players of instrumental music played upon the Mṛdaṅga, lute, Paṇavakas and horns.

25. While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and son of rajas (Greed—were trying to agitate his mind, Kāma (the god of love) set his missile of five-pointed shaft[1] to his bow.

26-27. While Puñjika-sthalī (a celestial damsel in her role of a temptress was plying with balls (in the presence of the sage), her slim waist was as if afflicted (and hence unstable) under the weight of her full breasts, wreaths of flowers were dropping from her hair. Her eyes were (as if) wandering (i.e. she was constantly looking) this way or that way. While she was running after the balls the wind blew away her fine garment (sārī) as the zone (which was fastened round it) got snapped (and slipped).

28. Feeling confident that the sage is now (as good as) subdued, Smara (the god of love) discharged that shaft, but like all the endeavours put forth by an unfortunate person, his attempt (against the sage) proved futile.

29. Thus while committing that offence against the sage, they were being scorched by his spiritual lustre (and being afraid of what would be the consequence of their offence) they ran away as children do after rousing a snake, O sage.

30. There is certainly nothing wonderful in the case of the great-souled ones, O Śaunaka, that the great sage, despite his being thus attacked by the minions of Indra, was not affected by anger, infatuation and such other perturbing feelings resulting from ahaṁkāra.

31. Perceiving the paleness of expression (on the countenance) of Kāma and his troop of followers and hearing from them the spiritual splendour and power of the Brāhmaṇa sage, (even) the glorious lord of the celestial region (Indra) was extremely astonished.

32. In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Viṣṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa.

EVIDENCES FROM THE MAHABHARATA OF NUMEROUS RISHIS WHO HAD MASTERED THEIR SENSES, CONQUERED LUST AND ANGER, AND REMAINED UNDEFEATED BY LUST

In Brahmaloka dwell countless Rishi who, in this world, have always been truthful, self-controlled, and ūrdhvareta (lifelong celibates who have preserved their Semen and abstained from Sexual Intercourse and wasting even one drop of their semen). (36)

There, a righteous man should study the Āraṇyaka scriptures and follow the duties of the vānaprastha stage of life. Thereafter, maintaining celibacy, he should leave that āśrama and, in the prescribed manner, take up sannyāsa. A man who takes sannyāsa in this way attains the imperishable state of Brahman. (5)

O King, a learned Brāhmaṇa should first of all resort to these very disciplines of ūrdhvareta (celibate) sages, as practised by them. (6)

O Lord of the people, if in the mind of a celibate Brāhmaṇa who has been observing brahmacarya there arises the desire for liberation, then he has the supreme right to take sannyāsa directly from the brahmacarya stage itself. (7)

In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Adhyāya 233, ślokas 43–45 (Gita Press Gorakhpur edition, p. 1607/2580), it is mentioned that Maharaja Yudhiṣṭhira personally maintained and served food to ten thousand ūrdhvareta (lifelong elibate) Brahmacārī Rishis , in addition to thousands of

I used to offer to all those Veda-knowing Brāhmaṇas the agrahāra (the first portion of food offered to a guest at the end of the Bali-Vaiśvadeva rite), and honour them appropriately with food, garments, and water. (45)

The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 10–13 (Geeta Press, Gorakhpur, p. 200/2256) describes the brahmachari sage Jaratkaru as an ūrdhvareta who had attained the highest status among all rishis.

“Asti’s father was as influential as Prajapati. While being a brahmachari, he also practiced restraint in his diet. He was always engaged in intense penance. (10)

His name was Jaratkaru. He was an ūrdhvareta and a great sage. Among the wanderers (yogis or sages), his position was the highest. He was a knower of dharma. Once, endowed with the power of tapas, the blessed Jaratkaru began his journey. Living a life of a muni (ascetic), he would set camp wherever evening fell. (11–12)”

Mahabharata Anushashna Parva Adhaya 102 slokas 4-5 – Gautama Muni was controlled of senses

पूर्वकालमें गौतम नामवाले एक ब्राह्मण थे, जिनका स्वभाव बड़ा कोमल था। वे मनको वशमें रखनेवाले और जितेन्द्रिय थे। उन व्रतधारी मुनिने विशाल वनमें एक हाथीके बच्चेको अपने माताके बिना बड़ा कष्ट पाते देखकर उसे कृपापूर्वक जिलाया। दीर्घकालके पश्चात् वह हाथी बढ़कर अत्यंत बलवान् हो गया ।।

"In ancient times, there was a Brāhmaṇa named Gautama, whose nature was very gentle. He was self-controlled in mind and had mastered his senses. Once, this vow-observing sage saw a young elephant in a great forest, suffering greatly without its mother, and out of compassion he nourished and sustained it. After a long time, that elephant grew up and became extremely powerful."

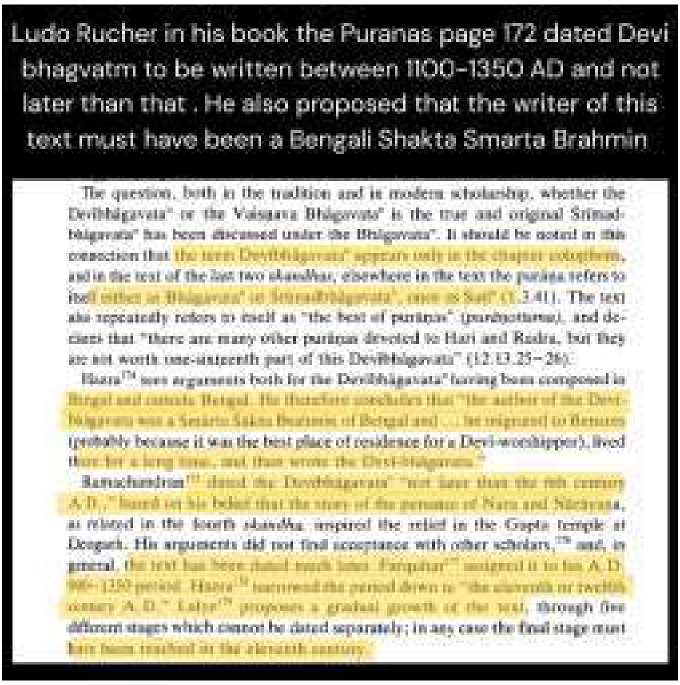
Ludo Rucher in his book the Puranas page 172 dated Devi bhagvatm to be written between 1100-1350 AD and not later than that . He also proposed that the writer of this text must have been a Bengali Shakta Smarta Brahmin



The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata" or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata" is the true and original Śrīmad-bhāgavata" has been discussed under the Bhāgavata". It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata" appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata" or Śrīmadbhāgavata", once as Saṃ" (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[74] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata" having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and then wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[75] dated the Devībhāgavata" "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[76] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[77] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[78] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[79] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

Refutation-

Coming to Srimad Bhagavatam 3.20.23 and Brahmanda Purana I.2.8.25 Pandit Madhvacharya Shastri had explained in his book Purana Digdarshan page 429/788

अर्थात् – ब्रह्मा जी ने अपने जघन भाग से अतीव लोलुप असुरों को उत्पन्न किया, वे लौल्य के कारण उसे ही ग्राम्यधर्म के लिए चाहने लगे । निर्लज्ज असुरों ने घूणापूर्वक हंसते हुए ब्रह्मा जी का पीछा किया और ब्रह्मा जी क्रोधावेश एवं भय से गिर पड़े। तब भक्तों की पीड़ा को हरण करने वाले श्री विष्णु भगवान् की शरण में जाकर ब्रह्माजी ने प्रार्थना की कि हे भगवन्! आपकी आज्ञा से में प्रजा रच रहा हूँ, परन्तु ये पापिष्ठ असुर मेरा पीछा करते हैं अतः आप रक्षा कीजिए । तब भगवान् का संकेत पाकर ब्रह्मा जी ने अपना वह कलेवर तत्काल छोड़ दिया । जो अनेक वस्त्र और भूषणों से सुसज्जित स्त्री के रूप में असुरों के सामने दीख पड़ने लगा। और वे असुर उसके रूप लावण्य पर लग हो गये। इस प्रकार मूढ़ बुद्धि वाले असुरों ने सायंकाल की संध्या को मदभरी औरत के समान प्रलोभन करती हुई देखकर उसे अपना लिया ।

पर्युक्त श्राख्यायिका के वैदिक और पौराणिक स्वरूपों की आक्षरिक समता

रहा आत्मरक्षा के लिये ब्रह्मा जी का विष्णु से प्रार्थना करना -सो यदि कोई गुण्डा किसी जज साहिब पर आक्रमण करे तो वह पुलिस में ही इसकी शिकायत करेगा क्योंकि मुजरिम को हथकड़ियों में जकड़ना जज का काम नहीं, बल्कि पुलिस इन्चार्ज का काम है। इसका यह अर्थ कदापि नहीं हो सकता कि जो जज अपनी भी आत्मरक्षा नहीं कर सकता और दौड़ा २ पुलिस में इत्तिला देता है वह भला दूसरों की कानून से क्या रक्षा कर सकता है ? इसी प्रकार जगत् की रक्षा का भार श्रीविष्णु भगवान् पर निर्भर है। असुरों द्वारा किसी भी देवी देवता के सताये जाने पर उसकी शिकायत विष्णु भगवान् से ही की जानी चाहिये इसमें निर्बलता या सबलता का सवाल नहीं, बल्कि अधिकार और प्रबन्ध व्यवस्था का आदर्श है। यह कतिपय पंक्तियें मनुष्य दृष्टि को सामने रखकर लिखी गई हैं, अब इसका वास्तविक भाव समझना चाहिए । ब्रह्मा रूप सूर्य के जघन अधोभाग से अन्धकार रूप असुरगण की उत्पत्ति हुई है। जिस प्रकार वेदशास्त्र में सूर्य के आगे २ उषा का चलना बताया जाता है उसी प्रकार सूर्य के पीछे २ अन्धकार चलता है। अर्थात् जिस २ प्रदेश में सूर्य अस्ताचल को लांघता जाता है वहीं-वहीं अन्धकार का साम्राज्य छा जाता है। यही असुरों का ब्रह्मा जी के पीछे दौड़ने का तात्पर्य है। जब विष्णु रूप नियामक शक्ति के तारतम्य से सूर्य रूप ब्रह्मा अपने अन्धकाराक्रान्त कलेवर को त्याग देता है तब वही सूर्य की उन्मुक्त रश्मियें लालिमा लावण्य से परिपूरत होकर सायं संध्या के रूप में प्रकट हो जाती हैं और अन्धकार क्रमशः उस संध्या को आत्मसात् कर लेता है। यही इस कथा का आलंकारिक तात्पर्य है, जो इस कथा के उपसंहार में मूल में ही श्रीवेदव्यास जी ने 'इति सायंतनीं संध्याम्' आदि श्लोक द्वारा प्रकट कर दिया है।

Meaning: Lord Brahmā created extremely lustful demons from his lower body. Due to their intense craving, they desired even him for base pleasures. Shamelessly, they laughed and chased Brahmā, who, overwhelmed by anger and fear, fell down. Seeking protection, Brahmā approached Lord Viṣṇu—the remover of devotees' suffering—and prayed: "O Lord! I am creating beings by your command, but these sinful demons are pursuing me. Please protect me."

At Lord Viṣṇu's signal, Brahmā immediately abandoned that form. The discarded body appeared before the demons as a woman adorned with many garments and ornaments. The demons, captivated by her beauty, became infatuated. Thus, the foolish demons mistook the evening twilight (sāyaṁ sandhyā)—which appeared like a seductive woman—for an object of desire and embraced it.

The Vedic and Purāṇic versions of this story are clearly aligned, so further elaboration is unnecessary. This tale not only illustrates the concept of "darkness-science" (andhakāra-vijñāna) but also paints a vivid picture of demonic tendencies. The disgraceful behavior of the demons toward their grandfather Brahmā should not cast doubt on Brahmā's greatness. If a worthless grandson insults his elderly grandfather, it reflects the grandson's depravity—not the grandfather's dignity.

As for Brahmā seeking protection from Viṣṇu—it's like a judge being attacked by a criminal and reporting it to the police. Arresting criminals isn't the judge's job; it's the police's responsibility. This doesn't mean the judge is weak or incapable of upholding the law. Similarly, the protection of the universe rests with Lord Viṣṇu. When any deity is troubled by demons, it is proper to appeal to Viṣṇu—not a matter of strength, but of divine roles and cosmic order.

These lines are written from a human perspective, but the deeper meaning must be understood. The demons, born from the lower part of Brahmā (symbolizing the sun), represent darkness. Just as the Vedas describe dawn (uṣā) preceding the sun, darkness follows it. Wherever the sun sets, darkness spreads—this is the symbolic meaning of the demons chasing Brahmā.

When, through the regulating power of Viṣṇu, Brahmā (as the sun) discards his darkness-covered form, the liberated rays of the sun emerge as the beautiful evening twilight (sāyaṁ sandhyā). The demons then absorb this twilight, mistaking it for a seductive woman. This is the allegorical essence of the story, which Sage Vyāsa himself reveals in the concluding verse: "iti sāyaṁtanīṁ sandhyām."

३ कई सिरे फिरों ने ब्रह्मा के चरित्र पर तीसरा आक्षेप यह भी किया करते हैं कि—ब्रह्मा ने असुरों को बनाया, असुर लोग ब्रह्मा का रूप देखकर मोहित हो गये और अपनी पाप वासना मिटाने के लिए ब्रह्मा के ऊपर चढ़ गये तथा'''करना प्रारम्भ किया। तत्पश्चात् ब्रह्मा भाग कर विष्णु की शरण में आ गया और विष्णु जी के कहनेसे उस अशुद्ध शरीर को छोड़दिया यह लीला अत्यन्त अश्लील है, तथा ब्रह्मा की निर्बलता की द्योतक है।

After hearing a wondrous tale about Lord Shiva, Sage Vyāsa respectfully asks Sage Sanatkumāra to explain what happened to the powerful energy that emerged from Shiva's third eye and was cast into the salty ocean.

Sanatkumāra replies: "O wise one! Listen now to the supreme and marvelous play of Lord Shiva, which, when heard with devotion, grants liberation to yogis."

The energy from Shiva's third eye, once thrown into the ocean, transformed into a child. This divine child, born of pure cosmic fire, began to cry loudly at the confluence of the Ganga and the ocean. His cries were so intense that the Earth trembled repeatedly, and even the heavens and the realm of truth (Satyaloka) were shaken.

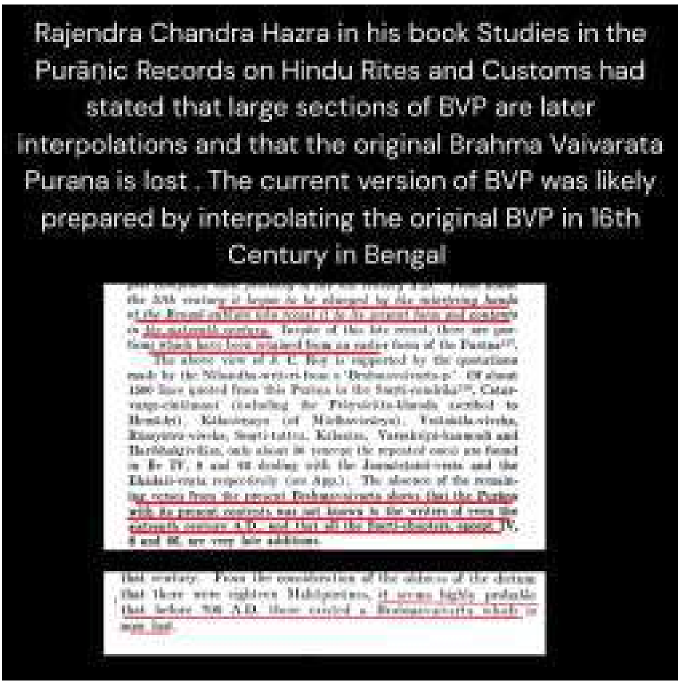
Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. Vishnu Purana 4.2.13-17 “Yuvanaswa had no son, at which he was deeply grieved. Whilst residing in the vicinage of the holy Munis, he inspired them with pity for his childless condition, and they instituted a religious rite to procure him progeny. One night during its performance the sages having placed a vessel of consecrated water upon the altar had retired to repose. It was past midnight, when the king awoke, exceedingly thirsty; and unwilling to disturb any of the holy inmates of the dwelling, he looked about for something to drink. In his search he came to the water in the jar, which had been sanctified and endowed with prolific efficacy by sacred texts, and he drank it. When the Munis rose, and found that the water had been drunk, they inquired who had taken it, and said, “The queen that has drunk this water shall give birth to a mighty and valiant son.” “It was I,” exclaimed the Raja, “who unwittingly drank the water!” and accordingly in the belly of Yuvanaswa was conceived a child, and it grew, and in due time it ripped open the right side of the Raja, and was born, and the Raja, did not die…"

पुरुष के पेट से दो बच्चे
'बलगेड सरबिया के अस्पताल में एक किसान अपनी गर्भिणी स्त्री को भरती कराने के लिये ले गया, जब डाक्टर से भेंट हुई तो उन्होंने कहा कि इस किसान के पेट में एक बहुत बड़ा फोड़ा है कि जिसके कारण इसे महान् कष्ट है- ओपरेशन किया गया तो पेट के ऊपरी भाग से दो बच्चे निकले ! एक लम्बाई में ६ इंच श्राधा पोण्ड का था, इसके सिर बाल, मुंह में कई दाँत थे। शरीर की समस्त रचना पूर्ण थी । दूसरा बच्चा अधूरा और अपूर्ण था उसका शिर और पेट बन चुका था।' (ता० २६-६–२५ के 'हिन्दूसर्वस्व'–हरिद्वार से) सम्भवतः अब महाशयों को कुछ चीं चपट करने का अवसर न रहेगा, क्योंकि अब तो हमने बीसवीं सदी के वेदभूत – स्वत प्रमाण 'न्यूज पेपर' का सबूत ऊपर दर्ज कर दिया है !

In the above story, the miraculous birth of Māndhātā from King Yuvanāśva's womb is attributed to the infallible power of Vedic mantras. Since we have already discussed the unfailing potency of these mantras, there is no need to repeat it here. However, our Dayānandī brothers, despite claiming to be followers of the Vedas, often do not truly believe in Vedic miracles. This observation has been made repeatedly during discussions with scholarly members of society. Therefore, it becomes necessary to satisfy these empiricists with direct evidence.

Two Children from a Man's Abdomen In a hospital in Belgrade, Serbia, a farmer had brought his pregnant wife for admission. Upon examination, the doctors discovered a large abscess in the farmer's abdomen that was causing him great pain. During surgery, two children were extracted from the upper part of his abdomen! One was about six inches long, with hair on its head and several teeth in its mouth. Its body was fully formed. The second child was incomplete, with only the head and abdomen developed.

Now, perhaps the skeptics will have little room to object, since we have presented a twentieth-century Vedic-like miracle as direct evidence from a newspaper!

पुराणों में लिखा है कि प्रसिद्ध सम्राट् मान्धाता का जन्म महाराजा युवनाश्व के पेट से हुआ था—यह कथा सर्वथा असम्भव है। पुरुष पेट में न गर्भाशय होता है और नाहीं उसमें किसी बालक को धारण कर सकने की गुञ्जाइश होती है। अतः पुराणों का यह लेख कोरा 'गप्प गोला' ही समझना चाहिए। हम सर्वप्रथम इस आख्यान का पौराणिक-स्वरूप प्रकट करते हैं—

पौराणिक स्वरूप

भार्याशतेन निर्विण्ण ऋषयोऽस्य कृपालवः ।
इष्टिं स्म वर्तयांचक्रुरैन्द्रीं ते सुसमाहिताः ॥२६॥
राजा तद्यज्ञसदनं प्रविष्टो निशि तर्षितः ।
दृष्ट्वा शयानान्विप्रांस्तान्पपौ मन्त्रजलं स्वयम् ॥२७॥

ततः काले उपावृत्ते कुक्षिं निर्भिद्य दक्षिणम् ।
युवनाश्वस्य तनयश्चक्रवर्ती जजान ह ॥३०॥
कं धास्यति कुमारोऽयं स्तन्ये रोरूयते भृशम् ।
मान्धाता वत्स मा रोदीरितीन्द्रो देशिनीमदात् ॥३१॥

(श्रीमद्भागवत ९ । ६ ।—)

अर्थात्—[महाराजा युवनाश्व निःसन्तान होने के कारण] सौ स्त्रियों से दुःखित हो गया, तब कृपालु ऋषियों ने बड़ी ही तत्परता के साथ (सन्तान प्राप्ति के लिये) इन्द्र का यज्ञ रचा ॥२६॥ रात के समय प्यास से अत्यन्त पीड़ित हुआ राजा यज्ञशाला में पहुँचा तब ऋषियों को सोते देखकर स्वयं ही उन्हीं से अभिमन्त्रित किया हुआ 'यज्ञ-कलश' का जल पी गया ॥२७॥ (क्योंकि यह जल पुंसवन-मन्त्रों से अभिमन्त्रित होने के कारण पुत्रोत्पादन की अचूक सामर्थ्य से परिपूरित था अतः) कुछ समय व्यतीत हो जाने के बाद युवनाश्व की दाईं कोख को फाड़ कर एक चक्रवर्ती-लक्षणोपेत बालक का प्रादुर्भाव हुआ ॥३०॥ 'यह बालक किसकी दूधी पीवेगा ? यह दूध के लिए बार २ रो रहा है'—ऋषियों की ऐसी उक्ति सुन कर इन्द्र ने कहा कि हे पुत्र ! तू मत रो ! और मुझे पान कर—ऐसा कहते हुवे उसके मुंह में इन्द्र ने अपनी अंगुली डाल दी ॥३१॥ (इन्द्र के 'मां-धाता' कहने से ही इसका वैसा नाम पड़ गया)।

उपर्युक्त कथा में जो वेदमन्त्रों की अचूक शक्ति के प्रताप से ही युवनाश्व की कोख से मान्धाता का उत्पन्न होना प्रकट किया है। सो वेदमन्त्रों की अमोघशक्ति का दिग्दर्शन हम पूर्व कर आये हैं, अतः यहां

विश्लेषण करने की पुनर्वार आवश्यकता नहीं है, परन्तु हमारे दयानन्दी भाई वेदानुयायी होने का स्वांग भरते हुए भी हृदय से वैदिक चमत्कारों के विश्वासी नहीं होते, यह बात हमने कई बार समाजी पण्डितों की बातचीत के दौरान में नोट की है। अतः हम अश्रद्धालु महाशयों को प्रत्यक्ष प्रमाण द्वारा भी सन्तुष्ट करना आवश्यक समझते हैं।

पुरुष के पेट से दो बच्चे

'बलग्रेड - सर्बिया के समाचार में एक किसान अपनी गर्भिणी स्त्री को भरती कराने के लिये ले गया, तब डाक्टर से भेंट हुई तो उन्होंने कहा कि इस किसान के पेट में एक बहुत बड़ा फोड़ा है कि जिसके कारण इसे महान् कष्ट है—ओपरेशन किया गया तो पेट के ऊपरी भाग से दो बच्चे निकले ! एक लम्बाई में ६ इंच आधा पौण्ड का था, इसके सिर बाल, मुंह में कई दांत थे। शरीर की समस्त रचना पूर्ण थी। दूसरा बच्चा अधूरा और अपूर्ण था उसका सिर और पेट बन चुका था।' (ता० १६-६-२९ के 'हिन्दुपञ्च'-हरिद्वार से)

सम्भवतः अब महाशयों को कुछ भी चपट करने का अवसर न रहेगा, क्योंकि अब तो हमने बीसवीं सदी के वेदसूत—स्वतःप्रमाण 'न्यूज पेपर' का सबूत ऊपर दर्ज कर दिया है !

Gods and Rishis Ejaculating

Shiva

Srimad Bhagavatam 8.12.32-33 "Just as a maddened bull elephant follows a female elephant who is able to conceive pregnancy, Lord Siva followed the beautiful woman and discharged semen, even though his discharge of semen never goes in vain. O King, where so ever on the surface of the globe fell the semen of the great personality of Lord Siva, mines of gold and silver later appeared.

Shiva is considered the ascetic god, I wonder what kind of asceticism is this? Due to this emission of Shiva's semen, the monkey god Hanuman was also born which is explained in Adultery Section. Shiva was so maddened about Mohini that he followed her in a fully nude state and even ejaculated.

मोहनी को देखकर वीर्यपात

(क) यद् रुद्रश्चन्द्रमास्तेन । – (कोषीतकी ६ । ७) – (a) Due to which Rudra [is called] the Moon.

(ख) (प्रजापतिः) तं (रुद्रं) अब्रवीन्महादेवोऽसीति । तद्यदस्य तन्नामाकरोच्चन्द्रमास्तरूपमभवत् ।। (शतपथ ६ । १।३।१६) -Prajapati said to this Rudra that you are Mahadev because he was named Mahadev = Mahan-radiant, so he (beautiful) became the Moon. . (ग) आग्नेयी पृथिवी । (ताण्ड्य १५।४।८) -This earth was igneous – fiery vapor

(घ) इयं (पृथिवी) वै देव्यदितिविश्वरूपी । (तैत्तिरीय १ । ७ । ६।७) – This earth itself is the beautiful goddess in the form of Mohini

So the meaning is that on insistence of Lord Shiva in the form of Moon, the आग्नेय वाष्प in the form of Vishnu, on attaining density, assumed the form of Mohini in the form of the Earth. So, when the Earth became stable and the Earth also got an independent orbit due to the attraction and repulsion of other planets, the Moon started revolving around the Earth, as if Lord Shiva became infatuated with the beauty of the Earth in the form of Mohini. This is what Mahadev means by running after Mohini; the Moon ran around to its full capacity, spread its rays or hands, but could not get anything, that is, the Moon could not assimilate the Earth, this is the meaning of Mohini not coming in its hands.

Then whats the meaning of Maheshwar Shiva releasing his tejas behind Mohini . Pandit Madhavacharya Shastri explained

वर्तमान विज्ञानवेत्ता भी इस बात को स्वीकार करते हैं कि आरम्भमें यह पृथ्वी तपे हुवे सोने के बराबर जाज्वल्यमान एवं दमकते हुवे पिण्ड के समान थी सो ज्यों ही चांद पृथ्वीपिण्ड की अपरिमित ऊष्मा से संश्लिष्ट हुवा तो उसका बहुत सा भास्वर हिम पिघल २ कर बहने लगा। गर्मी के संयोग से बर्फ का बह जाना विज्ञान सिद्ध बात है। सो यही शिव के वीर्यपात का आशय है।

The present day Science also accept that in the beginning, the earth was like a glowing and shining body like heated gold, (As provided in Vedic Shruti as well) so as soon as the moon was composed of the infinite heat of the earth, a lot of its shining snow melted and started flowing. It is a scientifically proven fact that snow starts flowing due to heat. So this is the meaning of Shiva's semen discharge in Srimad Bhagvatam 8.12. 32

Allegations-

Krishna

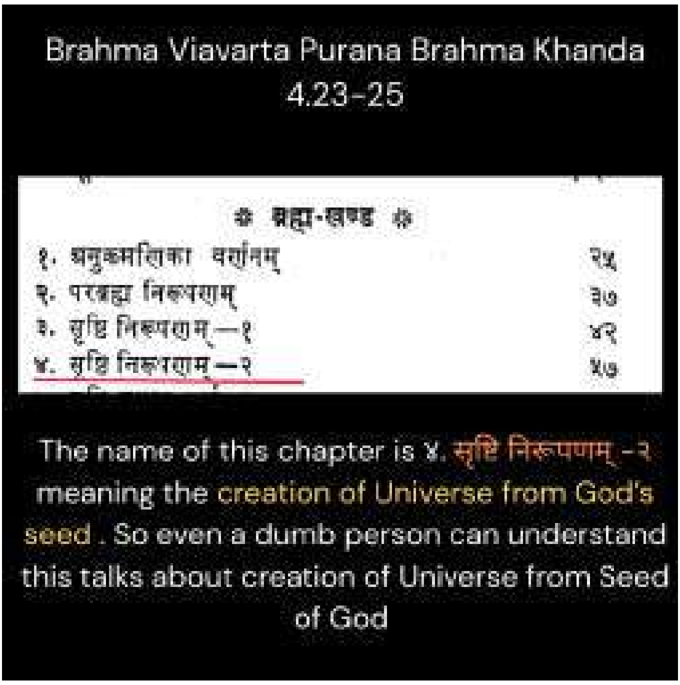
Krishna drops his semen after looking at Rati (Goddess of Love)

Brahma Viavarta Purana Brahma Khanda 4.23-25 “Thereafter because of the arrows of love, the semen of Lord Krsna also fell but he placed the same in the water that assembly. After a thousand years it emerged in the form of an egg. From that egg a gigantic universal form came out, which happens to be the base of the entire Universe. His single hair-pit could accommodate a complete universe. It is harder than the hardest and nothing else is bigger than it.”

Refutation-

Brahma Viavarta Purana Brahma Khanda 4.23-25

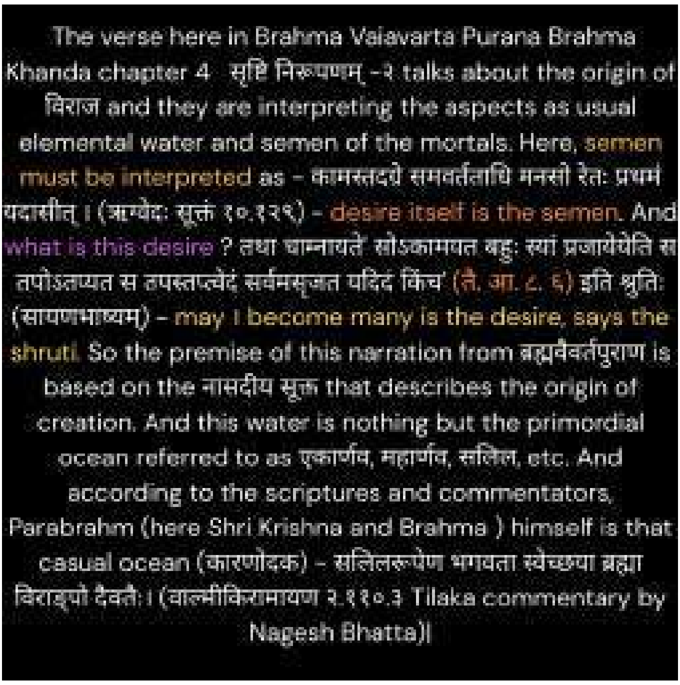
The name of this chapter is ४. सृष्टि निरूपणम् -२ meaning the creation of Universe from God’s seed . So even a dumb person can understand this talks about creation of Universe from Seed of God



The verse here in Brahma Vaiavarta Purana Brahma Khanda chapter 4 सृष्टि निरूपणम् -२ talks about the origin of विराज and they are interpreting the aspects as usual elemental water and semen of the mortals. Here, semen must be interpreted as – कामस्तदग्रे समवर्तताधि मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत्। (ऋग्वेदः सूक्तं १०.१२९) – desire itself is the semen. And what is this desire ? तथा चाम्नायते’ सोऽकामयत बहुः स्यां प्रजायेयेति स तपोऽतप्यत स तपस्तप्त्वेदं सर्वमसृजत यदिदं किंच’ (तै. आ. ८. ६) इति श्रुतिः (सायणभाष्यम्) – may I become many is the desire, says the shruti. So the premise of this narration from ब्रह्मवैवर्तपुराण is based on the नासदीय सूक्त that describes the origin of creation. And this water is nothing but the primordial ocean referred to as एकार्णव, महार्णव, सलिल, etc. And according to the scriptures and commentators,

Parabrahm (here Shri Krishna and Brahma) himself is that casual ocean (कारणोदक) – सलिलरूपेण भगवता स्वेच्छया ब्रह्मा

विराड्पो दैवतैः। (वाल्मीकिरामायण २.११०.३ Tilaka commentary by Nagesh Bhatta)।



Rig Veda Nasadiya Sukta Mantra 4 says that the desire to create universe is only the seed (semen of God)

परमेश्वर के मन में सबसे पहले सृष्टिरचना की इच्छा उत्पन्न हुई. वही सबसे पहले मन में सृष्टि का बीज बनी. विद्वानों ने बुद्धि से हृदय में विचार किया एवं असत् में सत् के कारण को खोजा. (४)

The desire to create the universe first arose in God's mind. That very first seed of the universe was formed in his mind. Scholars contemplated with their intellect in their hearts and searched for the reason of truth in untruth.

ननूक्तरीत्या यदीश्वरस्य पर्यालोचनं जगतः पुनरुत्पत्तौ कारणं तदेव किंनिबन्धनमित्यत आह कामस्तदग्र इति । "अग्रे अस्य विकारजातस्य सृष्टेः प्रागवस्थायां परमेश्वरस्य मनसि "कामः "समवर्तत सग्यगजायत । सिसृक्षा जातेत्यर्थः । ईश्वरस्य सिसृक्षा वा किंहेतुकेत्यत आह मनस इति । "मनसः न्तःकरणस्य संबन्धि वासनाशेषेण मायायां विलीनेऽन्तःकरणे समवेतम् ।

Now, if according to the Nānūkta (interpretive method), we consider that the will or contemplation (paryālocanam) of the Lord (Īśvara) is the cause of the creation of the world, then one might ask: “What is the basis or cause of that will?”
To answer this, it is said: “Kāmaḥ tad agre” —
“Desire existed in the beginning.”

That is, before the manifestation of this entire world of modifications (vikāra-jāta), in the primordial state (prāg-avasthā), desire (kāmaḥ) arose in the mind (manas) of the Supreme Lord (Parameśvara). It means: the urge to create (sṛṣṭi-kāmanā) was born in Him.

Now, one might question: “What was the cause of this creative urge in the Lord?”
To this, it is answered: “From the mind” (manasaḥ).

That is, from the internal faculty (antaḥkaraṇa) — in which the latent impressions (vāsanās) were merged within Māyā — the mind took form. The word is singular (manasaḥ), though it refers to all minds collectively, indicating the general principle. Thus, it means that desire arose in the universal mind, merged in Māyā, before manifestation.

By this, the idea that the Ātman (Self) is the substratum of qualities (guṇas) is refuted.

Such a “desire” (kāmaḥ) becomes the seed (bīja) of the future projection of the universe — it is based upon the puṇya (virtuous) actions performed by beings in a previous cosmic cycle (kalpa). That karma (yat) becomes the cause (kāraṇāt) at the time of creation (sṛṣṭi-samaya).

This karma becomes bhūṣṇu — powerful, and vardhiṣṇu — ever-growing; that is, it becomes ripe and ready to bear fruit.

Therefore, due to this cause — the karmic impressions — the Lord (karma-adhyakṣaḥ, the supervisor of karma, and sarva-sākṣī, the witness of all) develops the desire to create. In His mind, the will to manifest arises.

Having formed this intention (sṛṣṭikāmanā), He contemplates on what to create — and then creates the entire universe.

This is also confirmed in the scripture (āmnāya):

"So'kāmayata – bahu syām prajāyeyeti. Sa tapo'tapyata, sa tapas taptvā idaṁ sarvam asṛjata yad idaṁ kiñca" (Taittirīya Āraṇyaka 8.6)
— "He desired: 'May I become many, may I be born.' He performed tapas (austerity), and having done so, He created all this — whatever exists."

Having thus understood this process, it is further supported by the experience of the wise (vidvat-anubhava), which acts as a further means of valid knowledge (pramāṇa) due to its grace (anugrahakatva).

Now, this entire world (jagat) — experienced now (idānīm anubhūyamānasya) — originates from sat (Being), and the wise seers (kavayaḥ) who are knowers of the three times (past, present, future) and who possess deep yogic insight (krānta-darśanāḥ) — they recognize in their hearts (hṛdi) by concentrated intellect (manīṣayā), that:

The bond or cause (bandhuḥ) of this current world is the collection of karmas performed by beings in previous cycles — karmas that remain even when the subtle cause (avyākṛta) — the unmanifest — exists in a dormant (asat) state distinct from the manifest (sat).

Thus, they discover (niravindan) — that is, extract and realize — the cause by deliberation (pratīṣya), by internal discrimination.

The term "asati sad-vilakṣaṇe avyākṛte kāraṇe niravindan" — means: "In the unmanifest cause (avyākṛta), which is distinct from the manifest (sat), they discern the source."

Shiva Purana states Brahma ejaculated seeing the face of Shiva's wife,

Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Sati Khanda 2, chapter 19, verses 26-28 "Then, O sage, afflicted by the cupid and delighted in the heart of hearts, I [Brahma] lifted her veil and stared into the face of Sati. I looked at the face of Sati many a time. I was helpless in curbing the onset of a sensuous organism. Four drops of my semen virile got displaced and fell on the ground like drops of dew as a result of staring into her face.",

Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Parvati Khaṇḍa 3, chapter 49, verses 3-11 "Then according to the worldly convention, Pārvatī and Śiva performed the circumambulation round the fire, O dear. The husband of Pārvatī exhibited a wonderful feat. O celestial sage, listen to that. I shall mention it out of love for you. On that occasion, deluded by Śiva's power of illusion I stared at the feet of the goddess as well as the crescentshaped nails. On seeing them, O celestial sage, I became overwhelmed by passion. My mind was greatly disturbed. Deluded by the cupid I stared at her limbs frequently. Then, immediately after staring at them, my semen dropped on the ground. I, the grandfather, was ashamed by the emission of my semen. O sage, I pressed the penis secretly with my feet. O Nārada, on coming to know of it, the great God Śiva became furious. He wanted to kill me immediately because I was overwhelmed by lust. O Nārada, there was great hue and cry everywhere. All the people trembled. Even Viṣṇu, the sustainer of the universe, was terrified. O sage, then Viṣṇu and other gods eulogised Śiva who was blazing furiously and who attempted to kill me."

The real meaning here should be understood as Brahm-Maya or Purusha – Prakriti are Shiva and Parvati respectively . Their marriage celebration and union represents the creation of the universe . Surya Bhagvan [Sun] who is the architect of this creation should be understood here as Brahma . In Vedas Surya Bhagvan[Sun] is undertood as the architect of the creation

1- सूर्य आत्मा जगतस्तस्थुषश्च – Yajur Veda 7/42

2- जापतिः सविता भूत्वा प्रजा असृजत । (Taittriya 1/6/4/1)

That is, Surya is the soul of the movable and immovable world and Prajapati created the people by becoming Surya.

So, at the beginning of the creation, when the union of Purush [Shiva] and Prakriti [Parvati] began to take place, at that time, according to "पद्भ्यां भूमिः (Yajur Veda 31.13), seeing the चरणस्थानीया भूमि of Prakriti [Parvati] , the Tejas of Brahma in the form of the Sun was scattered and the same Tejas got spread in the from of condensed igneous vapor due to the coordination of many divine powers, which even today animates all living beings by transforming into the life-giving element of Oxygen . This is the meaning of the birth of बालखिल्यों in Vedas and Puranas . Current science reveals the only life-giving air as the basis of life and the basis of this xygenation depends only on sunlight. That is why in both the Vedas and the Puranas, the close relationship of the बालखिल्यों with the Sun has been revealed. Such as- उद्यन्नु खलु वा आदित्यः सर्वाणि भूतानि प्राणयति तस्मादेनं प्राण इत्याचक्षते । (ऐतरेय 5/31] – That is, the Rising Sun gives Prana [Life] to all living beings, hence the Sun is called Prana . It is described in Shatapatha Brahmana that all the Ishtikkas named बालखिल्यों who are worshiped in the Yagya are representations of Prana life itself The main meaning of this narrative is to present the science of life, which has been briefly expressed and explained here

वास्तविक भाव

ब्रह्म-माता अथवा पुरुष और प्रकृति ही यहाँ शिव और गौरी समझने चाहिये। इनका विवाह = ऐक्य = मिथुनीभाव सृष्टि रचना का उपलक्षण है, और इस रचना कार्य के सूत्रधार सूर्य भगवान् को ही यहाँ ब्रह्मा समझना चाहिए। वेदों में सूर्य भगवान् को सृष्टिकार्य का सर्वस्व माना है, यथा—

(क) सूर्य आत्मा जगतस्तस्थुषश्च। (यजु० ७। ४२)
(ख) प्रजापतिः सविता भूत्वा प्रजा असृजत।
(तैत्तरीय १। ६। ४। १)

अर्थात्—(क) सूर्य जंगम और स्थावर जगत् का आत्मा है (ख) प्रजापति ने सूर्य बनकर प्रजा की रचना की।

जो सृष्टि के आरम्भ में जब पुरुष और प्रकृति का मिथुनीभाव सम्पन्न होने लगा उस समय 'पद्भ्यां भूमिः' (यजु ३१। १३) के अनुसार प्रकृति की चरणस्थानीया भूमि को देखकर सूर्य रूप ब्रह्मा का तेज छिटक पड़ा और वही तेज अनेक दिव्य शक्तियों के तारतम्य से घनीभूत आग्नेय कण में व्याप्त हो गया, जो कि अभी तक भी प्रकाशक सूर्यरश्मियों द्वारा जीवमात्र को प्राणप्रद तत्त्व (Oxygen) के रूप में परिणत होकर अनुप्राणित करता है। यही बालखिल्यों की उत्पत्ति का तात्पर्य है।

वर्तमान विज्ञान (Modern science) अभी का प्रचार एक मात्र प्राणप्रद वायु को प्रकट करता है और इस आक्सिजन का आधार केवल सूर्यरश्मियों पर अवलम्बित है। इसीलिये वेदों और पुराणों दोनों में भी प्राणों अथवा बालखिल्यों का सूर्य के साथ घनिष्ठ सम्बन्ध प्रकट किया गया है। यथा—

उद्यन्नु खलु वा आदित्यः सर्वाणि भूतानि प्राणयति तस्मादेनं प्राण इत्याचक्षते। (ऐतरेय ५। ३१)

अर्थात्—उदित होता हुआ सूर्य समस्त प्राणियों को प्राण दान देता है इसलिए सूर्य को प्राण कहते हैं।

शतपथ ब्राह्मण में वर्णन आता है कि यज्ञ में बालखिल्य नामक जिन इष्टिकाओं का उपधान किया जाता है वे सब प्राणों की ही प्रतिनिधि भूत प्रतिमाएं हैं।

Brahma discharged his semen on seeing the toe of Parvati!,

Brahma Purana 4.3.17-22
During the course of touching the slab, Siva urged by Visnu, touched the toe of the right foot of the goddess with his hand. Performing the sacrifice there near Siva, I saw her. My semen got ejaculated due to my evil mind on seeing the toe. In the entire three worlds, who is not deceived by Cupid? Defiled and ashamed, I scattered the ejaculated semen in small droplets. From the minute particles of my semen the Valakhi- lyas" were born. Then there was a great commotion caused by Devas. Overwhelmed by shame, I stood up from my seat and started. Even as Devas watched silently, O Nárada, I went ahead. On seeing me go, Mahâdeva spoke to Nandin: Siva said: Call Brahma here. I shall make him free from sin.

The Gautamī-māhātmya (chaps. 70-175), which was certainly composed by somebody living about the river Godāvarī, is a distinct work (purāṇam) by itself. It is called a 'highly meritorious Purāṇa' declared by Brahmā (cf. Br 175, 78 and 87). The place which it occupies in the Brahma-p. was not meant for it, because it divides the chapters on Puruṣottamakṣetra-māhātmya. The way in which chap. 176 opens, shows that it immediately followed chap. 69. Moreover, in chap. 176 there is no hint from which we may conclude that the Māhātmya was there. In Br 176. 8 the sages refer to Bhāradvāja (chap. [illegible]) and Puruṣottama-kṣetra, of which, they say, Vyāsa told them elaborately, but they do not mention the Gautamī-māhātmya which also precedes chap. 176 in our edition. So, it is clear that the Māhātmya was not originally there. In the Venk. ed. it is placed at the end. This Māhātmya was attached to the Brahma-p. later than the chapters on Orissa, for the Nāradīya-p. (I. 92), which gives the contents of the present [illegible] with a discussion of Sāṃkhya and Yoga (234–245).

The Gautamīmāhātmya, also called Godāvarīmāhātmya, of which there exist several separate manuscripts[illegible] and which has also been separately edited,[illegible] calls itself a purāṇa,[illegible] and must originally have been a distinct book. It interrupts the section on Puruṣottamakṣetra, and has been inserted exactly in the middle of the Brahma.[illegible] It describes the sacred places along the Godāvarī river.

Refutation-

Rc Hazra in his book Puranic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs page no 120 said that the chapters after chapter 43 in Shristi khanda (including chapter 55) are later interpolations into Padma Purana and was composed likely after the Satanic Islamic Muhammadans established their rule in India . So this chapter is a later interpolation and not part of Padma Purana originally

120 Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs [CH

(5) SṚṢṬI-KHAṆḌA.*. This Khaṇḍa, which is assigned the fifth place in our edition, is really the first of the set. This position of the Khaṇḍa is betrayed by the mode of its beginning as well as by the sequence and contents of the five Parvans given in chap. 1.

This Khaṇḍa, as we have it now, can be rightly divided into two parts:

(1) chaps. 1-43 (verses 1-97)

and (2) chaps. 43 (verses 98 ff.) to the end.

It will be seen hereinafter that the chapters of the second part were added to the Sṛṣṭi-kh. after the Muhammadans had established kingdoms in India. Hence the chapters of the first part, which are of earlier date, are examined first.

* The Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa in Bengal Mss consists only of 46 (or according to Aufrecht, 45) chapters. The corresponding chapters in a Bengal Ms. (No. 1661, D. U. Mss Lib.) of this Khaṇḍa and the AnSS ed. are given below:

upon them, it is difficult to say anything about the lower limit.

Chapters 48 (verses 98 ff.) to the end, which, according to our division, form the second part of the work, are not found in the Bengal Mss. So their comparatively late date can be well understood. These chapters were written and added to the Sṛṣṭi-kh. after the Muhammadans had established kingdoms in India. These foreigners have been called kings[33] and scornfully described more than once under the names 'Turuska', 'Mleccha' and 'Yavana'[34]. The descriptions are undoubtedly aimed at the Muhammadans who 'polluted' the society and the land of the Hindus by their contact and slaughter of cows. Hence the date of composition of this part of the Sṛṣṭi-kh. can by no means be placed earlier than 1000 A.D. Such a late date is supported by the contents also, which are replete with Tantric elements. The Agamas have many times been mentioned as authorities along with the Vedas and the Purāṇas; the Tulasī plant has been glorified in highly extravagant language; and so on. As Hemādri quotes

* In connection with the quotations the following stories of the Padma-p. have been mentioned in the Adbhutasāgara:

Even Geeta Press Gorakhpur padma Purana has only 49 Chapters and no 55th chapter exists

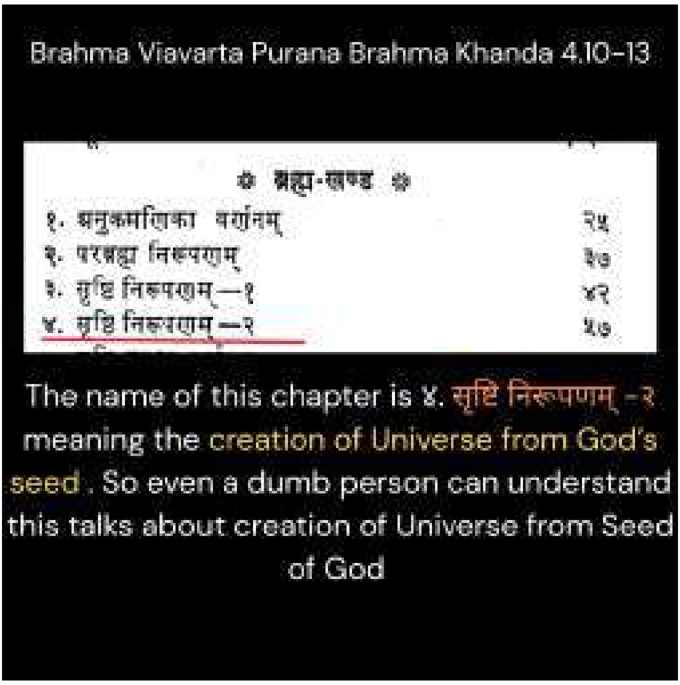
Brahma discharged his semen on seeing Rati with lust,

Brahma Viavarta Purana Brahma Khanda 4.10-13
Both of them bowed in reverence to lord Krishna and thereafter they took their seats over the gem-studded thrones. Kamadeva carried a bow of flowers and the arrows which were known as Marana, Stambhana, Jrmbhana, Soçana and Unmadana. In order to test the effectiveness of his arrows, Kamadeva shot all the five arrows at the same time. As a result of this all the people became passionate. Finding Rati there, the Semen of Brahmä fell but Brahma, the best of the vogis, concealed the same with his costumes out of shame

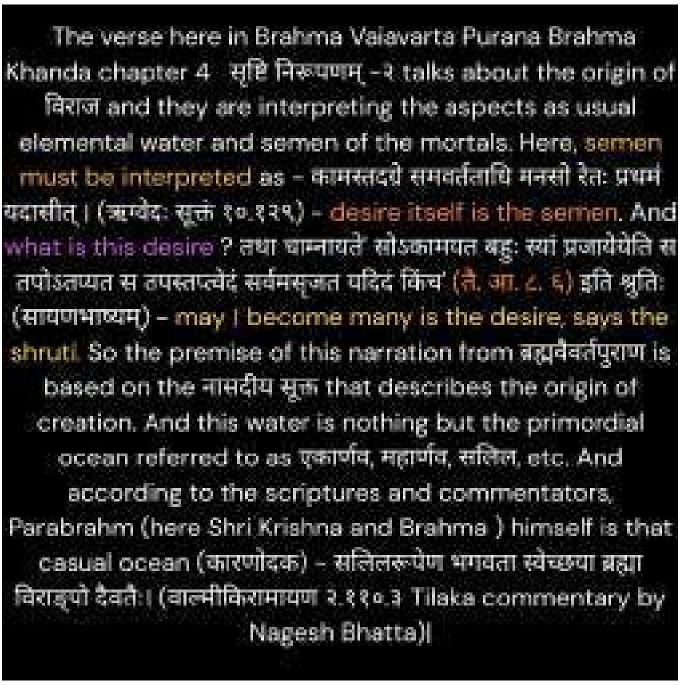
Refutation-

Brahma Viavarta Purana Brahma Khanda 4.10-13 The name of this chapter is ४. सृष्टि निरूपणम् -२ meaning the creation of Universe from God's seed . So even a dumb person can understand this talks about creation of Universe from Seed of God



The verse here in Brahma Vaiavarta Purana Brahma Khanda chapter 4 सृष्टि निरूपणम् -२ talks about the origin of विराज and they are interpreting the aspects as usual elemental water and semen of the mortals. Here, semen must be interpreted as – कामस्तदग्रे समवर्तताधि मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत् । (ऋग्वेदः सूक्तं १०.१२९) – desire itself is the semen. And what is this desire ? तथा चाम्नायते' सोऽकामयत बहुः स्यां प्रजायेयेति स तपोऽतप्यत स तपस्तप्त्वेदं सर्वमसृजत यदिदं किंच' (तै. आ. ८. ६) इति श्रुतिः (सायणभाष्यम्) – may I become many is the desire, says the shruti. So the premise of this narration from ब्रह्मवैवर्तपुराण is based on the नासदीय सूक्त that describes the origin of creation. And this water is nothing but the primordial ocean referred to as एकार्णव, महार्णव, सलिल, etc. And according to the scriptures and commentators,

Parabrahm (here Shri Krishna and Brahma) himself is that casual ocean (कारणोदक) – सलिलरूपेण भगवता स्वेच्छया ब्रह्मा विराड्पो दैवतैः। (वाल्मीकिरामायण २.११०.३ Tilaka commentary by Nagesh Bhatta)।



Rig Veda Nasadiya Sukta Mantra 4 says that the desire to reate universe is only the seed (semen of God)

परमेश्वर के मन में सबसे पहले सृष्टिरचना की इच्छा उत्पन्न हुई. वही सबसे पहले मन में सृष्टि का बीज बनी. विद्वानों ने बुद्धि से हदय में विचार किया एवं असत् में सत् के कारण को खोजा. (४)

The desire to create the universe first arose in God's mind. That very first seed of the universe was formed in his mind. Scholars contemplated with their intellect in their hearts and searched for the reason of truth in untruth.

ननूक्तरीत्या यदीश्वरस्य पर्यालोचनं जगतः पुनरुत्पत्तौ कारणं तदेव किंनिबन्धनमित्यत आह कामस्तदग्र इति । "अग्रे अस्य विकारजातस्य सृष्टेः प्रागवस्थायां परमेश्वरस्य मनसि "कामः "समवर्तत सम्यगजायत । सिसृक्षा जातेत्यर्थः । ईश्वरस्य सिसृक्षा वा किंहेतुकेत्यत आह मनस इति । "मनसः अन्तःकरणस्य संबन्धि वासनाशेषेण मायायां विलीनेऽन्तःकरणे समवेतम् । सामान्यापेक्षमेकवचनम् । सर्वप्राण्यन्तःकरणेषु समवेतमित्यर्थः । एतेनात्मनो गुणाधारत्वं प्रत्याख्यातम् । तादृशं "रेतः भाविनः प्रपञ्चस्य बीजभूतं "प्रथमम् अतीते कल्पे प्राणिभिः कृतं पुण्यात्मकं कर्म "यत् यतः कारणात् सृष्टिसमये "आसीत् अभवत् । भूष्णु वर्धिष्णवजायत परिपक्वं सत् फलोन्मुखमासीदित्यर्थः । तत्ततो हेतोः फलप्रदस्य सर्वसाक्षिणः कर्माध्यक्षस्य परमेश्वरस्य मनसि सिसृक्षा अजायतेत्यर्थः । तस्यां च जातायां स्रष्टव्यं पर्यालोच्य ततः सर्वं जगत् सृजति । तथा चाम्नायते -' सोऽकामयत बहुः स्यां प्रजायेयेति स तपोऽतप्यत स तपस्तप्त्वेदं सर्वमसृजत यदिदं किंच ' (तै. आ. ८. ६) इति श्रुतिः । आत्मनेत्थमवगमितेऽर्थे विद्वदनुभवमप्यनुग्राहकत्वेन प्रमाणयति सत इति । "सतः सत्त्वेन इदानीमनुभूयमानस्य सर्वस्य जगतः "बन्धुं बन्धकं हेतुभूतं कल्पान्तरे प्राण्यनुष्ठितं कर्मसमूहं "कवयः क्रान्तदर्शना अतीतानागतवर्तमानाभिज्ञा योगिनः "हृदि हृदये निरुद्धया "मनीषा मनीषया बुद्ध्या । ' सुपां सुलुक्०' इति तृतीयाया लुक् । "प्रतीष्य विचार्य । ' अन्येषामपि' इति सांहितिको दीर्घः । "असति सद्विलक्षणेऽव्याकृते कारणे "निरविन्दन् निष्कृष्यालभन्त । विविच्याजानन्नित्यर्थः ।।

Now, if according to the Nānūkta (interpretive method), we consider that the will or contemplation (paryālocanam) of the Lord (Īśvara) is the cause of the creation of the world, then one might ask: "What is the basis or cause of that will?" To answer this, it is said: "Kāmaḥ tad agre" — "Desire existed in the beginning."

That is, before the manifestation of this entire world of modifications (vikāra-jāta), in the primordial state (prāg-avasthā), desire (kāmaḥ) arose in the mind (manas) of the Supreme Lord (Parameśvara). It means: the urge to create (sṛṣṭi-kāmanā) was born in Him.

Now, one might question: "What was the cause of this creative urge in the Lord?"
To this, it is answered: "From the mind" (manasaḥ).

That is, from the internal faculty (antaḥkaraṇa) — in which the latent impressions (vāsanās) were merged within Māyā — the mind took form. The word is singular (manasaḥ), though it refers to all minds collectively, indicating the general principle. Thus, it means that desire arose in the universal mind, merged in Māyā, before manifestation.

By this, the idea that the Ātman (Self) is the substratum of qualities (guṇas) is refuted.

Such a "desire" (kāmaḥ) becomes the seed (bīja) of the future projection of the universe — it is based upon the puṇya (virtuous) actions performed by beings in a previous cosmic cycle (kalpa). That karma (yat) becomes the cause (kāraṇāt) at the time of creation (sṛṣṭi-samaya).

This karma becomes bhūṣṇu — powerful, and vardhiṣṇu — ever-growing; that is, it becomes ripe and ready to bear fruit.

Therefore, due to this cause — the karmic impressions — the Lord (karma-adhyakṣaḥ, the supervisor of karma, and sarva-sākṣī, the witness of all) develops the desire to create. In His mind, the will to manifest arises.

Having formed this intention (sṛṣṭikāmanā), He contemplates on what to create — and then creates the entire universe.

This is also confirmed in the scripture (āmnāya):

"So'kāmayata – bahu syām prajāyeyeti. Sa tapo'tapyata, sa tapas taptvā idaṁ sarvam asṛjata yad idaṁ kiñca" (Taittirīya Āraṇyaka 8.6)
— "He desired: 'May I become many, may I be born.' He performed tapas (austerity), and having done so, He created all this — whatever exists."

Having thus understood this process, it is further supported by the experience of the wise (vidvat-anubhava), which acts as a further means of valid knowledge (pramāṇa) due to its grace (anugrahakatva).

Now, this entire world (jagat) — experienced now (idānīm anubhūyamānasya) — originates from sat (Being), and the wise seers (kavayaḥ) who are knowers of the three times (past, present, future) and who possess deep yogic insight (krānta-darśanāḥ) — they recognize in their hearts (hṛdi) by concentrated intellect (manīṣayā), that:

The bond or cause (bandhuḥ) of this current world is the collection of karmas performed by beings in previous cycles — karmas that remain even when the subtle cause (avyākṛta) — the unmanifest — exists in a dormant (asat) state distinct from the manifest (sat).

Thus, they discover (niravindan) — that is, extract nd realize — the cause by deliberation (pratīṣya), by internal discrimination.

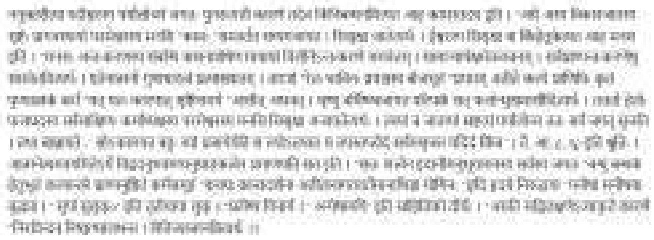
The term “asati sad-vilakṣaṇe avyākṛte kāraṇe niravindan” — means: “In the unmanifest cause (avyākṛta), which is distinct from the manifest (sat), they discern the source.”

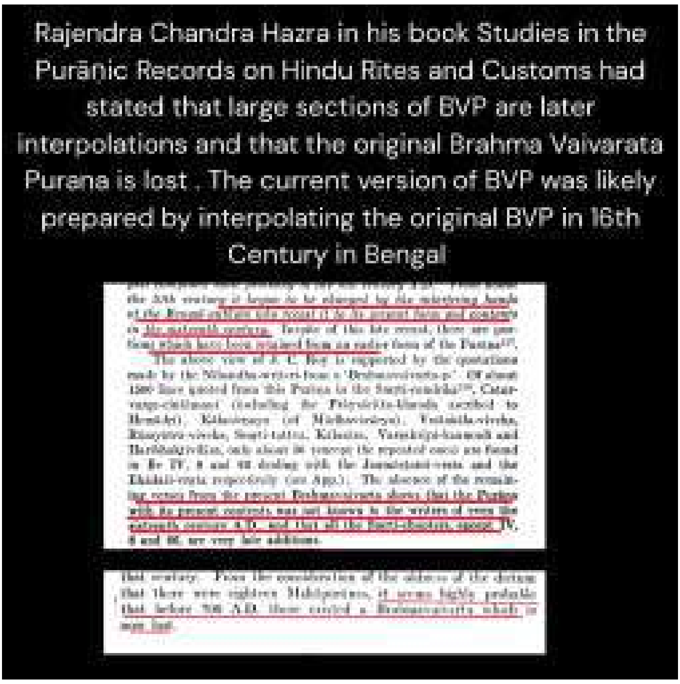


Allegations-

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 131.2-10 Subsequently at that place nymphs who had sprung out of the body of Visnu and who were the digits of Visnu began to dance and chant Visnu’s hymns in a melodious tone. The paternal grandfather Brahma, observing their hard buttocks, thick spherical breasts and smiling lotus faces, was excited with passion. He could not control his heart; his semen was discharged; and out of shame he concealed it on the ground with his cloth. O Saunaka, after the music was over, he threw the semen along with the cloth rendered hot by lust into the sea of milk.” Tr. Rajendra Nath Sen

Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata

प्रजापति के वंश का वर्णन

ऋषियों ने पूछा- 'हे सत्तम! पूर्वकाल में वे सप्तर्षिगण किस प्रकार मानसिक संकल्प से उत्पन्न हुए ? और किस प्रकार ब्रह्मा के पुत्र माने गये इस वृत्तान्त को हमें बतलाइये । ऋषियों की ऐसी बातें सुनकर पुराणों के विशेषज्ञ महातेजस्वी सूत ने उस शुभ कथा को बतलाया ।। १५ ।।

The sages asked, "O best one! In ancient times, how did those Seven Sages (Saptarṣis) come into being through mental resolve, and in what manner were they regarded as the sons of Brahmā? Please tell us this account." Hearing the words of the sages, the highly radiant Sūta, an expert in the Purāṇas, narrated that auspicious story. (15)

किस प्रकार स्वायंभुव मन्वन्तर में वे सप्तर्षिगण सिद्धि को प्राप्त हुए और फिर वैवस्वत मन्वन्तर में महादेव के शाप से अपनी सिद्धिदात्री तपस्या से च्युत हुए और मर्त्यलोक में आकर उत्पन्न हुए – यह मैं कहता हूँ। ये सप्तर्षिगण जनलोक में एक बार जन्म लेते हैं। जनलोक में आकर उन महाभाग्यशाली सप्तर्षियों ने आपस में यह सलाह की और एक-दूसरे से कहा कि वरुण यज्ञ के समाप्त हो जाने पर चाक्षुष मन्वन्तर में हम सभी पितामह ब्रह्मा जी के आत्मज होंगे, उस समय पुनः हमारा कल्याण होगा ।। १६-१९ ॥
स्वायंभुव मन्वन्तर में सत्य आचरण के लिए वे महर्षिगण शिव द्वारा अभिशप्त किये गये थे और पुनः जन्म धारणकर जनलोक से स्वर्गलोक को गये थे। देव के महान् यज्ञ में वरुण का शरीर धारण कर सन्तानोत्पत्ति की कामना से अपने वीर्य को अग्नि में हवन करते समय ब्रह्मा से ऋषियों का द्वितीय बार प्रादुर्भाव हुआ यह हम लोगों ने सुना है। भृगु, अङ्गिरा, मरीचि, पुलस्त्य, पुलह, क्रतु, अत्रि और वसिष्ठ – ये आठ ब्रह्मा के पुत्र हैं । २०-२२ ॥

I shall now tell you how, in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara, those Seven Sages attained perfection, and then, in the Vaivasvata Manvantara, by the curse of Mahādeva, were deprived of their perfection-granting austerities, descended to the mortal world, and were born again. These Seven Sages take birth once in the world of Jana-loka.

Coming to Jana-loka, those greatly fortunate Saptarṣis consulted among themselves and said to one another: "After the completion of Varuṇa's sacrifice, in the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara, we shall all be the self-born sons of Grandfather Brahmā. At that time, our welfare will again be secured." (16–19)

In the Svāyambhuva Manvantara, for upholding righteous conduct, those great sages were cursed by Śiva, and after taking birth again, went from Jana-loka to Svarga-loka. During the great sacrifice of the gods, when assuming the form of Varuṇa and desirous of offspring, they offered their seed into the fire as an oblation—at that time, the sages had their second manifestation from Brahmā. This we have heard.

Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, Marīci, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Atri, and Vasiṣṭha—these eight are the sons of Brahmā. (20–22)

अतिघोर कृत्या (हत्या) आदि विधियों से तथा प्रत्यङ्गिरस आदि आभिचारिक प्रयोगों से युक्त होकर एक ही सिर में शरीर धारणकर उपस्थित था। इन सबों के अतिरिक्त लक्षण, स्वर, स्तोभ, निरुक्त, स्वरों की भक्ति आश्रयस्वरूप वषट्कार, निग्रह, ग्रह आदि भी उपस्थित थे। दीप्ता, दीप्त, इला, देवी, सभी दिशाएँ, विदिशाएँ, दिक्पालगण, देवकन्याएँ, देवपत्नियाँ, मातायें तथा आयु- ये सब भी स्वरूप धारण कर वरुण का रूप धारण करने वाले देव के अग्नि मुख में हवन करते समय उपस्थित रहे ।। २७-२९ ॥
स्वयंभू ब्रह्म जी का वीर्य पृथ्वी पर स्खलित हो गया। ब्रह्मर्षि के भाव से प्रभावित निश्चित विधान के कारण पितामह ने पृथ्वी पर स्खलित अपने वीर्य को घृत की भाँति खुवा पर रखकर मन्त्रों का विधिवत् उच्चारणकर हवन कर दिया। प्रजापति ने इस प्रकार अनेक जीव समूहों की सृष्टि की लोक में परम तेजोमय, किन्तु पृथ्वी पर गिर पड़ने के कारण कुछ क्षीण तेजवाले उस वीर्य से सत्त्वगुण, रजोगुण एवं तमोगुणमय सृष्टि उत्पन्न हुई। इन उपर्युक्त तीनों गुणों से सम्पन्न वह तेज आकाशमण्डल में देदीप्यमान हुआ । तमोगुणमय तेजस्विता के कारण सभी जीवसमूह उत्पन्न हुए ।। ३१-३४ ।।
जिस समय ब्रह्मा ने घृत के पात्र में अपने वीर्य को लेकर अग्नि में हवन किया उस समय उनके कर्मज पुत्रों की उत्पत्ति हुई । अग्नि में वीर्य के हवन कर देने पर महर्षियों का प्रादुर्भाव हुआ। सातों ऋषियों के शरीर उज्ज्वल एवं देदीप्यमान थे, तथा बालकों के सभी गुण उनमें पाये जाते थे। पहली बार अग्नि में वीर्य के हवन करने पर लपटों से कवि (भृगु) निकले। इस प्रकार ज्वाला का भेदनकर निकलते हुए कवि को देखकर हिरण्यगर्भब्रह्मा ने कहा, यतः अग्नि ज्वाला से प्रकट होते समय आपने 'भृगु' इस प्रकार का उच्चारण किया है, अतः उनका नाम भी भृगु हुआ ॥ ३५-३७ ॥
इस प्रकार अग्नि ज्वाला का भेदनकर प्रादुर्भूत होनेवाले उस ब्रह्मर्षि को देखकर महादेव ने कहा- प्रभो ! पुत्र प्राप्ति की कामना से मैं दीक्षा ग्रहण कर इस यज्ञ को कर रहा था, अतः यह ब्रह्मर्षि मेरा पुत्र हो । जब भृगु मेरा ही पुत्र हो-ऐसा शिव जी प्रकट किया ।। ३८ ॥

In that great sacrifice of Varuṇa, all the gods were assembled. All the components of the sacrifice and the deity embodying the exclamation vaṣaṭ were present there in embodied form. There were thousands of personified forms of the Sāma and Yajur Vedas, and the Ṛgveda, adorned with the arrangement of padakrama, was also manifest there.

The Yajurveda, with its mouth radiant in the form of the sacred syllable "Oṁ," combined with hymns (sūktas), brāhmaṇas, and mantra sections used in sacrificial rites, and enriched with metrical patterns (vṛtta), shone splendidly. The Sāmaveda, adorned with metrical patterns and accompanied by Viśvāvasu and other Gandharvas, was resplendent, equipped with all its musical instruments and all its chantable verses placed in the forefront. (23–26)

The fierce goddess Kṛtyā (personification of destructive acts such as killing), together with abhichāra rites like Pratyangiras, appeared with a single head and a body, all in embodied form. Along with them were also present the aspects of phonetics (lakṣaṇa), tonal accents (svara), choral fillers (stobha), etymology (nirukta), the vaṣaṭ-call as the refuge of intonation devotion, as well as elements like restraint (nigraha) and grasp (graha). Also present were the shining goddesses Dīptā and Dīptī, the goddess Ilā, the quarters (diśas), the intermediate directions (vidiśas), the guardians of the quarters (dikpālas), divine maidens, wives of the gods, mothers, and the goddess of life-span (Āyus). All of these, in their respective forms, were present when the deity who had assumed the form of Varuṇa was offering oblations into the fire. (27–29)

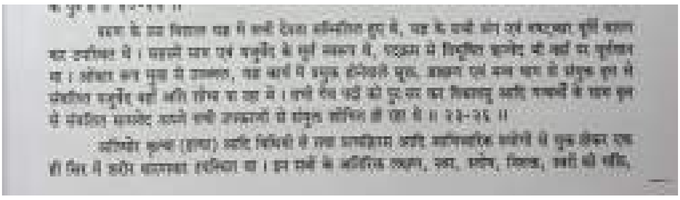
The seed of the self-born Brahmā fell to the earth. Influenced by the mood of a Brahmarṣi and by the fixed sacrificial procedure, the Grandfather (Pitāmaha) took his seed, which had fallen on the earth, placed it on the sacrificial ladle (khūvā) as if it were ghee, and, reciting the mantras in the proper manner, offered it into the fire.

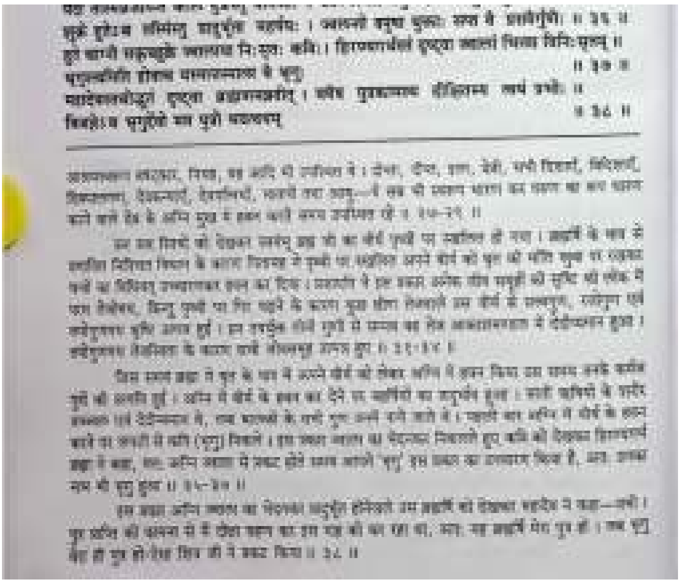
From that act, Prajāpati created numerous groups of living beings. From that seed, luminous yet somewhat diminished in radiance because it had fallen on the earth, arose a creation consisting of the three qualities—sattva, rajas, and tamas. That brilliance, possessing these three qualities, shone forth in the heavens. Because of its tāmasika radiance, all the various classes of beings were produced. (31–34)

When Brahmā took his seed in a vessel of ghee and offered it into the fire, his sons born of action (karmaja-putras) came forth. Upon the oblation of the seed into the fire, the great sages appeared. The bodies of the seven sages were bright and radiant, possessing all the attributes of childhood.

At the first oblation of the seed into the fire, the sage Kavi (Bhṛgu) emerged from the flames. Seeing Kavi emerge in this way, breaking through the fire's blaze, Hiraṇyagarbha Brahmā said, "Since you uttered the word 'Bhṛgu' at the moment you appeared from the blaze of fire, therefore your name shall be Bhṛgu." (35–37)

Thus, seeing that Brahmarṣi, who had emerged breaking through the fire's flames, Mahādeva said, "O Lord! I undertook this sacrifice, having received the vow, for the sake of obtaining a son. Therefore, let this Brahmarṣi be my son." In this way, Śiva declared that Bhṛgu was his very own son. (38)





तदनन्तर स्वयंभू ने कहा कि-ऐसा ही होगा। तब शिव ने भृगु को अपने पुत्र रूप में स्वीकार किया । इसी कारणवश भृगु गोत्र में उत्पन्न होने वाले वरुण वंशीय कहलाते हैं। वे प्रभु भृगु भगवान् शिव की सन्तान हुए । तदनन्तर भगवान् ब्रह्मा ने पुनः द्वितीय बार वीर्य को यज्ञाग्नि के अंगार के ऊपर आहुति डाला जिससे उन अंगारों पर अङ्गों-प्रत्यङ्गों समेत अङ्गिरा ऋषि प्रादुर्भूत हुए ॥ ३८-४० ॥
लम्बे कशों के साथ उत्पन्न होने के कारण पुलह नाम प्रसिद्ध हुआ। वसु (अन्नादि सामग्री) के मध्य से उत्पन्न होने के कारण समस्त वसुधा का आश्रयभूत वसुमान् नाम हुआ। तत्त्वों के जाननेवाले ब्रह्मवादी लोग उसे वशिष्ठ नाम से पुकारते है। ये ब्रह्मा के छह मानसिक पुत्र महर्षि कहे गये हैं ।॥ ४६-४७ ।।
ये सब-के-सब लोक की सन्तान वृद्धि करने वाले हैं, और इन्हीं लोगों ने प्रजाओं की वृद्धि की है। इसी कारण ये ब्रह्मा के पुत्र कहे गये हैं। दूसरे पितर नामक लोकविख्यात ऋषिगण भी उत्पन्न हुए। वे लोकप्रसिद्ध सात

Then Svayambhū (Brahmā) said, "So it shall be." Thereupon Śiva accepted Bhṛgu as his own son. For this reason, those born in the Bhṛgu lineage are called of the Varuṇa line. Thus, Lord Bhṛgu became the son of Lord Śiva.

After that, Lord Brahmā again, for the second time, offered his seed into the embers of the sacrificial fire, from which, upon those embers, the sage Aṅgiras appeared, complete with limbs and body. (38–40)

Seeing this fresh manifestation of Brahmā, Agni said, "O Brahman, I had carried your seed; therefore, let this second son be mine." Brahmā, seated in the assembly as the chief, approved Agni's request, saying, "So be it." For this reason, those of the Aṅgiras lineage are also called of the Agni lineage—thus have we heard.

Then, the Creator of the worlds, Brahmā, offered his seed into the fire six more times, from which six Brāhmaṇas are said to have been born. From the rays (marīci) of the fire, the first-born was the son named Marīci. Because in that sacrifice (kratu) yet another, the fourth son, was produced, he was named Kratu. Saying "I am the third," and because yet another, the fifth son, was produced, he became famous by the name Atri. Another son, due to his sharp hair, was remembered as Pulastya. (41–45)

Another, born with long hairs, became famous as Pulaha. One, born in the midst of vasu (materials such as food, etc.), and serving as the support of the entire earth (vasudhā), was named Vasumān. The knowers of truth, the Brahmavādins, call him Vasiṣṭha. These six great sages are said to be the mental sons of Brahmā. (46–47)

All of them were propagators of progeny in the worlds, and it is they who caused the increase of beings. For this reason, they are called sons of Brahmā. Another group of world-renowned sages, known as the Pitṛs ("Forefathers"), was also born

In Vāyu Purāṇa 2.4.29–31, we learn that the narrative concerns the birth of the Prajāpatis and the Seven Ṛṣis. To bring them forth and initiate creation, Brahmā Deva released his powerful tejas—the creative energy inherent in him—which produced the fourfold categories of living beings. This tejas was then offered as a homa in the yajña, resulting in the manifestation of the Seven Sages and the Prajāpatis.

As confirmed in Śrīmad Bhāgavatam, 10th Skandha, Chapter 71, Verse 8, Brahmā Deva is but an instrument in the creation of living beings, all of whom are ultimately born of Brahman (Śrī Hari).

You are the formless Time-spirit who, as the Supreme Lord, are the real cause of the creation and destruction of the universe, while gods Brahmā and Rudra are mere instruments. So Bhima will be the mere instrumental cause of killing Jarā-sandha while (as a matter of fact) you are the real slayer

8. You are the formless Time-spirit who, as the Supreme Lord, are the real cause of the creation and destruction of the universe, while gods Brahmā and Rudra are mere instruments. So Bhima will be the mere instrumental cause of killing Jarā-sandha while (as a matter of fact) you are the real slayer.

Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Adhyāya 85, Verses 102–104, makes it clear that the tejas of Brahmā Deva is not mortal human semen, but the triguṇātmaka creative energy of Brahmā. This divine power, composed of sattva, rajas, and tamas, generates various forms of living beings according to the predominance of each quality.

शक्तिशाली ब्रह्माजीने उस त्रिगुणात्मक वीर्यसे चतुर्विध प्राणिसमुदायको जन्म दिया। उनके वीर्यका जो रजोमय अंश था, उससे जगत्में तैजस प्रवृत्तिप्रधान जंगम प्राणियोंकी उत्पत्ति हुई ।। १०२ ।।

तमोमय अंशसे तामस पदार्थ – स्थावर वृक्ष आदि प्रकट हुए और जो सात्त्विक अंश था, वह राजस और तामस दोनोंमें अन्तर्भूत हो गया। वह सत्त्वगुण अर्थात् प्रकाशस्वरूपा बुद्धिका नित्यस्वरूप है और आकाश आदि सम्पूर्ण विश्व भी उस बुद्धिका कार्य होनेसे उसका ही स्वरूप है

अतः सम्पूर्ण भूतोंमें जो सत्त्वगुण तथा उत्तम तेज है, वह प्रजापतिके उस शुक्रसे ही प्रकट हुआ है। प्रभो ! ब्रह्माजीके वीर्यकी जब अग्निमें आहुति दी गयी तब उससे तीन शरीरधारी पुरुष उत्पन्न हुए, जो अपने-अपने कारणजनित गुणोंसे सम्पन्न थे ।। १०४३

The powerful Brahma, through his threefold Trigunatmaka Tejas (creative energy), gave birth to the fourfold categories of living beings. From the rajas-dominant portion of his virya, the tejas-filled and activity-oriented mobile beings (creatures that move) came into existence in the world.

From the tamas-dominated portion (of Brahma's Tejas), tamasic entities—such as immobile beings like trees and other stationary forms—manifested. The sattvic portion, however, became interwoven into both the rajas and tamas. This sattva guna, which is the essence of light and consciousness (buddhi), is eternal in nature. Furthermore, the entire cosmos—comprising space (akasha) and all elements—is a manifestation of that buddhi, and thus, an expression of that very sattvic essence.

Therefore, O Lord, the sattva guna and the supreme radiance present in all beings have originated from that very Tejas of Brahma

When Brahma's Tejas (creative essence) was offered into the fire as an oblation, three embodied beings (shariradhari purushas) emerged from it. Each of them was endowed with qualities arising from the specific guna (fundamental trait) that had caused their creation.

THE TRUE CHARACTER OF BRAHMA JI FROM SRIMAD BHAGAVATAM

Brahma Ji is the master of all his senses, never speaks falsehood, never strays from the righteous path, and remains ever devoted to penance and austerities.

Srimad Bhagvatam 2/6/32-35

प्यारे नारद ! मैं प्रेमपूर्ण एवं उत्कण्ठित हृदयसे भगवान्के स्मरणमें मग्न रहता हूँ, इसीसे मेरी वाणी कभी असत्य होती नहीं दीखती, मेरा मन कभी असत्य संकल्प नहीं करता और मेरी इन्द्रियाँ भी कभी मर्यादाका उल्लंघन करके कुमार्गमें नहीं जातीं ।। ३३ ।। मैं वेदमूर्ति हूँ, मेरा जीवन तपस्यामय है, बड़े-बड़े प्रजापति मेरी वन्दना करते हैं और मैं उनका स्वामी पहले मैंने बड़ी निष्ठासे योगका सर्वांग अनुष्ठान किया था

Dear Nārada! With a heart full of love and longing, I remain absorbed in the remembrance of the Lord.
Because of this, my speech never appears to be false, my mind never forms false resolves, and my senses never violate propriety by straying onto the wrong path. (33)
I am the embodiment of the Vedas; my life is filled with austerity.
Great Prajāpatis offer me their reverence, and I am their master. Earlier, with great steadfastness, I had performed the complete practice of Yoga, yet I could not come to know the true nature of my original cause the Supreme Self. (34)

Srimad Bhagvatam 2/9/3-8 Geeta Press Gorakhpur

ब्रह्माजीकी निष्कपट तपस्यासे प्रसन्न होकर भगवान्ने उन्हें अपने रूपका दर्शन कराया और आत्म-तत्त्वके ज्ञानके लिये उन्हें परम सत्य परमार्थ वस्तुका उपदेश किया (वही बात मैं तुम्हें सुनाता हूँ) ।।४।।
तीनों लोकोंके परम गुरु आदिदेव ब्रह्माजी अपने जन्मस्थान कमलपर बैठकर सृष्टि करनेकी इच्छासे विचार करने लगे . ब्रह्माजी तपस्वियोंमें सबसे बड़े तपस्वी हैं। उनका ज्ञान अमोघ है। उन्होंने उस समय एक सहस्र दिव्य वर्षपर्यन्त एकाग्र चित्तसे अपने प्राण, मन, कर्मेन्द्रिय और ज्ञानेन्द्रियोंको वशमें करके ऐसी तपस्या की, जिससे वे समस्त लोकोंको प्रकाशित करनेमें समर्थ हो सके ।।८।।

Pleased with Brahmā's sincere and guileless austerity, the Lord granted him a vision of His own form and instructed him in the Supreme Truth – the ultimate reality so that he might gain knowledge of the Self. (4)
The supreme preceptor of the three worlds, the primordial deity Brahmā, seated upon the lotus – his place of birth – began to contemplate with the desire to create the universe.
Brahmā is the greatest of all ascetics. His knowledge is unfailing. At that time, for a thousand divine years, with a concentrated mind, he brought his life-breath, mind, organs of action, and organs of perception under control, performing such austerity that he became capable of illuminating all the worlds. (8)

O Brahmā! Even though, according to various karmic impressions, you have the desire to create many kinds of living beings, your mind is not deluded this is solely the result of My supreme grace. (34)

You are the very first seer of the mantras. Even while producing the creation, your mind remains fixed on Me; therefore, the sinful quality of rajas cannot bind you. (35)

You understand Me to be devoid of elements, senses, qualities, and the inner organ (mind); this shows that, although it is extremely difficult for embodied beings to know Me, you have indeed realized Me. (36)

When you wondered, “Do I have a source or not?” and searched for its root in the water through the stalk of the lotus, I revealed this very form of Mine to you within your own heart. (37)

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 131.34-38
Once upon a time, all the gods having assembled in the council of the gods, the celestial whores busied themselves with dancing and singing. On that occasion, the fire-god (having seen Rambha with graceful buttocks), was excited with passion and discharged his semen…"

Refutation –

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.

Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata Purana Volume 1 and 2 translated by Ram Sharma Acharya QR code provided here

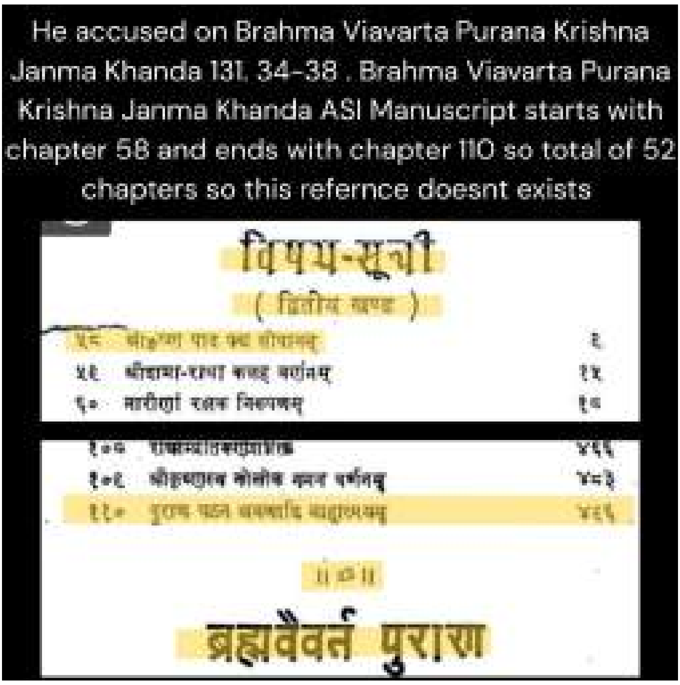
He accused on Brahma Viavarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda 131. 34-38. Brahma Viavarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda ASI Manuscript starts with chapter 58 and ends with chapter 110 so total of 52 chapters so this refernce doesnt exists



Allegations-

Mitra and Varuna

Mitra and Varuna are said to have ejaculated on seeing Apsara Urvashi,

Srimad Bhagavatam 6.18.6 "Upon seeing Urvasi, the celestial society girl, both Mitra and Varuṇa discharged semen, which they preserved in an earthen pot. The two sons Agastya and Vasiṣṭha later appeared from that pot, and they are therefore the common sons of Mitra and Varuṇa. Mitra begot three sons in the womb of his wife, whose name was Revatī. Their names were Utsarga, Ariṣṭa and Pippala." Tr. Swami Prabhupada

This story is also supported by Rig Veda 7.33.1 and Nirukta 5.13.

Refutation-

Indeed we'll be explaining the meaning of this mantra as explained by purvacharyas.

Acharya Skandaswami ji wrote that Urvashi refers to vidyut (electricity/lightning) and Vasistha refers to hidden collected water. Mitra and Varuna are air and sun respectively, and Vishvadeva is light rays. The water on earth is drawn upwards due to sun and air therefore, it has been referred to as Maitravaruna (born from Mitra and Varuna). Here kumbha has been interpreted as Pushkara which refers to water and antariksha (space/atmosphere). But here it has been referred to as antariksha. So the virya of Mitra and Varuna (rainwater) is held up in the atmosphere.

The lightning, flashing above, uniting together, becoming one, became a compact mass of radiance — that is the meaning of 'a body of light.' When Mitra and Varuṇa beheld you, O Vasiṣṭha, that was one birth of yours. But there is also another birth. Which is that? It is said: from Mitra and Varuṇa. How so? When the sage Agastya came forth among men, then Vasiṣṭha too came forth. Therefore it is said that Agastya, at the same time of his coming, drew forth Vasiṣṭha also. Thus in this Ṛc, by the word uta ('and'), the sense of combination (samucchaya) is conveyed: the birth from Mitra and Varuṇa that was shown before, is here further described in detail in the next verse.

And here too the word uta has the sense of api ('also'). By this it is indicated: 'O Vasiṣṭha! you are also, in this second way, the offspring of Mitra and Varuṇa.' By which way? It is said: from the desire (manas) of the Apsaras Urvaśī. O Brāhmaṇa! the longing of her mind — from Mitra and Varuṇa — from that, you were born. By her sight, their own seed (dṛpsa) fell. The word dṛpsa here means the drops of semen, not fully concealed, plentiful, produced by strong exertion. And here, by implication, that seed is meant.

By the divine Brahman — that is, by the Veda which belongs to the gods — in the hymns of the Ṛk, you are praised. The All-gods sustained you, who were born from that seed fallen into the lotus (Puṣkara), whether in the atmosphere or upon the earth. Adadanta ('they gave') here means 'they upheld, they sustained.' Or, it may mean that the All-gods together with four-faced Brahmā sustained you. Or else, that your own inner Brahman, the kṣetrajña (knower of the field, inner self), bore you, when your body had fallen apart for an instant.

The word dṛpsa means 'collected, accumulated,' and is derived from psa ('to eat').

As for Puṣkara: when the word is read as a name of the mid-region (antarikṣa), it is brought in here only to show its manifold meanings. Puṣkara nourishes beings by giving space, holding water, and thus supporting. Water itself is puṣkara, because it is an object of worship for gods, ancestors, and men. Or because it is divine in form. For the Śruti says: 'Verily, the waters are all the gods' (Ait. Br. 2.16; Kauṣ. Br. 11.4). Thus, puṣkara is to be worshipped.

Or again, puṣkara is the lotus, from the same root (puṣ, 'to nourish, to adorn'). Hence it is so called, because it is beautiful. Or, being 'vapushkara' ('beauty-maker'), by elision of va it becomes puṣkara. From similarity of letters with puṣpa ('flower'), it is also connected with that meaning: just as the flower blooms, so does the lotus. Thus in the Itihāsa (traditional) interpretation.

In the eternal (nitya) interpretation, Urvaśī is lightning, Vasiṣṭha is enveloped water-cluster (cloud). By reason of wealth (vasu), he is called Vasumattama. Mitra and Varuṇa are the Ādityas as wind and sun, the viśve devāḥ are the rays. For unity of sentence, the word tad is to be supplied.

Thus the meaning is: formerly, O Vasiṣṭha, your birth was terrestrial (pārthiva). But you are also Maitrāvaruṇa, drawn y Mitra and Varuṇa, the wind and the sun; and from connection with them you are called Maitrāvaruṇa. O Vasiṣṭha! You are covered, as it were, by waters, or are 'Vasumattama' from wealth. Urvaśī is the lightning pervading the mid-region. The word adhi here is explanatory of the verb 'to be born, to arise.' O Brāhmaṇa! or, from the further exalted sense, you are connected with Brahman, or caused by Brahman, or by resolve of mind (manas). This is the sense of the instrumental ending in manasaḥ — it indicates cause, i.e. the resolve.

Since that resolve belonged to Mitra and Varuṇa, therefore you are their son. The dṛpsa ('drops') were eaten, i.e. taken up; they fell into the water-mass, and were sustained by the divine Brahman, i.e. by the Sun. The viśve devāḥ, the rays, in the mid-region during the rains, sustained you in Puṣkara (the atmosphere).

In the same way, in the case of rivers and others too, Urvaśī is to be applied, as the hymns permit.

7. Sage Vyasa

Devi Bhagavatam 1.14.1-70
Confounded by terror, she assumed the form of a Śūka bird and fled away; Vyāsa, too, became greatly surprised to see her in the form of a bird. The moment Vyāsa saw the extraordinary beautiful form of Ghritācī, the Cupid entered then, into his body, and his mind was filled with the thought of sweet feminine form and was gladdened and all his body was thrilled with pleasure so that the hairs of the body stood on their ends. The Muni Vyāsa Deva tried his best and exerted his power of patience to its utmost, but failed to control his restless mind to enjoy the woman. Though he was very energetic, and he tried repeatedly to control his heart, enchanted with the beautiful form of Ghritācī, yet he could not, as due to a state of things pre-ordained by God, control his mind. At this state, when he was rubbing the fire sticks to get the sacred fire, the two pieces of wood used in kindling the fire, his seed (semen) fell upon the Araṇī (the two pieces of wood used in kindling the sacred fire). But he did not take any notice of that, and he went on rubbing the firesticks when arose from that Araṇī the wonderfully beautiful form of Śūka deva, looking like a second Vyāsa."

Mahabharata 12.325
Beholding the Apsara in those woods, the illustrious Rishi Vyasa, O Yudhishthira, became suddenly smitten with desire. The Apsara (Ghritaci), seeing the Rishi's heart troubled by desire, transformed herself into a she-parrot and came to that spot. Although he beheld the Apsara disguised in another form, the desire that had arisen in the Rishi's heart (without disappearing) spread itself over every part of his body. Summoning all his patience, the ascetic endeavoured to suppress that desire; with all his effort, however, Vyasa did not succeed in controlling his agitated mind. In consequence of the inevitability of what was to happen, the Rishi's heart was attracted by Ghritaci's fair form. He set himself more earnestly to the task of making a fire for suppressing his emotion, but in spite of all his efforts his vital seed came out. That best of regenerate ones, however, O king, continued to rub his stick without feeling any scruples for what had happened. From the seed that fell, was born a son unto him, called Suka."

Narada Purana 2.58.19-27
At that time, the illustrious sage happened to see a heavenly damsel called Ghrtaci who, in consequence of her brilliant splendour, possessed excellent beauty. Seeing that celestial damsel, in that forest, the great sage Vyasa became instantly passionately enamoured of her. After making Vyasa deeply agitated with passion, the most beautiful Ghrtaci, transforming herself into a she-parrot, approached him. Even after seeing the celestial lady disguised in another form, he was overcome with cupid (passionate love) who spread in every part of his body. With great (moral) courage, the sage tried to restrain his passion. But his mind being extremely agitated, Vyasa was unable to control it. Due to the inevitability of Destiny (lit. what was to happen) the heart of the sage was fascinated by the (beautiful) form (of Ghrtaci). With the desire to do this (vi-e. the kindling of Are) while he was suppressing his passion with special efforts, all of a sudden his semen fell on the churning sticks. It was thus that the great ascetic Suka was born while Vyasa continued the churning of sacrificial sticks."

Refutation-

If one reads Narada Purana Purva, Book II, Chapter 58 in full, the context becomes clear and the allegation collapses. The chapter narrates that Vyāsa Deva undertook an intense and prolonged penance on Mount Meru to please Mahādeva, with the desire to be blessed with a son of extraordinary power and fame. Despite extreme hardships, Vyāsa steadfastly maintained his austerities and yoga practice until Mahādeva, moved by his devotion, granted him the boon: a son whose brilliance would be celebrated cross the three worlds. Later, as destiny ordained under that very boon, Vyāsa was churning sacrificial sticks (araṇi) when the apsarā Ghṛtācī appeared before him in her celestial beauty. Overcome by the divine māyā that was part of the boon's fulfilment—not through any voluntary lapse—Vyāsa's seed fell onto the sacrificial sticks, from which his son Śuka (also called Sūta in some accounts) was miraculously born. There was no physical union, no act with an animal, and no moral breach—only the unfolding of a divine birth exactly as foreordained by Mahādeva's blessing.

Narada Purana 2.58 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications

देवर्षि सनन्दन कहते हैं- प्राचीन काल की बात है। देवदेव शंकर कनेर के वन से आच्छादित विशाल मेरुशृंग पर अपने भौम भूतगणों से घिरे विहार कर रहे थे। पुराकाल में वहीं शैलराजपुत्री देवी भी वहां थीं। (उत्पन्न हुई थीं अथवा आई थीं)। हे मुनिसत्तम! प्रभु कृष्णद्वैपायन ने वहां योग में अपनी आत्मा को लगाकर योगधर्म तत्पर होकर दिव्य तपःश्चरण किया था। उन मुनिसत्तम ने वहां यह तप पुत्रलाभार्थ किया था। उनकी कामना थी कि उनको ऐसे पुत्र की प्राप्ति हो जो अग्नि, भूमि, आकाश, वायु के तेज से उत्पन्न हो। यह संकल्प धारण करके उन्होंने देवेश की ऐसी आराधना को किया, जो अकृतात्मा लोगों के लिये दुष्कर थी। प्रथमतः प्रभु व्यासदेव ने बहुरूपी उमापति महादेव की आराधना केवल वायुपान करते हुये किया। वहां मेरु शिखरस्थ स्थान में ब्रह्मर्षिगण, देवर्षिगण, लोकपाल, अष्टवसु, साध्यगण, आदित्य, रुद्र, सूर्य, चन्द्र, विश्वावसु गन्धर्वादि, सिद्धगण, अप्सरायें निवास करते थे। वहां देवदेव रुद्र महादेव ने कनेर की शुभ- ।।२-१०।।

Devarṣi Sanandana said)
In ancient times, Lord of the Devas, Mahadeva Shankara, was sporting upon the lofty peak of Mount Meru, which was covered with oleander groves, surrounded by His earthly attendants, the Bhūtaganas. In those primeval days, the daughter of the King of Mountains (Pārvatī Devī) was also present there (either born there or having arrived there). O foremost of sages! At that very place, Lord Krishna Dvaipāyana (Veda Vyāsa), absorbed in yoga, engaged himself in deep austerities for the purpose of obtaining a son. His wish was to have a son who would be endowed with the brilliance of fire, earth, sky, and wind. With this resolve, he worshipped the Lord of the Devas in a manner that is most difficult for those of undisciplined mind to perform. At first, Vyāsa worshipped the many-formed Umāpati Mahādeva subsisting only on air. On that peak of Meru resided the Brahmarṣis, Devarṣis, the Lokapālas, the eight Vasus, the Sādhyas, the Ādityas, the Rudras, the Sun, the Moon, the Gandharva Viśvāvasu and others, Siddhas, and Apsarās. There, Lord Rudra Mahādeva, adorned with a garland of auspicious oleander flowers, shone like the autumn full moon. In that divine and delightful forest, filled with the Lord and the Devarṣis, Vyāsa, endowed with supreme yoga, continued his worship for the sake of obtaining a son. During this period of austerity, his complexion did not become pale, nor did he feel any weariness. This was a wondrous event for the entire three worlds. Instead of fatigue or weakness, his matted locks blazed like tongues of fire, radiating the splendour of his great penance. O Nārada! By such austerity and devotion, Umāpati Maheśvara became exceedingly pleased and prepared to grant him a boon. Then Lord Tryambaka, smiling, spoke to Vyāsa. ।।2–10।।

माला पहना वे भगवान् शंकर शारदीय पूर्णिमा के चन्द्र की तरह विराजित थे। उस देवता एवं देवर्षिगण से परिपूर्ण दिव्य रम्य वन में परमयोग युक्त व्यासदेव पुत्रलाभार्थ आराधना कर रहे थे। उस तपःश्चरण काल में भी उनका वर्ण म्लान नहीं था तथा वे किसी भी प्रकार की ग्लानि से रहित थे। यह समस्त त्रैलोक्य हेतु अद्भुद् घटना थी। क्लान्ति किंवा ग्लानि के स्थान पर उनकी जटा मानो अग्नि शिखा के समान तेजदीप्त लग रही थी। इससे उन महातेजस्वी योगी व्यास की जटा तो प्रज्वलन्त सी प्रतीत हो रही थी। हे नारद ! उन तपस्वी की इस तपस्या तथा भक्ति द्वारा उमापति महेश्वर अत्यन्त प्रसन्न हो गये तथा उनके लिये वरदानोद्यत हो गये। भगवान् त्र्यम्बक ने तब हंसते हुये व्यास से कहा- ।।११-१५।।

Wearing a garland, Lord Shankara shone like the moon of the Sharad Purnima. In that divine and delightful forest, filled with that deity and the Devarṣis, the supremely yogic Vyāsadeva was engaged in worship for the purpose of obtaining a son.

Even during that period of austerity, his complexion did not fade, nor was he afflicted by any weariness. This was a marvellous event for the entire three worlds. Instead of fatigue or weakness, his matted locks appeared to glow like tongues of fire, making the great and radiant yogi Vyāsa's hair seem ablaze.

O Nārada! By that austerity and devotion, Umāpati Maheśvara became exceedingly pleased and prepared to grant him a boon. Then Lord Tryambaka, smiling, spoke to Vyāsa. ।।11–15।।

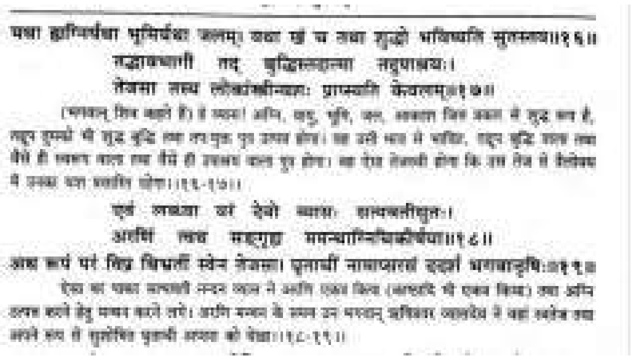
ऐसा वर पाकर सत्यवती नन्दन व्यास ने अरणि एकत्र किया (काष्ठादि भी एकत्र किया) तथा अग्नि उत्पन्न करने हेतु मन्थन करने लगे। अरणि मन्थन के समय उन भगवान् ऋषिप्रवर व्यासदेव ने वहां स्वतेज तथा अपने रूप से सुशोभित घृताची अप्सरा को देखा।।१८-१९।।

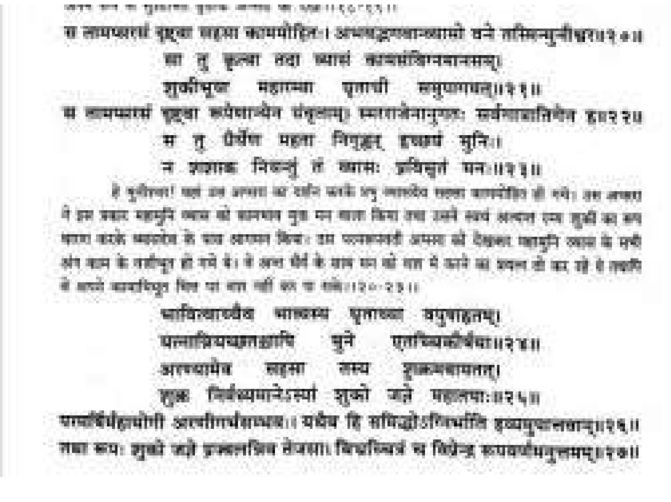
"O Vyāsa! Just as fire, air, earth, water, and space are pure in nature, in the same way you shall have a son who will be endowed with pure intellect and ascetic power. He will be of the same nature, the same intellect, the same form, and the same refuge as yourself. His brilliance will spread your fame throughout the three worlds." ।।16–17।।

Receiving this boon, Satyavatī's son Vyāsa gathered the araṇi sticks (and other materials) and began to churn them to produce fire. During this churning of the araṇi, the illustrious sage Vyāsa beheld the celestial apsarā Ghṛtācī, resplendent with her own beauty and radiance. ।।18–19।।



हे मुनीश्वर! वहां उस अप्सरा का दर्शन करके प्रभु व्यासदेव सहसा काममोहित हो गये। उस अप्सरा ने इस प्रकार महामुनि व्यास को कामभाव युक्त मन वाला किया तथा उसने स्वयं अत्यन्त रम्य शुकी का रूप धारण करके व्यासदेव के पास आगमन किया। उस परमरूपवती अप्सरा को देखकर महामुनि व्यास के सभी अंग काम के वशीभूत हो गये थे। वे अन्त धैर्य के साथ मन को वश में करने का प्रयत्न तो कर रहे थे तथापि वे अपने कामाभिभूत चित्त पर वश नहीं कर पा सके।।२०-२३।।

O foremost of sages! Seeing that apsarā, Lord Vyāsa was suddenly overcome with desire. That apsarā, thus arousing desire in the great sage, assumed the exceedingly beautiful form of a female parrot (śuki) and approached Vyāsa. Beholding her supreme beauty, all the limbs of the great sage Vyāsa became subject to passion. Though he tried with utmost patience to control his mind, he was unable to master his desire-filled heart. ।।20–23।।



प्रबल भवितव्यता के चलते घृताची की सुन्दरता के प्रति आकर्षित व्यासदेव ने अपने मन को संयत करने का अत्यन्त प्रयत्न तो किया तथापि कामवेग के कारण सहसा उस अरणि पर ही महामुनि व्यास का वीर्य पतित हो गया। मुनि उस समय अरणि मन्थन अग्नि हेतु कर रहे थे, अतः उनका वीर्य भी मथित हो जाने के कारण परमर्षि महायोगी शुक का जन्म उस अरणि से हो गया। हे विप्रेन्द्र ! हविष्य प्राप्त होने से जिस प्रकार अग्नि प्रज्वलन्त हो उठता है, तद्विध स्वतेज से दीप्त शुक उस अरणि से उत्पन्न हो गये। हे ब्राह्मण प्रवर ! उस बालक का रूप आश्चर्य उत्पन्न करने वाला था। वह रूप तथा वर्ण में अत्युत्तम था।।२४-२७।।

Due to the force of destiny, although Vyāsadeva was deeply attracted to Ghṛtācī's beauty and made the utmost effort to restrain his mind, the surge of passion suddenly caused his seed to be discharged right there upon the araṇi. At that time, the sage was churning the araṇi to produce fire, and because his seed too was churned in the process, the great ṛṣi and supreme yogi Śuka was born from that araṇi.

O foremost of Brāhmaṇas! Just as fire blazes forth upon receiving the offering (haviṣ), in the same way the self-radiant Śuka, glowing with his own brilliance, emerged from that araṇi. O best of Brāhmaṇas! The form of that boy was astonishing—most excellent in both form and complexion. ।। 24–27।।

उस समय यह स्थावर-जंगममय संसार शुकदेव के जन्म की घटना के कारण आनन्दाप्लुत हो गया था। महातेजस्वी महात्मा शंभु भी महाद्युति देवी के साथ प्रसन्न होकर वहां आ गये। हे मुनिवर ! उन्होंने स्वयं सद्यः उत्पन्न शुक का उपनयन कराया। देवराज इन्द्र ने उस बालक शुक को परमदिव्य अद्भुत दर्शन कमंडलु

At that moment, the entire world of moving and unmoving beings was filled with joy at the event of Śukadeva's birth. The great and radiant Mahātmā Śaṁbhu, along with the resplendent Goddess, came there in delight.

O great sage! He Himself performed the sacred thread ceremony (upanayana) of the newly-born Śuka. The King of the Devas, Indra, presented that boy Śuka with a supremely divine and wondrous water pot (darśana kamaṇḍalu).

"Although the context of the Nārada Purāṇa (2.58) itself makes the story of Śukadeva's birth clear, let us also consider the explanation of Paṇḍit Madhvācārya Śāstrī on this episode, as given in Purāṇa Digdarśana (p. 691/788)."

समाधान उक्त कथा में भी व्यास जी के अमोघवीर्य की ही महिमा लक्षित होती है। जब कि तप के प्रभाव से रजोवीर्य के त्रिना भी मानसी सन्तान का उत्पन्न हो जाना नेदादि शास्त्रों में लिखा है, तब स्थूल शरीर की कारण सामग्री से परिपूरित अमोध वीर्य के द्वारा पुत्र का उत्पन्न हो जाना किसी प्रकार भी असम्भव नहीं कहा जा सकता। मानसी किंवा तापसी सृष्टि का वर्णन वेदों में डंके की चोट किया है, यथा–(क) मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत्। (अथर्व १६।५२।१) (ख) श्रद्धाया दुहिता तपसोऽधिजाता स्वसा ऋषीणां भूतकृतां बभूव। (अथर्व ६।१३३।४) अर्थात् (क) सृष्टि के आरम्भ में 'मनसो रेतः' ही था। (ख) श्रद्धा की पुत्री तप से उत्पन्न हुई थी, सूत्रधार ऋषियों को बहिन लगती थी। मानसिक वीर्य जो कि सृष्टि के इसलिए ग्रास जी ने अपने अमोघवीर्यगत एक विशिष्ट कीटाणु को पूर्वप्रशित पद्धति के

Even in the cited narrative, the glory of Vyāsa Ji's infallible virility (amogha-vīrya) is clearly evident. The scriptures, including the Vedas and allied texts, affirm that through the power of austerity (tapas), even the subtlest reproductive essence (rajo-vīrya) can give rise to mental progeny (mānasa santāna). Therefore, the birth of a son through the fully potent, materially enriched amogha-vīrya cannot be deemed impossible by any means. The concept of mental or ascetic creation (mānasa or tāpasī sṛṣṭi) is boldly proclaimed in the Vedas, as seen in the following verses: (a) "The first seed of creation was born of the mind." — Atharva Veda 16.52.1 (b) "The daughter of Faith (śraddhā) was born of austerity; she became the sister of the sages, the creators of beings." — Atharva Veda 6.133.4

Thus, in the beginning, creation emerged from the mental seed (manaso retaḥ). The daughter of Faith, born of tapas, was considered the sister of the founding sages. Therefore, when Vyāsa Ji, through his amogha-vīrya, cultivated a specific germ using the method of pre-infusion (pūrvapraśita paddhati) and transformed it into a son, what is there to be surprised about?

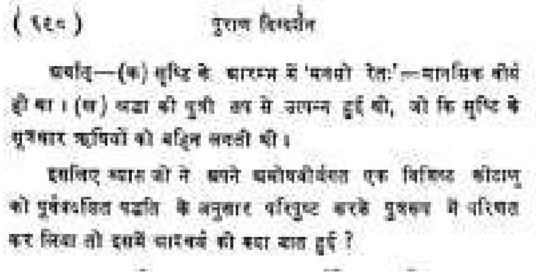
उक्त कथा से भी व्यास जी के अमोघवीर्य की ही महिमा लक्षित होती है। जब कि तप के प्रभाव से रजोवीर्य के बिना भी मानसी सन्तान का उत्पन्न हो जाना वेदादि शास्त्रों में लिखा है, तब स्थूल शरीर की कारण सामग्री से परिपुष्ट अमोघ वीर्य के द्वारा पुत्र का उत्पन्न हो जाना किसी प्रकार भी असम्भव नहीं कहा जा सकता। मानसी किंवा तापसी सृष्टि का वर्णन वेदों में डंके की चोट किया है, यथा—

(क) मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत्। (अथर्व १६।५२।१)

(ख) श्रद्धाया दुहिता तपसोऽधिजाता स्वसा ऋषीणां भूतकृतां बभूव। (अथर्व ६।१३३।४)



(६६८) पुराण दिग्दर्शन

अर्थात्—(क) सृष्टि के आरम्भ में 'मनसो रेतः'—मानसिक वीर्य ही था। (ख) श्रद्धा की पुत्री तप से उत्पन्न हुई थी, जो कि सृष्टि के सूत्रधार ऋषियों की बहिन कहली थी।

इसलिए व्यास जी ने अपने अमोघवीर्यवश एक विशिष्ट कीटाणु को पूर्वप्रश्रित पद्धति के अनुसार परिपुष्ट करके पुत्ररूप में परिणत कर लिया तो इसमें आश्चर्य की क्या बात हुई ?

Sage Devarata

Skanda Purana 6.1.29.36-47
In the meanwhile, at the advent of spring season, Menakā, the excellent Apsarā (celestial woman), happened to come to the mortal world. In course of her wandering, she reached the excellent forest named Rāmyaka reverberating with the cooings of inebriate cuckoos. It abounded in charming trees. It was there that the tiger among sages, remembered as Devarāta, stayed. He was richly endowed with the practice of holy vows and regular study of the Vedas. With regular penance, he had dispelled all sins. In that longly forest he lived alone, practising the adoration of deities with excessive ardour and faith. Once he was sitting on the bank of the river. The celestial damsel of excellent complexion was distressed due to the heat of the sun. Even as the sage was watching she disrobed herself revealing her exquisitely divine features and entered the water. On seeing the lady of excellent limbs diving into the watery expanse, instantly the leading sage involuntarily discharged his semen. In the meantime an extremely thirsty doc came there. The water of the river with which the semen of the sage had got mixed was completely drunk up by her. By the power of the sage whose semen could never be futile, the doe conceived a human foetus.

Sage Dadhica

Sage Dadhica released his semen into the river Sarasvati upon encountering the Apsara Alambusa,

Mahabharata 9.51.5-9
In days of yore, O monarch, there was an intelligent sage of great ascetic merit. He was celebrated by the name of Dadhica. Possessing a complete control over his senses, he led the life of a brahmacari...At last the chastiser of Paka, for tempting the sage, despatched unto him the exceedingly beautiful and celestial apsara, by name Alambusa. Thither where on the banks of the Sarasvati the high souled sage was engaged in the act of gratifying the gods, the celestial damsel named above, O monarch, made her appearance. Beholding that damsel of beautiful limbs, the vital seed of that ascetic of cleansed soul came out."

Sage Mankana

Vamana Purana Satomahatmya 17.2-5
Lomaharsana said The sage Mankana was the mind-born son of Kasyapa. He was ready to bathe with his valkala in his hand. There came Rambha taking good, bright and charming other Apsarases and began to take their bath by his side. At this due to excitement of passion his semen dropped in the water. The great sage collected that semen in a jar. That semen in the jar became differentiated into seven portions. Out of them were born seven Rsis who are known as the Marut hosts."

Mahabharata 9.38
Listen now to a great feat of Mankanaka, who had from his youth led the life of a brahmacari. While employed in performing his ablutions in the river, he beheld (one day), O Bharata, a woman of faultless limbs and fair brows, bathing in the river at will, her person uncovered. At this sight, O monarch, the vital seed of the Rishi fell unto the Sarasvati. The great ascetic took it up and placed it within his earthen pot. Kept within that vessel, the fluid became divided into seven parts. From those seven portions were born seven Rishis from whom sprang the (nine and forty) Maruts

Sage Vibhandaka

Mahabharata 3.110.34-35
And that son of Kasyapa, Vibhandaka, having proceeded to a big lake, devoted himself to the practice of penances. And that same saint, comparable to a god, laboured for a long period. And once while he was washing his mouth in the waters, he beheld the celestial nymph Urvasi–whereupon came out his seminal fluid."

Mahabharata 1.131.1-9
Vaisampayana said, 'There dwelt at the source of the Ganga, a great sage named Bharadwaja, ceaselessly observing the most rigid vows. One day, of old, intending to celebrate the Agnihotra sacrifice he went along with many great Rishis to the Ganga to perform his ablutions. Arrived at the bank of the stream, he saw Ghritachi herself, that Apsara endued with youth and beauty, who had gone there a little before. With an expression of pride in her countenance, mixed with a voluptuous languor of attitude, the damsel rose from the water after her ablutions were over. And as she was gently treading on the bank, her attire which was loose became disordered. Seeing her attire disordered, the sage was smitten with burning desire. The next moment his vital fluid came out, in consequence of the violence of his emotion. The Rishi immediately held it in a vessel called a Drona. Then, O king, Drona sprang from the fluid thus preserved in that vessel by the wise Bharadwaja. And the child thus born studied all the Vedas and their branches.

Sage Satyadharti

Vayu Purana 2.37.198
On seeing an Apsaras (celestial damsel) in front, the semen virile of Satyadhrti was emitted in the bush of Sara-grasa and twins were born."

Matsya Purana 50.10
At the sight of a nymph, Satyadhriti cast his seed in a pool of water, out of which, one son and a daughter were born."

Like Father like Son,

Shrimad Bhagavatam 9.21.35
The son of Satananda was Satyadhṛti, who was expert in archery, and the son of Satyadhṛti was Saradvan. When Saradvan met Urvasi, he discharged semen, which fell on a clump of sara grass. From this semen were born two all-auspicious babies, one male and the other female."

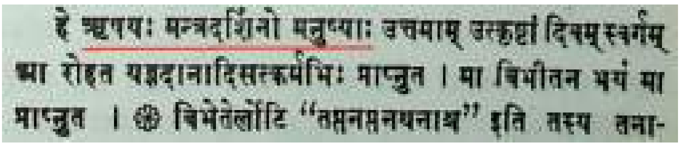
Vayu Purana 1.37.196-198
Ahalya bore Satananda the excellent sage to Saradvata. His son was Satyadhrti of great fame. He was a master of the science of archery. On seeing an Apsaras (celestial damsel) in front, the semen virile of Satyadhrti was emitted in the bush of Sara grass and twins were born."

Refutation–

Now these Halala Putras — pedophile followers — have begun hurling baseless accusations against Rishis In truth, the Rishis were normal human beings, just like us, in the early stages of their sādhanā.

Ācārya Sāyaṇa, in his commentary on Atharvaveda 18.3.64, makes this explicitly clear:

"ऋषयः मंत्रदर्शिनो मनुष्याः"
"The Ṛṣis — seers of the mantras — are humans."



हे ऋषयः मन्त्रदर्शिनो मनुष्याः उत्तमाम् उत्कृष्टां दिवम् स्वर्गम् आ रोहत यज्ञदानादिसत्कर्मभिः प्राप्नुत । मा बिभीतन भयं मा प्राप्नुत । ⊛ बिभेतेर्लोटि "तप्तनप्तनथनाश्च" इति तस्य तना-

Before they had fully mastered their senses and completed their austerities, some were at times overcome by Kāma (desire) and felt attraction toward the Apsarās.

As the Atharvaveda states:

अथर्ववेदः / काण्डं ४/ सूक्तम् ३७ –
यद्धस्ताभ्यां चकृम किल्बिषाण्यक्षाणां गत्नुमुपलिप्समानाः ।
उग्रंपश्ये उग्रजितौ तदद्याप्सरसावनु दत्तामृणं नः ॥
उग्रंपश्ये राष्ट्रभृत्किल्बिषाणि यदक्षवृत्तमनु दत्तं न एतत्।
ऋणान् नो न ऋणमेर्त्समानो यमस्य लोके अधिरज्जुरायत्॥

Here, Kāma — love or desire — is described as being under the influence of Apsarās such as Urvaśī:

अप्सरसाम् उर्वशीप्रभृतीनां संबंधी अयं स्मरः कामः । तदधीने वर्तत इत्यर्थः ।

This is why even advanced sages, in the earlier stages of their tapas, could be swayed by the beauty and māyā of celestial Apsaras.

But the truly great Rishis — such as Rishi Mārkaṇḍeya, Nara–Nārāyaṇa Rishi, and millions of other Rishis — had attained complete mastery over their senses through intense austerities and unwavering meditation upon the Supreme Lord. They rose entirely above such temptations. Having conquered lust and anger, they remained immovable even before the most alluring and seductively beautiful Apsarās, untouched by their most potent illusions.

THE STORY OF NARA–NĀRĀYAṆA RISHI: THEIR TRIUMPH OVER LUST AND COMPLETE MASTERY OF THE SENSES THROUGH INTENSE AND UNYIELDING PENANCE

Nara and Nārāyaṇa Rishi, who are considered incarnations of Lord Vishnu and whose later manifestations were Arjuna (as Nara) and Shri Krishna (as Nārāyaṇa), performed an intense and unparalleled penance in the holy region of Badarikāśrama, near present-day Badrinath Dham. The brilliance and power of their tapasya spread across the three worlds and caused even Indra, the king of the Devas, to become fearful of losing his position. To test the strength of their austerity and to divert their concentration, Indra sent many celestial nymphs (Apsarās) to allure and disturb them. However, such was the firmness of their vow and the purity of their meditation that the charms of the Apsarās could not shake them at all. Then, in order to teach Indra a lesson and demonstrate the futility of such temptations, Nārāyaṇa Rishi gently struck his own thigh and from it manifested the supremely beautiful Urvaśī, an Apsarā of unparalleled grace and charm, far surpassing all those sent by Indra. Awestruck and humbled, Indra realized the greatness of Nara-Nārāyaṇa and, bowing before them, returned to his abode with deep respect. This episode eternally glorifies the sages as symbols of supreme self-control, divine power, and unshakable devotion.

Srimad Bhagvatam Skanda 11 Adhaya 4 slokas 6- 16

6. As Nārāyaṇa and Nara, the foremost of the sages and of perfectly serene mind, he was born of Dharma and his spouse Mūrti, the daughter of Daksa. He expounded to sages (like Narada) the path of action leading to the realization of the Soul (who is characterised by actionlessness). He practised (an ideal type of) penance and his feet are still served (and worshipped) by prominent sages.
7. Suspecting with the apprehension that this sage (Nārāyaṇa-Nara) covets to take possession of his position (as the king of heaven), Indra deputed Kämadeva, the god of love, along with his troupe. Being ignorant of his (Nārāyana's) spiritual greatness, Kamadeva went with his paraphernalia-a bevy of celestial damsels, the vernal season and the gentle wind (from the sandal-forests of Malaya) to his hermitage at Badarī, and hit him with shafts in the forms of side-glances of heavenly damsels.

8. Knowing perfectly well that the indiscretion has been committed by Indra, he laughed loudly without even slightly feeling the touch of pride (at his own moral strength). He assured the trembling visitors, "O (mighty) god of Love, O (South) wind, O heavenly damsels, do not be afraid. Please accept our hospitality (If no hospitality is offered, the hermitage would be as good as void). May our hermitage be non-void (i. e. worthy of its existence)."
9. When the sage Narayana who removed their fear addressed them thus, the gods who bent their head low with shame, submitted to him, "O all-pervading Lord who are trans-cendental to the Mâyà, this unpurturbedness in you is not sur-prising. You are the Supreme Self subject to no modifications, and your lotus-feet are respected with obeisance by hosts of sages who revel in the bliss of self-realization.
10. (It is not surprising that we should behave according to our nature and create obstacles in your penance). A number of obstacles are created by gods in the path of your servants (devotees) who want to transcend the abode of gods (the heaven), and attain directly to your highest region. No impedi-ments obstruct the path of others who offer in sacrifices the respective shares of gods as oblations. But as you are the pro-tector of your devotees, your votary sets his foot on the heads of obstacles (and trampling them down ascends to Vaikuntha).

12. While they were praising him thus, the Almighty Lord, (in order to humble down the pride of beauty of celestial nymphs and others) created by Yogic Power and showed them women of marvellous beauty, all well adorned with costly orna-ments and raiments, waiting upon himself.
13. When those attendants of gods (viz. Kama, the spring season, heavenly ladies) saw women beautiful like goddess Śrī, (their pride for their own beauty was humbled down and) their own complexion became faded at the excellence of the superior beauty of those women and they were enraptur-ed with fragrance of their bodies.

14. The god of the Lord of gods (Narayana) laughingly told them who were bowing to him with humility, “Choose any one of these women who is suitable, as an ornament of the celes-tial world.”

15. Saying “so be it”, the servants of gods complied with his Command. They selected Urvaśī, the most beautiful among heavenly damsels and repaired to the celestial regions following her.

नारदजीने पूछा- त्रिपुरसूदन ! वे मुनि जन्म धारण करनेके पश्चात् वसिष्ठके भ्राता कैसे हो गये? वे दोनों मित्रावरुण इनके पिता कैसे कहलाये ? तथा अगस्त्य मुनिका घड़ेसे जन्म कैसे हुआ? (यह सब हम जानना चाहते हैं।) ॥ २० ॥

ईश्वरने कहा- नारद ! पूर्वकालमें पुराणपुरुष भगवान् विष्णु किसी समय धर्मके पुत्ररूपमें उत्पन्न होकर गन्धमादन पर्वतपर महान् तपस्यामें संलग्न उनकी तपस्यासे भयभीत हुए इन्द्रने उसमें विघ्न डालनेके लिये अप्सराओंके साथ वसन्त ऋतु और कामदेव-दोनोंको भेजा। उस समय श्रीहरि न तो उनके गाने, बजाने अथवा अङ्गराग आदिसे ही प्रभावित हुए, न वसन्त और कामदेवद्वारा उपस्थित किये गये विषय-भोगोंके प्रति ही उनका मन क्षुब्ध हुआ। यह देखकर कामदेव, वसन्त और अप्सराओंका समूह विषादमें डूच गया। तत्पश्चात् नरके अग्रज नारायणने उन्हें विशेषरूपसे क्षुब्ध करनेके हेतु अपने ऊरुप्रदेशसे एक ऐसी नारीको उत्त्पन्न किया, जो त्रिलोकोके मनुष्योंको मोहित करनेवालो थी। उस स्त्रीने समस्त देवताओं तथा उन दोनों देवश्रेष्ठोंको भलीभाँति क्षुब्ध कर दिया। उस समय श्रीहरिने अप्सराओंके सामने ही देवताओंसे कहा- 'देवगण ! यह एक अप्सरा है। यह लोकमें उर्वशी नामसे प्रसिद्ध होगी ॥

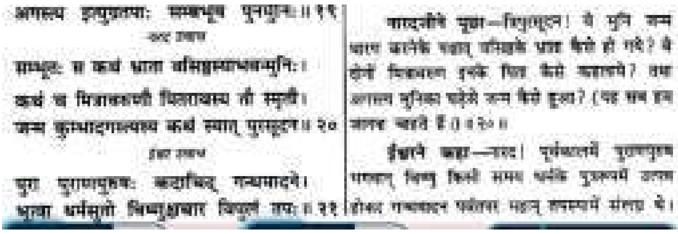
Nārada said:
"O Tripurasūdana (destroyer of the three cities)! After taking birth as human beings, how did those sages become the brothers of Sage Vasiṣṭha? How did Mitrā and Varuṇa become known as their fathers? And how was Sage Agastya born from a pot? We wish to know all this." (Verse 20)

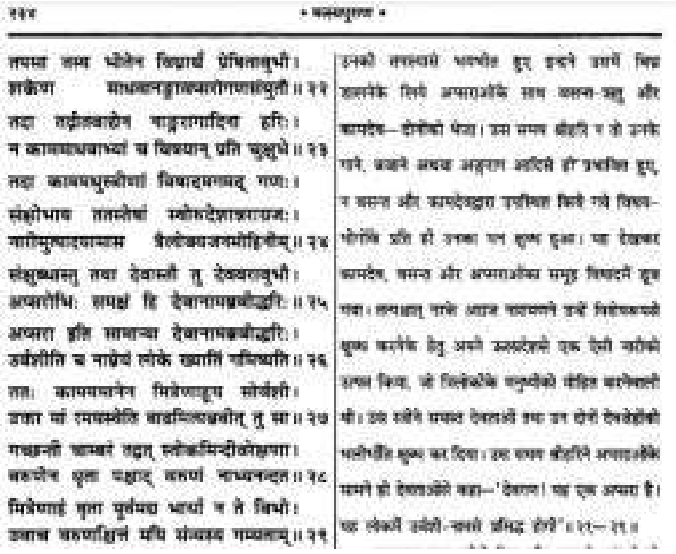
Īśvara (Śiva) said:
"Nārada! In ancient times, the eternal Lord Viṣṇu once took birth as the son of Dharma and engaged in great penance on Mount Gandhamādana. Seeing his severe austerities, Indra became fearful and, in order to create obstacles, sent along with the Apsarās the spring season (Vasanta) and Kāma (god of love).

At that time, Śrī Hari was neither affected by their singing, music, perfumes, and ornaments nor was his mind disturbed by the sensual enjoyments presented by Vasanta and Kāma. Seeing this, Kāma, Vasanta, and the group of Apsarās fell into deep dejection.

Then, Nārāyaṇa, the elder of the two brothers (Nara and Nārāyaṇa), to especially agitate them, produced from his own thigh a woman so enchanting that she could captivate all beings in the three worlds. That woman thoroughly disturbed all the gods and even those two foremost deities (Kāma and Vasanta).

At that moment, Śrī Hari said in front of the Apsarās to the gods:
'O Devas! This is an Apsarā. In the world, she will be renowned by the name Urvashī.'"





THE LEGEND OF RISHI MĀRKAṆḌEYA: HIS VICTORY OVER LUST AND ABSOLUTE MASTERY OF THE SENSES THROUGH STEADFAST AND AUSTERE PENANCE

"Another similar episode is described about Rishi Markandeya, considered a partial incarnation of Narayana. While he was engaged in intense penance, Indra sent numerous Apsaras to distract and tempt him. However, Rishi Markandeya remained completely unmoved by their beauty and steadfast in his tapasya. As a result of his unwavering devotion, he was ultimately blessed with the divine darshan of Nara and Narayana Rishi."

Srimad Bhagvatam Skanda 12 Adhaya 8 Slokas 8-32

He observed the great vow of celibacy for life, was quiescent (as he brought passions under his control). He wore matted hair (on his head), bark garments, the sacred thread and the girdle of Kuśa grass. He carried a water jar of gourd and a staff in his hands.

He wore a deer skin and had a rosary of Rudrākṣa beads and Kusa grass. For the enhancement of his disciplined life and merits, he worshipped Hari present in the (sacrificial) fire, the sun, his preceptor, Brāhmaṇas and within himself both in the morning and in the evening.

He brought food received as alms, both morning and in the evening, and offered it to his preceptor silently. If per-mitted by his preceptor, he partook of the food once (in a day) and observed fast if no permission was given (due to the arrival of an unexpected guest, etc.)

In this way, while absorbed in the performance of penance and Vedic studies, he engaged himself in worshipping Lord Hari for millions of years and conquered death which is extremely difficult to overcome.

By this (conquest over death) god Brahmā, Bhrgu, god Śiva, Dakşa and other sons of god Brahma (such as Narada and men, gods, manes and all other beings (in the world) mar-velled greatly (at his wonderful achievement).

Possessed of austere penance, deep Vedic studies and self-control, he observed the great vow of life-long celibacy. All the distracting passions in his heart were destroyed. With his mind drawn within, that Yogin meditated upon the Supra-sensuous Lord Hari.

Even as the Yogin was engaged in concentrating his mind through the great Yoga on the Supreme person, a long period of time extending over six Manvantaras had passed away.

It is said that when Indra came to know of this (performance of penance) in the present seventh Manvantara, he became alarmed at it and began to create interruptions in it, O Brahmaṇa (Saunaka).

(with a view to interrupting his penance and pre- cipitating his own fall) he deputed to the sage, divine musicians, celestial dancing girls, Cupid (god of Love), the presiding deities of the spring season and the gentle breeze from the Malaya mountain wafting (love-exciting) fragrance as well as greed and pride, the sons (or the products) of rajas.

While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and

All of them went to the northern slopes of the Himalayas where the river Puspabhadrā flows and to the slab of stone called Citra, O Lord (Saunaka).

The premises of that holy hermitage were adorned with sacred trees (like Aśvattha) and creepers, densely occupied with families of holy Brahmaṇa sages and were full of pools of holy crystal-clear water.

It was resonant with the melodious humming of in-toxicated bees and loud with the cooing of joyous cuckoos. It was full of the vivacious movements of ecstatic dancing of the peacocks and of the flights of various birds in joy (displaying their delight).

Bearing with it the cool spray of mountain cascades and embraced by fragrant flowers (and hence wafting their sweet scent), the (southern Malaya) wind entered and blew gently exciting the passion of love (in the hearts of men).

The spring season manifested itself with the rising moon as the face of the night (i. e evenings beautiful with the rising moon), with rows of tender leaves and branches of flowers and clusters of trees entwined with creepers (as if in close embrace).

Followed by the celestial singers (Gandharvas) with companies of artistes experts in vocal and instrumental music, and accompanied with a troupe of divine damsels, the god of love appeared with a bow and arrows.

Those servants of Indra saw the sage sitting steadfast with his eyes closed after offering oblations to the sacrificial fire, looking formidable (and hence unassailable) like fire in the human form.

The celestial damsels danced before him and the singers began to sing and the players of instrumental music played upon the Mrdanga, lute, Paṇavakas and horns.

While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and son of rajas (Greed were trying to agitate his mind, Kama (the god of love) set his missile of five-pointed shaft[1] to his bow. 26-27. While Puñjika-sthali (a celestial damsel in her role of a temptress was plying with balls (in the presence of the sage), her slim waist was as if afflicted (and hence unstable) under the weight of her full breasts, wreaths of flowers were dropping from her hair. Her eyes were (as if) wandering (i.e. she was constantly looking) this way or that way. While she was running after the balls the wind blew away her fine garment (sāri) as the zone (which was fastened round it) got snapped (and slipped).

In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Visṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa

Feeling confident that the sage is now (as good as) subdued, Smara (the god of love) discharged that shaft, but like all the endeavours put forth by an unfortunate person, his attempt (against the sage) proved futile.

Thus while committing that offence against the sage, they were being scorched by his spiritual lustre (and being afraid of what would be the consequence of their offence) they ran away as children do after rousing a snake, O sage.

There is certainly nothing wonderful in the case of the great-souled ones, O Saunaka, that the great sage, despite his being thus attacked by the minions of Indra, was not affect-ed by anger, infatuation and such other perturbing feelings resulting from ahaṁkāra.

Perceiving the paleness of expression (on the coun-tenance) of Kama and his troop of followers and hearing from them the spiritual splendour and power of the Brahmaṇa sage, (even) the glorious lord of the celestial region (Indra) was extremely astonished.

In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Visṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa

There, a righteous man should study the Āraṇyaka scriptures and follow the duties of the vānaprastha stage of life. Thereafter, maintaining celibacy, he should leave that āśrama and, in the prescribed manner, take up sannyāsa. A man who takes sannyāsa in this way attains the imperishable state of Brahman. (5)

O King, a learned Brāhmaṇa should first of all resort to these very disciplines of ūrdhvareta (celibate) sages, as practised by them. (6)

O Lord of the people, if in the mind of a celibate Brāhmaṇa who has been observing brahmacarya there arises the desire for liberation, then he has the supreme right to take sannyāsa directly from the brahmacarya stage itself. (7)

In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Adhyāya 233, ślokas 43–45 (Gita Press Gorakhpur edition, p. 1607/2580), it is mentioned that Maharaja Yudhiṣṭhira personally maintained and served food to ten thousand ūrdhvareta (lifelong elibate) Brahmacārī Rishis , in addition to thousands of other Veda-learned Brāhmaṇas, honouring them with golden-plate meals, garments, and due hospitality.

महाराज युधिष्ठिरके यहाँ अगासी हजार ऐसे स्नातक गृहस्थ थे, जिनका वे भरण-पोषण करते थे। उनमेंसे प्रत्येककी सेवामें तीस-तीस दासियाँ रहती थीं ।। ४३ ।। इनके सिवा दूसरे दस हजार और ऊर्ध्वरता यति उनके यहाँ रहते थे, जिनके लिये सुन्दर ढंगसे तैयार किया हुआ अन्न सोनेकी थालियोंमें परोसकर पहुँचाया जाता था ।। ४४ ।। मैं उन सब वेदवादी ब्राह्मणोंको अग्रहार (बलिवैश्वदेवके अन्तमें अतिथिको दिये जानेवाले प्रथम अन्न)-का अर्पण करके भोजन, वस्त्र और जलके द्वारा उनकी यथायोग्य पूजा करती थी ।। ४५ ।।

I used to offer to all those Veda-knowing Brāhmaṇas the agrahāra (the first portion of food offered to a guest at the end of the Bali-Vaiśvadeva rite), and honour them appropriately with food, garments, and water. (45)

The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 10–13 (Geeta Press, Gorakhpur, p. 200/2256) describes the brahmachari sage Jaratkaru as an ūrdhvareta who had attained the highest status among all rishis.

“Asti’s father was as influential as Prajapati. While being a brahmachari, he also practiced restraint in his diet. He was always engaged in intense penance. (10)

His name was Jaratkaru. He was an ūrdhvareta and a great sage. Among the wanderers (yogis or sages), his position was the highest. He was a knower of dharma. Once, endowed with the power of tapas, the blessed Jaratkaru began his journey. Living a life of a muni (ascetic), he would set camp wherever evening fell. (11–12)”

The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 10–13 (Geeta Press, Gorakhpur, p. 314/2256), also portrays the brahmachari sage Jaratkaru as an ūrdhvareta who had achieved control over his senses and mind and conquered fear .

वे ऊर्ध्वरेता ब्रह्मचारी थे। तपस्यामें संलग्न रहते थे। नित्य नियमपूर्वक वेदोंका स्वाध्याय करते थे। उन्हें कहींसे कोई भय नहीं था। वे मन और इन्द्रियोंको सदा काबूमें रखते थे। महात्मा जरत्कारु सारी पृथ्वीपर घूम आये; किंतु उन्होंने मनसे कभी स्त्रीकी अभिलाषा नहीं की ।। ९ ।।

He was an ūrdhvareta brahmachari—always engaged in penance. Daily and diligently, he studied the Vedas. He had no fear from anywhere. He always kept his mind and senses under control. The great soul Jaratkaru traveled all over the earth; yet he never entertained the desire for a woman in his mind. (9)

Allegations-

Devas sending Apsaras to seduce Rishis

Gods were always afraid of sages, that the sages may attain the status of godhood or higher than that through their penances thus few Gods especially Indra sent Apsaras to seduce them and to interrupt their penance. A sage named Kandu was seduced by an Apsara named Pramlocha. And both of them enjoyed each other for hundreds of years,

Vishnu Purana 1.50.11-15 "…There was formerly (said Soma) a sage named Kandu, eminent in holy wisdom, who practised pious austerities on the lovely borders of the Gomati river. The king of the gods sent the nymph Pramlocha to disturb his penance, and the sweet-smiling damsel diverted the sage from his devotions. They lived together, in the valley of Mandara, for a hundred and fifty years; during which, the mind of the Muni was wholly given up to enjoyment…"

This is also mentioned in Srimad Bhagavatam 4.30.13.

A sage named Devadutta was performing penance and Indra feared that the sage may replace him from his status so to stop the sage's penance he sent an Apsara to interrupt the penance,

Varaha Purana 145.29-35 "Hearing that music beautiful with the Pancama svara the mind of the sage became perturbed. Kamadeva tirelessly shot his arrows again on him…Hit by the arrows of Kamadeva, the great sage appraoched her with a smile. She too looked at him amorously but with shyness. .ttracting the mind of the sage with her irresistible charms, she continued to play the ball unmindful of flowers falling from her dishevelling hair. At that time the Malaya wind blew off her garment freeing it from its knot and the girdle holding it...[40-1] The he held that smiling damsel by the right hand. He embraced her and gave her delight. Day and night he enjoyed with her every pleasure helped by the power he had acquired by his penence." Tr. Venkitasubramonia Iyer, edited by J.L. Shastri Vishwamitra was performing penance for a very long time, Indra being afraid that Vishwamitra may replace him as the king of god ordered Menaka to seduce Vishwamitra and interrupt his penance, Indra also ordered Maruts (i.e., winds) to help Menaka in the task, Menaka was successful in seducing Vishwamitra and their sexual union gave birth to a daughter named Shakuntala. Shakuntala was abandoned and she was raised by Kanwa hence she came to be regarded as the daughter of Kanwa.

Mahabharata, Adi Parva 1, Section 71, verses 20-26 "Viswamitra, of old, having been engaged in the austerest penances alarmed Indra, the chief of the celestials, who thought that the mighty ascetic of blazing energy would, by his penances, hurl him down from his high seat in heaven.' Indra, thus alarmed, summoned Menaka and told her, 'Thou, O Menaka, art the first of celestial Apsaras. Therefore, O amiable one, do me this service. Hear what I say. This great ascetic Viswamitra like unto the Sun in splendour, is engaged in the most severe of penances.

Mahabharata, Adi Parva 1, section 72, verses 1-10 "Kanwa continued, 'And Sakra, thus addressed by her, then commanded him who could approach every place (viz., the god of the wind) to be present with Menaka at the time she would be before the Rishi. And the timid and beautiful Menaka then entered the retreat and saw there Viswamitra who had burnt, by his penances, all his sins, and was engaged still in ascetic penances. And saluting the Rishi, she then began to sport before him. And just at that time Marut robbed her of her garments that were white as the Moon. And she thereupon ran, as if in great bashfulness, to catch hold of her attire, and as if she was exceedingly annoyed with Marut. And she did all this before the very eyes of Viswamitra who was endued with energy like that of fire. And Viswamitra saw her in that attitude. And beholding her divested of her robes, he saw that she was of faultless feature. And that best of Munis saw that she was exceedingly handsome, with no marks of age on her person. And beholding her beauty and accomplishments that bull amongst Rishis was possessed with lust and made a sign that he desired her companionship. And he invited her accordingly, and she also of faultless features expressed her acceptance of the invitation. And they then passed a long time there in each other's company.

Rishi Dadhicha and Apsara Alambusa, Mahabharata, Shalya Parva 9, section 51, verses 5-10 Vaishampayana continued, "In days of yore, O monarch, there was an intelligent sage of great ascetic merit. He was celebrated by the name of Dadhica. Possessing a complete control over his senses, he led the life of a brahmacari. In consequence of his excessive ascetic austerities Shakra was afflicted with a great fear. The sage could not be turned (away from his penance) by the offer of even diverse kinds of rewards. At last the chastiser of Paka, for tempting the sage, despatched unto him the exceedingly beautiful and celestial apsara, by name Alambusa. Thither where on the banks of the Sarasvati the high-souled sage was engaged in the act of gratifying the gods, the celestial damsel named above, O monarch, made her appearance.

Skanda Purana, Brahma Khanda book 3, Dharmaranya Khanda section 2, chapters 4-5 mentions story of Indra sending Apsara Vardhini to distract Dharmaraja a form of Yama from the penance and she was successful in that.

Refutation-

Why did Devas send Apsaras to disturb the penance of the Rishis ?

When a Rishi performs deep austerities, the power generated by such tapas can become so intense that it may upset the balance of the worlds. At such times, the Devas ntervene by sending celestial nymphs, not as an act of hostility but as a way to test and redirect that energy. If the sage remains undisturbed, the test confirms his mastery over desire; if he is distracted, that same event often becomes a cause for new creation, the birth of great souls, and the continuation of dharma. In this way, even apparent obstacles like the arrival of an Apsara become part of the cosmic process that ensures balance and transforms concentrated energy back into the flow of life.

Nara and Nārāyaṇa Rishi, who are considered incarnations of Lord Vishnu and whose later manifestations were Arjuna (as Nara) and Shri Krishna (as Nārāyaṇa), performed an intense and unparalleled penance in the holy region of Badarikāśrama, near present-day Badrinath Dham. The brilliance and power of their tapasya spread across the three worlds and caused even Indra, the king of the Devas, to become fearful of losing his position. To test the strength of their austerity and to divert their concentration, Indra sent many celestial nymphs (Apsarās) to allure and disturb them. However, such was the firmness of their vow and the purity of their meditation that the charms of the Apsarās could not shake them at all. Then, in order to teach Indra a lesson and demonstrate the futility of such temptations, Nārāyaṇa Rishi gently struck his own thigh and from it manifested the supremely beautiful Urvaśī, an Apsarā of unparalleled grace and charm, far surpassing all those sent by Indra. Awestruck and humbled, Indra realized the greatness of Nara-Nārāyaṇa and, bowing before them, returned to his abode with deep respect. This episode eternally glorifies the sages as symbols of supreme self-control, divine power, and unshakable devotion.

6. As Nārāyaṇa and Nara, the foremost of the sages and of perfectly serene mind, he was born of Dharma and his spouse Mūrti, the daughter of Daksa. He expounded to sages (like Narada) the path of action leading to the realization of the Soul (who is characterised by actionlessness). He practised (an ideal type of) penance and his feet are still served (and worshipped) by prominent sages.
7. Suspecting with the apprehension that this sage (Nārāyaṇa-Nara) covets to take possession of his position (as the king of heaven), Indra deputed Kämadeva, the god of love, along with his troupe. Being ignorant of his (Nārāyana's) spiritual greatness, Kamadeva went with his paraphernalia-a bevy of celestial damsels, the vernal season and the gentle wind (from the sandal-forests of Malaya) to his hermitage at Badarī, and hit him with shafts in the forms of side-glances of heavenly damsels.
8. Knowing perfectly well that the indiscretion has been committed by Indra, he laughed loudly without even slightly feeling the touch of pride (at his own moral strength). He assured the trembling visitors, "O (mighty) god of Love, O (South) wind, O heavenly damsels, do not be afraid. Please accept our hospitality (If no hospitality is offered, the hermitage would be as good as void). May our hermitage be non-void (i. e. worthy of its existence)."
9. When the sage Narayana who removed their fear addressed them thus, the gods who bent their head low with shame, submitted to him, "O all-pervading Lord who are trans-cendental to the Mâyà, this unpurturbedness in you is not sur-prising. You are the Supreme Self subject to no modifications, and your lotus-feet are respected with obeisance by hosts of sages who revel in the bliss of self-realization.

10. (It is not surprising that we should behave according to our nature and create obstacles in your penance). A number of obstacles are created by gods in the path of your servants (devotees) who want to transcend the abode of gods (the heaven), and attain directly to your highest region. No impedi-ments obstruct the path of others who offer in sacrifices the respective shares of gods as oblations. But as you are the pro-tector of your devotees, your votary sets his foot on the heads of obstacles (and trampling them down ascends to Vaikuntha).

11. (When your non-devotees perform penance they fall a victim to us-the erotic passion or the passion called Anger). Those who cross the immeasurable oceans in the form of temp-ters like us overcome hunger, thirst, (extremes of climate in) three seasons (viz. the summer, rains and the winter), winds and curb the palate and the sexual urge, succumb to futile anger and thereby waste their austerities in uttering imprecations). They are like ocean-crossers who get themselves drowned in the cavity caused by a cow's hoof."

12. While they were praising him thus, the Almighty Lord, (in order to humble down the pride of beauty of celestial nymphs and others) created by Yogic Power and showed them women of marvellous beauty, all well adorned with costly orna-ments and raiments, waiting upon himself.

13. When those attendants of gods (viz. Kama, the spring season, heavenly ladies) saw women beautiful like goddess Śrī, (their pride for their own beauty was humbled down and) their own complexion became faded at the excellence of the superior beauty of those women and they were enraptur-ed with fragrance of their bodies.

14. The god of the Lord of gods (Narayana) laughingly told them who were bowing to him with humility, "Choose any one of these women who is suitable, as an ornament of the celes-tial world."

15. Saying "so be it", the servants of gods complied with his Command. They selected Urvaśī, the most beautiful among heavenly damsels and repaired to the celestial regions following her.

16. They paid their respects to Indra in the assembly of gods and while all gods were eagerly listening, described to him the superior spiritual power of Narayaṇa at which Indra was astonished and became afraid (at his indiscretion in offending Nārāyaṇa).

6. As Nārāyaṇa and Nara, the foremost of the sages and of perfectly serene mind, he was born of Dharma and his spouse Mūrti, the daughter of Dakṣa. He practised (an ideal type of) penance and his feet are still served (and worshipped) by prominent sages.

7. Suspecting with the apprehension that this sage (Nārāyaṇa-Nara) covets to take possession of his position (as the king of heaven), Indra deputed Kāmadeva, the god of love, along with his troupe. Being ignorant of his (Nārāyaṇa's) spiritual greatness, Kāmadeva went with his paraphernalia—a bevy of celestial damsels, the vernal season and the gentle wind (from the sandal-forests of Malaya) to his hermitage at Badarī, and hit him with shafts in the forms of side-glances of heavenly damsels.

8. Knowing perfectly well that the indiscretion has been committed by Indra, he laughed loudly without even slightly feeling the touch of pride (at his own moral strength). He assured the trembling visitors, "O (mighty) god of Love, O (South) wind, O heavenly damsels, do not be afraid. Please accept our hospitality (If no hospitality is offered, the hermitage would be as good as void). May our hermitage be non-void (i. e. worthy of its existence)."

9. When the sage Nārāyaṇa who removed their fear addressed them thus, the gods who bent their head low with shame, submitted to him, "O all-pervading Lord who are transcendental to the Māyā, this unpurturbedness in you is not surprising. You are the Supreme Self subject to no modifications, and your lotus-feet are respected with obeisance by hosts of sages who revel in the bliss of self-realization.

10. (It is not surprising that we should behave according to our nature and create obstacles in your penance). A number of obstacles are created by gods in the path of your servants (devotees) who want to transcend the abode of gods (the heaven), and attain directly to your highest region. No impediments obstruct the path of others who offer in sacrifices the respective shares of gods as oblations. But as you are the protector of your devotees, your votary sets his foot on the heads of obstacles (and trampling them down ascends to Vaikuṇṭha).

11. (When your non-devotees perform penance they fall a victim to us—the erotic passion or the passion called Anger). Those who cross the immeasurable oceans in the form of tempters like us overcome hunger, thirst, (extremes of climate in) three seasons (viz. the summer, rains and the winter), winds and curb the palate and the sexual urge, succumb to futile anger and thereby waste their austerities in uttering imprecations). They are like ocean-crossers who get themselves drowned in the cavity caused by a cow's hoof."

12. While they were praising him thus, the Almighty Lord, (in order to humble down the pride of beauty of celestial nymphs and others) created by Yogic Power and showed them women of marvellous beauty, all well adorned with costly ornaments and raiments, waiting upon himself.

13. When those attendants of gods (viz. Kāma, the spring season, heavenly ladies) saw women beautiful like goddess Śrī, (their pride for their own beauty was humbled down and) their own complexion became faded at the excellence of the superior beauty of those women and they were enraptured with fragrance of their bodies.

14. The god of the Lord of gods (Nārāyaṇa) laughingly told them who were bowing to him with humility, "Choose any one of these women who is suitable, as an ornament of the celestial world."

15. Saying "so be it", the servants of gods complied with his Command. They selected Ūrvaśī, the most beautiful among heavenly damsels and repaired to the celestial regions following her.

16. They paid their respects to Indra in the assembly of gods and while all gods were eagerly listening, described to him the superior spiritual power of Nārāyaṇa at which Indra was astonished and became afraid (at his indiscretion in offending Nārāyaṇa).

17. It is for the good of the world that Lord Viṣṇu incar-

7. The great gods verily burn down Kāma, the god of Love, by their angry looks. But they cannot burn down the unbearable anger which consumes them. Such anger is afraid of even entering his pure heart. How can Kama dare to enter his mind again ?

"O Tripurasūdana (destroyer of the three cities)! After taking birth as human beings, how did those sages become the brothers of Sage Vasiṣṭha? How did Mitrā and Varuṇa become known as their fathers? And how was Sage Agastya born from a pot? We wish to know all this." (Verse 20)

Īśvara (Śiva) said:
"Nārada! In ancient times, the eternal Lord Viṣṇu once took birth as the son of Dharma and engaged in great penance on Mount Gandhamādana. Seeing his severe austerities, Indra became fearful and, in order to create obstacles, sent along with the Apsarās the spring season (Vasanta) and Kāma (god of love).

At that time, Śrī Hari was neither affected by their singing, music, perfumes, and ornaments nor was his mind disturbed by the sensual enjoyments presented by Vasanta and Kāma. Seeing this, Kāma, Vasanta, and the group of Apsarās fell into deep dejection.

Then, Nārāyaṇa, the elder of the two brothers (Nara and Nārāyaṇa), to especially agitate them, produced from his own thigh a woman so enchanting that she could captivate all beings in the three worlds. That woman thoroughly disturbed all the gods and even those two foremost deities (Kāma and Vasanta).

At that moment, Śrī Hari said in front of the Apsarās to the gods:
'O Devas! This is an Apsarā. In the world, she will be renowned by the name Urvashī.'"

"Another similar episode is described about Rishi Markandeya, considered a partial incarnation of Narayana. While he was engaged in intense penance, Indra sent numerous Apsaras to distract and tempt him. However, Rishi Markandeya remained completely unmoved by their beauty and steadfast in his tapasya. As a result of his unwavering devotion, he was ultimately blessed with the divine darshan of Nara and Narayana Rishi."

Srimad Bhagvatam Skanda 12 Adhaya 8 Slokas 8-32

He observed the great vow of celibacy for life, was quiescent (as he brought passions under his control). He wore matted hair (on his head), bark garments, the sacred thread and the girdle of Kuśa grass. He carried a water jar of gourd and a staff in his hands.

He wore a deer skin and had a rosary of Rudrākṣa beads and Kusa grass. For the enhancement of his disciplined life and merits, he worshipped Hari present in the (sacrificial) fire, the sun, his preceptor, Brāhmaṇas and within himself both in the morning and in the evening.

He brought food received as alms, both morning and in the evening, and offered it to his preceptor silently. If per-mitted by his preceptor, he partook of the food once (in a day) and observed fast if no permission was given (due to the arrival of an unexpected guest, etc.)

In this way, while absorbed in the performance of penance and Vedic studies, he engaged himself in worshipping Lord Hari for millions of years and conquered death which is extremely difficult to overcome.

By this (conquest over death) god Brahmā, Bhrgu, god Śiva, Dakşa and other sons of god Brahma (such as Narada and men, gods, manes and all other beings (in the world) marvelled greatly (at his wonderful achievement).

Possessed of austere penance, deep Vedic studies and self-control, he observed the great vow of life-long celibacy. All the distracting passions in his heart were destroyed. With his mind drawn within, that Yogin meditated upon the Supra-sensuous Lord Hari.

Even as the Yogin was engaged in concentrating his mind through the great Yoga on the Supreme person, a long period of time extending over six Manvantaras had passed away.

It is said that when Indra came to know of this (performance of penance) in the present seventh Manvantara, he became alarmed at it and began to create interruptions in it, O Brahmaṇa (Saunaka).

(with a view to interrupting his penance and pre- cipitating his own fall) he deputed to the sage, divine musicians, celestial dancing girls, Cupid (god of Love), the presiding deities of the spring season and the gentle breeze from the Malaya mountain wafting (love-exciting) fragrance as well as greed and pride, the sons (or the products) of rajas.

All of them went to the northern slopes of the Himalayas where the river Puspabhadrā flows and to the slab of stone called Citra, O Lord (Saunaka).

The premises of that holy hermitage were adorned with sacred trees (like Aśvattha) and creepers, densely occupied with families of holy Brahmaṇa sages and were full of pools of holy crystal-clear water.

It was resonant with the melodious humming of in-toxicated bees and loud with the cooing of joyous cuckoos. It was full of the vivacious movements of ecstatic dancing of the peacocks and of the flights of various birds in joy (displaying their delight).

Bearing with it the cool spray of mountain cascades and embraced by fragrant flowers (and hence wafting their sweet scent), the (southern Malaya) wind entered and blew gently exciting the passion of love (in the hearts of men).

The spring season manifested itself with the rising moon as the face of the night (i. e evenings beautiful with the rising moon), with rows of tender leaves and branches of flowers and clusters of trees entwined with creepers (as if in ~lose embrace).

Followed by the celestial singers (Gandharvas) with companies of artistes experts in vocal and instrumental music, and accompanied with a troupe of divine damsels, the god of love appeared with a bow and arrows.

Those servants of Indra saw the sage sitting steadfast with his eyes closed after offering oblations to the sacrificial fire, looking formidable (and hence unassailable) like fire in the human form.

The celestial damsels danced before him and the singers began to sing and the players of instrumental music played upon the Mrdanga, lute, Paṇavakas and horns.

While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and son of rajas (Greed were trying to agitate his mind, Kama (the god of love) set his missile of five-pointed shaft[1] to his bow.
26-27. While Puñjika-sthali (a celestial damsel in her role of a temptress was plying with balls (in the presence of the sage), her slim waist was as if afflicted (and hence unstable) under the weight of her full breasts, wreaths of flowers were dropping from her hair. Her eyes were (as if) wandering (i.e. she was constantly looking) this way or that way. While she was running after the balls the wind blew away her fine garment (sāri) as the zone (which was fastened round it) got snapped (and slipped).

In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Visṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa

Feeling confident that the sage is now (as good as) subdued, Smara (the god of love) discharged that shaft, but like all the endeavours put forth by an unfortunate person, his attempt (against the sage) proved futile.

Thus while committing that offence against the sage, they were being scorched by his spiritual lustre (and being afraid of what would be the consequence of their offence) they ran away as children do after rousing a snake, O sage.

There is certainly nothing wonderful in the case of the great-souled ones, O Saunaka, that the great sage, despite his being thus attacked by the minions of Indra, was not affect-ed by anger, infatuation and such other perturbing feelings resulting from ahaṁkāra.

Perceiving the paleness of expression (on the coun-tenance) of Kama and his troop of followers and hearing from them the spiritual splendour and power of the Brahmaṇa sage, (even) the glorious lord of the celestial region (Indra) was extremely astonished.

In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Visṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa

This Halala Putra pedophile follower quoted the Story of Maharishi Vishwamitra and Menaka Apsara . While MahaRishi Vishwamitra got attracted towards the beauty of Menaka Apsara because of not mastering the art of Tapas and complete mastery over all senses he later realised his mistake and felt Ashamed and grieved . He later left Menaka Apsara and went to the northern part of Himalayas practicing full celibacy and doing severe penance and as a result of which he got the status of MahaRishi despite the fact that he was not Son of Brahma ji . Even after getting the status of Maharishi he continued his penance for getting the status of BrahmRishi as he had not yet completely mastered his senses . While Vishwamitra ji was doing penance for getting the status of BrahmaRishi Indra Deva sent another beautiful Apsara named Rambha to distract Vishwamitra ji . However when Viswamitra ji realised Rambha had come to seduce him Viswamitra ji without falling prey to Rambha cursed Rambha to turn into stone for 10000 years and then he turned to more severe penance for 1000 years without breathing and without eating anything to fully conquer his senses and anger and finally got the status of BrahmaRishi by Brahma Deva after doing penance for many thousand years and winning over his senses and angers . His story is an inspiration and an example for those who say Lust and Anger cannot be conquered

Thus ends Canto Sixty-three in the Bālakāṇḍa of the glorious Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki, the work of a Ṛṣi and the oldest epic.

"This very great errand of the gods in the shape of beguiling Viswamitra conjointly with infatuating him by rousing his passion has to be done by you at this juncture." (Feeling abashed when told thus by the sagacious Indra (the thousand-eyed god), O Rama, the aforesaid celestial nymph gave the following reply with folded-hands to the ruler of gods: "This hot-tempered and eminent sage, Viswamitra, will pronounce a terrible curse on me, my lord: there is no doubt about it, O ruler of gods ! ("Since great fear on this score lurks in my mind, be pleased to take pity on me, and excuse me, my lord!" Requested thus with a mind full of fear by the frightened nymph on that occasion, O Rama, Indra (the thousand-eyed god) spoke as follows to her, who stood trembling before him with folded hands: "Do not be afraid, Rambha; may all be well with you! Please do my bidding. "Accompanied by the god of love, I too shall remain by your side in the form of a cuckoo, that captivates the heart by its enthralling notes in the vernal season when the trees assume a delightful appearance with their green foliage and fragrant blossoms "Wearing an exceedingly smart appearance full of manifold charms, do divert the mind of the celebrated sage Viswamitra (son of Kusika), who is given to austerities, O good lady!" Viswamitra heard the notes of the warbling cuckoo and with an overjoyed mind looked at Rambha too.

Attracted by the notes of the cuckoo as well as by the unique song and sight of Rambha, the sage now fell a-doubting (whether the nymph had come of her own accord or had been sent by Indra to interfere with his austerities). (10)
II
Concluding the whole mischief to be the doing of Indra (the thousand-eyed god), Viswamitra (son of Kušika), the foremost of ascetics, was filled with rage and cursed Rambha as follows: (11)

"Since you have tried to seduce me, who seeks to conquer lust and anger, O Rambha, you shall continue to stand as a tone image for ten thousand years, O hapless woman! An exceptionally glorious Brahmana (viz., Vasistha, a mind-born son of Brahma) richly endowed with spiritual energy acquired through austerities, O Rambha, will redeem you, who have been punished for your foul deed through my anger." (12-13)

Having spoken thus, unable as he was to control his anger, the highly glorious and eminent sage, Viswamitra, fell a prey to remorse on his having exhausted the stock of merits, earned through his austerities, by cursing the nymph. (14

Under his terrible curse Rambhā instantly got petrified. And, hearing the curse of the great Rsi Viśwāmitra, Love as well as Indra slipped away. (15)

The stock of his merit earned through austerities having been mitigated through his anger, O Rāma, Viśwāmitra too, though highly glorious, did not get peace of mind because of his unconquered senses. (16)

The spiritual energy stored through his austerities having been weakened, the thought entered his mind: "I shall no more give way to anger thus, nor speak on any account. (17)

"Nor shall I even breathe for hundreds of years. Indeed, having fully controlled my senses, I shall chasten my temper. (18)

"Till Brahmanhood is attained by me as earned through austerities, I shall do without breathing or eating for innumerable years. (19)

"Nor will my limbs get atrophied so long as I continue to practise austerities." In this way the celebrated Viśwāmitra, the foremost of sages, O Rama, scion of Raghu, took a pledge which had no parallel in this world, to embark on a sacred vow of refraining from breathing and eating for a (20) thousand years.

Canto LXIV

Petrifying by means of a curse Rambha, the celestial nymph sent by Indra to wean him from his austerities, Viswamitra resolves upon a further course of austerities

सुरकार्यमिदं रम्भे कर्तव्यं सुमहत् त्वया।
लोभनं कौशिकस्येह काममोहसमन्वितम्॥१॥

"This very great errand of the gods in the shape of beguiling Viswamitra conjointly with infatuating him by rousing his passion has to be done by you at this juncture." (1)

तथोक्ता साप्सरा राम सहस्राक्षेण धीमता।
व्रीडिता प्राञ्जलिर्भूत्वा प्रत्युवाच सुरेश्वरम्॥२॥

Feeling abashed when told thus by the sagacious Indra (the thousand-eyed god), O Rama, the aforesaid celestial nymph gave the following reply with folded hands to the ruler of gods: (2)

अयं सुरपते घोरो विश्वामित्रो महामुनिः।
क्रोधमुत्स्रक्ष्यते घोरं मयि देव न संशयः॥३॥

"This hot-tempered and eminent sage, Viswamitra, will pronounce a terrible curse on me, my lord: there is no doubt about it, O ruler of gods ! (3)

ततो हि मे भयं देव प्रसादं कर्तुमर्हसि।
एवमुक्तस्तया राम सभयं भीतया तदा॥४॥
तामुवाच सहस्राक्षो वेपमानां कृताञ्जलिम्।
मा भैषी रम्भे भद्रं ते कुरुष्व मम शासनम्॥५॥

"Since great fear on this score lurks in my mind, be pleased to take pity on me, and excuse me, my lord !" Requested thus with a mind full of fear by the frightened nymph on that occasion, O Rama, Indra (the thousand-eyed god) spoke as follows to her, who stood trembling before him with folded hands: "Do not be afraid, Rambha; may all be well with you ! Please do my bidding. (4-5)

कोकिलो हृदयग्राही माधवे रुचिरद्रुमे।
अहं कन्दर्पसहितः स्थास्यामि तव पार्श्वतः॥६॥

"Accompanied by the god of love, I too shall remain by your side in the form of a cuckoo, that captivates the heart by its enthralling notes in the vernal season when the trees assume a delightful appearance with their green foliage and fragrant blossoms. (6)

त्वं हि रूपं बहुगुणं कृत्वा परमभास्वरम्।
तमृषिं कौशिकं भद्रे भेदयस्व तपस्विनम्॥७॥

"Wearing an exceedingly smart appearance full of manifold charms, do divert the mind of the celebrated sage Viśwāmitra (son of Kuśika), who is given to austerities, O good lady!" (7)

सा श्रुत्वा वचनं तस्य कृत्वा रूपमनुत्तमम्।
लोभयामास ललिता विश्वामित्रं शुचिस्मिता॥८॥

Hearing his command and assuming looks which could not be excelled by another, the belle, who wore a bright smile on her lips proceeded to lure Viśwāmitra. (8)

कोकिलस्य तु शुश्राव वल्गु व्याहरतः स्वनम्।
सम्प्रहृष्टेन मनसा स चैनामन्ववैक्षत॥९॥

Viśwāmitra heard the notes of the warbling cuckoo and with an overjoyed mind looked at Rambha too. (9)

अथ तस्य च शब्देन गीतेनाप्रतिमेन च।
दर्शनेन च रम्भाया मुनिः संदेहमागतः॥१०॥

Attracted by the notes of the cuckoo as well as by the unique song and sight of Rambha, the sage now fell a-doubting (whether the nymph had come of her own accord or had been sent by Indra to interfere with his austerities). (10)

सहस्राक्षस्य तत्सर्वं विज्ञाय मुनिपुंगवः।
रम्भां क्रोधसमाविष्टः शशाप कुशिकात्मजः॥११॥

Concluding the whole mischief to be the doing of Indra (the thousand-eyed god), Viśwāmitra (son of Kuśika), the foremost of ascetics, was filled with rage and cursed Rambha as follows: (11)

यन्मां लोभयसे रम्भे कामक्रोधजयैषिणम्।
दशवर्षसहस्राणि शैली स्थास्यसि दुर्भगे॥१२॥
ब्राह्मणः सुमहातेजास्तपोबलसमन्वितः।
उद्धरिष्यति रम्भे त्वां मत्क्रोधकलुषीकृताम्॥१३॥

"Since you have tried to seduce me, who seeks to conquer lust and anger, O Rambha, you shall continue to stand as a stone image for ten thousand years, O hapless woman ! An exceptionally glorious Brahmana (viz., Vasiṣṭha, a mind-born son of Brahma) richly endowed with spiritual energy acquired through austerities, O Rambha, will redeem you, who have been punished for your foul deed through my anger." (12-13)

एवमुक्त्वा महातेजा विश्वामित्रो महामुनिः।
अशक्नुवन् धारयितुं कोपं संतापमागतः॥१४॥

Having spoken thus, unable as he was to control his anger, the highly glorious and eminent sage, Viśwāmitra, fell a prey to remorse on his having exhausted the stock of merits, earned through his austerities, by cursing the nymph. (14)

तस्य शापेन महता रम्भा शैली तदाभवत्।
वचः श्रुत्वा च कन्दर्पो महर्षेः स च निर्गतः॥१५॥

Under his terrible curse Rambha instantly got petrified. And, hearing the curse of the great Ṛṣi Viśwāmitra, Love as well as Indra slipped away. (15)

कोपेन च महातेजास्तपोऽपहरणे कृते।
इन्द्रियैरजितै राम न लेभे शान्तिमात्मनः॥१६॥

The stock of his merit earned through austerities having been mitigated through his anger, O Rāma, Viśwāmitra too, though highly glorious, did not get peace of mind because of his unconquered senses. (16)

बभूवास्य मनश्चिन्ता तपोऽपहरणे कृते।
नैव क्रोधं गमिष्यामि न च वक्ष्ये कथंचन॥१७॥

The spiritual energy stored through his austerities having been weakened, the thought entered his mind : "I shall no more give way to anger thus, nor speak on any account. (17)

अथवा नोच्छ्वसिष्यामि संवत्सरशतान्यपि।
अहं हि शोषयिष्यामि आत्मानं विजितेन्द्रियः॥१८॥

"Nor shall I even breathe for hundreds of years. Indeed, having fully controlled my senses, I shall chasten my temper. (18)

तावद् यावद्धि मे प्राप्तं ब्राह्मण्यं तपसार्जितम्।
अनुच्छ्वसन्नभुञ्जानस्तिष्ठेयं शाश्वतीः समाः॥१९॥

"Till Brahmanhood is attained by me as earned through austerities, I shall do without breathing or eating for innumerable years. (19)

नहि मे तप्यमानस्य क्षयं यास्यन्ति मूर्तयः।
एवं वर्षसहस्रस्य दीक्षां स मुनिपुंगवः।
चकाराप्रतिमां लोके प्रतिज्ञां रघुनन्दन॥२०॥

"Nor will my limbs get atrophied so long as I continue to practise austerities." In this way the celebrated Viśwāmitra, the foremost of sages, O Rāma, scion of Raghu, took a pledge which had no parallel in this world, to embark on a sacred vow of refraining from breathing and eating for a thousand years. (20)

इत्यार्षे श्रीमद्रामायणे वाल्मीकीये आदिकाव्ये बालकाण्डे चतुःषष्टितमः सर्गः॥६४॥

Thus ends Canto Sixty-four in the Bālakāṇḍa of the glorious Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki, the work of a Ṛṣi and the oldest epic.

Valmiki Ramayana Bala Kanda Sarga 65 Geeta Press Gorakhpur

"Leaving the northern quarter in which stand the Himalayas, Viswamitra (the eminent sage) now sought the eastern quarter and began to practise most severe austerities again.
(1)
"Undertaking the supreme vow of rigid silence extending over a period of one thousand years, O Rama, he embarked on a course of austerities which was most difficult to prosecute and had no parallel. "Even at the end of full one thousand years anger did not overpower the great sage, who remained stiff as wood (not even making any signs or gestures), even though he was in the meantime buffeted by many obstacles; for he had embarked on this course of austerities after making an unalterable resolution, O Rama! On his vow of prosecuting the austerities for a thousand years being completed, Viśwāmitra, who had taken that great vow, proceeded to take his food. Appearing at the nick of time in the guise of a Brahmaṇa, O scion of Raghu, Indra begged of him the cooked food that had been served before him.

"Having unhesitatingly given all the cooked food to the Brahmaṇa, and remaining without food, the whole stock having been exhausted, the great ascetic, possessed as he was of extraordinary power, did not speak a word to the Brahmana, firm as he was in his vow of silence. He became silent once more even as before and also suspended his breath: so the tradition goes.
(6-7)
"Viswamitra, the foremost of ascetics, did not resume his respiration for another thousand years. While he kept his respiration suspended, there issued from his head a smoke by which all the three worlds were thrown into confusion and felt heated as it were. Bewildered by his askesis and overshadowed by his glory, nay, stricken with agony, all the gods, Asis and Gandharvas as well as the Nagas, serpents and ogres thereupon sought the presence of and prayed to Brahma, the creator, as follows: (8-10)
"Though tempted and provoked to anger through many causes, O lord, the great sage Viśwāmitra is rising more and more by virtue of his asceticism. (11)
"Not even a minute flaw of any description can be seen in him. If, however, that which is keenly sought after by his mind is not granted to him, he is sure to destroy all the three worlds including the animate and inanimate creation by the fire of his askesis. Nay, all the quarters are enveloped in darkness and nothing is clearly visible. (12-13)
"All the oceans are turbulent and mountains are being riven. The earth is quaking and the wind is blowing violently at this time. (14)
"We are at a loss to discover its remedy, O holy Sir! Like unbelievers people are giving up their sacred duties. With their mind deeply agitated all the three worlds are (15) puzzled. "Nay, the sun stands totally eclipsed by he glory of that great Rşi. The great sage Viswamitra, who is fire personified, endowed as he is with unique splendour, O venerable Sir, deserves to be propitiated before he sets nis mind on wholesale destruction. Even as all the three worlds were consumed by the Fire of universal destruction in the past (at the ime of universal dissolution), they may ikewise be burnt by him. Therefore, let that very boon be vouchsafed to him, on which nis mind is set, even if he seeks to rule over he gods." Thereupon all the hosts of gods with Brahma (the progenitor of the entire creation) at their head called on and addressed he following sweet words to the high-souled Viswamitra: "Hail to you, O Brahmana Rṣi! We are highly pleased with your asceticism. "You have attained Brahmanhood by virtue of your severe austerities, O son of Kuśika! Accompanied by hosts of gods, O noly Brahmana, I further confer longevity on Jou. "Enjoy blessedness and eport according to your pleasure. May good betide you!"

Pleased to hear the benediction of Brahma and offering salutation to all the gods (lit., denizens of heaven), the great sage Viśwāmitra said, “If Brahmanhood as well as long life has been secured by me, let the mystic syllable OM (the key to Self-Knowledge), the sacred word 'Vasat' (which is used after the name of the deity to whom an oblation is made at a sacrifice, while pouring an oblation into the sacrificial fire) and the Vedas, which furnish us with details of Self-Knowledge as well as of ritual acts, seek me of their own accord. Let Vasistha, a mind-born son of Brahma, the creator, the foremost among the masters of the science of archery etc., (the sciences mastered by the Ksatriyas) as well as of those mastered by the Brahmaṇas (viz., the four Vedas, including the Upanisads, that treat of Brahma, the Infinite), call me as such a Brahmaṇa, O gods! If this supreme desire of mine is granted by you, depart then, O jewels among gods!” (21-24)

Conciliated by the gods, Vasistha, a Brahmaṇa sage, the foremost among ascetics, thereupon made friends with Viswamitra and said, “Amen!” (25)

“You are a Brahmaṇa seer no doubt. Every desire of your's stands fulfilled!” Saying so, the gods too returned each to his own abode in heaven as they had come. (26)

Having attained the highest status of a Brahmana, the pious Viswamitra too paid his homage to Vasistha, a Brāhmaṇa sage and the foremost among ascetics. (

Canto LXV

On Viśwāmitra not ceasing from his austerities even on his being conferred the title of a Brahmarṣi by Brahmā, Vasiṣṭha, as urged by gods, recognizes it and here ends the narration of Śatānanda. Having worshipped Viśwāmitra, King Janaka then returns to his palace

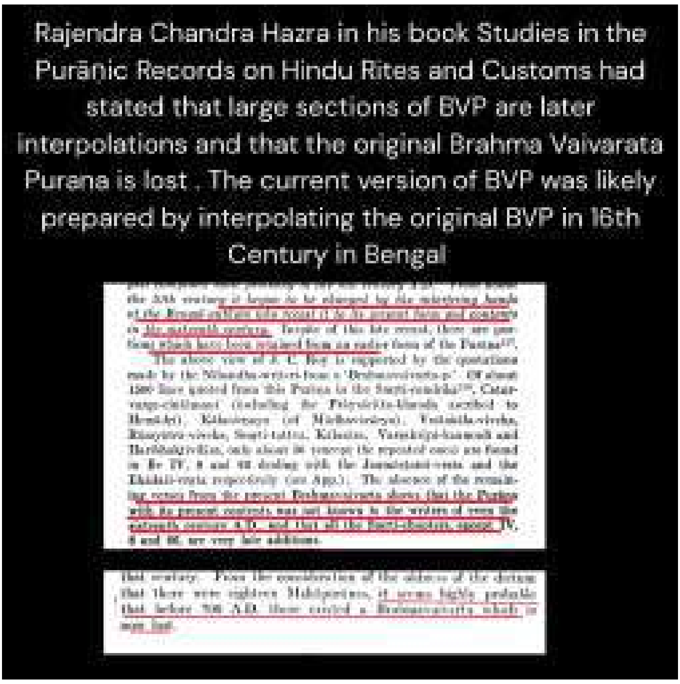
Allegations-

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda, chapter 24, verses 27-28 “I accept your command and also your daughter because refuse the company of a damsel, who is offered to a person drives him the kalasutra hell. Even if a passionate loose women approaches a person who has controlled his senses and in case he disregards her only keeping in view his dharm but by thus conducting himself he has to go to the hell.”

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda, chapter 30, verses 77 “Such of the self-controlled person who does not enjoy the company of the damsel who appears before him in a secluded place, he falls into the kumbhipaka hell and has to remain there till the number of years equivalent to the number of hairs on one’s body.”

Refutation–

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. ADULTERY IS SEVERELY CONDEMNED AND PROHIBITED IN SANATAN DHARMA

Mahabharat Anushashan Parva Adhaya 104 says that men of any of the 4 varnas should not do adultery with other men’s wives . The one who does adulterywith other men’s wives decreases his life time and stays in hell for thousands of years

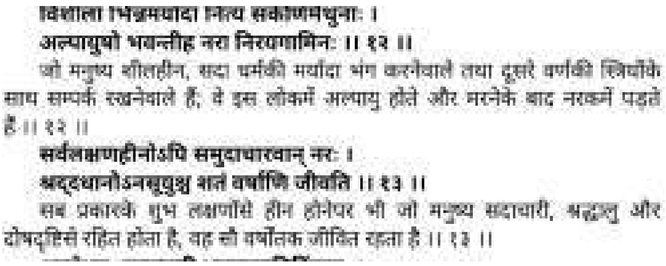
“Those men who are devoid of character, who always violate the bounds of righteousness, and who associate with women of other castes (in an illicit way) — such men become short-lived in this world and, after death, fall into hell.”

Verse 13
“Even if a man is devoid of all kinds of auspicious marks (external good signs), yet if he is virtuous, full of faith, and free from fault-finding, he lives for a hundred years.”



निःशीला भिन्नमर्यादा नित्यं संकीर्णमैथुनाः ।
अल्पायुषो भवन्तीह नरा निरयगामिनः ।। १२ ।।

जो मनुष्य शीलहीन, सदा धर्मकी मर्यादा भंग करनेवाले तथा दूसरे वर्णकी स्त्रियोंके साथ सम्पर्क रखनेवाले हैं; वे इस लोकमें अल्पायु होते और मरनेके बाद नरकमें पड़ते हैं ।। १२ ।।

सर्वलक्षणहीनोऽपि समुदाचारवान् नरः ।

सब प्रकारके शुभ लक्षणोंसे हीन होनेपर भी जो मनुष्य सदाचारी, श्रद्धालु और दोषदृष्टिसे रहित होता है, वह सौ वर्षोंतक जीवित रहता है ।। १३ ।।

Verses 20–21
“A man of any caste must never associate with another man’s wife. Through indulgence with another’s wife, a man’s lifespan is quickly shortened. In this world, there is no act more destructive to a man’s life than adultery.”

Verse 22

विद्वान् पुरुष विवाहसे पहले मैथुन न करे, अन्यथा वह ब्रह्मचर्य व्रतको भंग करनेका अपराधी माना जाता है। ऐसी दशामें उसे प्रायश्चित्त करना चाहिये। वह परायी स्त्रीकी ओर न तो देखे और न एकान्तमें उसके साथ एक आसनपर बैठे ही। इन्द्रियोंको सदा अपने वशमें रखे। स्वप्नमें भी शुद्ध मनवाला होकर रहे ।।

A learned man should not engage in sexual intercourse before marriage; otherwise, he is considered guilty of breaking the vow of celibacy. In such a case, he should perform expiation. He should neither look at another man’s wife nor sit with her alone on the same seat. He should always keep his senses under control and remain pure in mind even in dreams.

Anyone who has sex with a man or woman other than own husband or wife, suffers the pāpa of aborting the embryo.

"O noble one! We have heard that from that time onward, this rule was firmly established in human society;
it does not apply to other living beings."

Śvetaketu established this rule:
From today, any woman who abandons her husband and commits adultery will incur the grievous sin equivalent to the destruction of a fetus (embryo)."

And likewise, in this world, any man who, forsaking a maiden observing brahmacharya (celibacy) or a faithful, devoted wife, engages with another's wife, will incur the same sin."

O King, on festival days, union with a woman causes loss of wealth; if done during the daytime, it brings sin; if upon the bare ground, it brings disease; and if in a body of water, it results in misfortune.

With another man's wife, one should not engage—not even in speech, nor in thought—for those who commit intercourse with her are not even granted bone-formation [meaning, in rebirth they become boneless creatures such as worms, etc.].

Attachment to another man's wife is a source of fear in both this world and the next; in this life, it shortens one's lifespan, and upon death, one goes to hell.

Knowing this, a wise man should unite only with his own wife, free from the above-mentioned faults, during her season of fertility; and if she especially desires it, he may do so even outside her season.

This is explained in the sense of causing sorrow and requiring compassion."

The wise made seven boundaries, a man going beyond even one of them becomes distressed. They are theft, adultery, killing of a learned man, abortion, drinking, habitual addiction to wickedness, and false accusation of heinous crime.[5]

Rig Veda 10/5/6 says that anyone who commits any of the seven Moral Restraints (Sapta Maryada) becomes a Big Sinner

The wise have abandoned the seven moral restraints. Even one who commits any one of these actions incurs sin. Those who restrain humans from sin dwell near the sacred fire, in the realm of humans close to it, in the regions where the sun's rays roam, and in the waters.

Sāyaṇācārya, in his commentary on Ṛgveda 10.5.6, has clearly explained that the 'seven maryādās' (moral restraints) are not injunctions meant to be practiced or indulged in, but rather prohibitions—boundaries never to be crossed. These maryādās represent sinful acts that the seers strongly condemned, and Sāyaṇa explicitly interprets them as practices that are to be rejected and renounced, not observed."

कवयः मेधाविन ऋषयः "सप्त "मर्यादाः । कामजेभ्यः क्रोधजेभ्यश्चोद्धृताः पानमक्षाः स्त्रियो मृगया दण्डः पारुष्यमन्यदूषणमिति सप्त मर्यादाः । यद्वा । स्तेयं गुरुतल्पारोहणं ब्रह्महत्यां सुरापानं दुरुकृतकर्मणः पुनःपुनः सेवां पातकेऽनृतोद्यम्' (निरु. ६. २७) इति निरुक्ते निर्दिष्टाः सप्त मर्यादाः । अवस्थिताः "ततक्षुः । तक्षतिः करोतिकर्मा । सुष्ठु लङ्घनीयाश्चक्रुः । त्यक्तवन्त इत्यर्थः । "तासां मर्यादानाम् "एकामित् एकामेव अंहुरः पापवान् पुरुषः "अभि "गात् अभिगच्छति । यस्त्वेवं करोति स पापवान् भवतीत्यर्थः । किंच "आयोः तस्य मनुष्यस्य "स्कम्भः स्कम्भयिता निरोधकोऽग्निः "उपमस्य समीपभूतस्यायोः "नीळे स्थाने "पथाम् आदित्यरूपस्य स्वस्य रश्मीनां "विसर्गे विसर्जनस्थानेऽन्तरिक्षमध्ये वर्तमानेषु "धरुणेषु उदकेषु "तस्थौ विद्युदात्मना तिष्ठति । अनेन लोकत्रयवर्तित्वमिति ।।

"The wise seers, the intelligent Ṛṣis, have declared seven restraints (moral boundaries): desires born of lust, wrath born of anger, indulgence in intoxicating drink, gambling, women (i.e., illicit relations), hunting, punishment (i.e., violence/oppression), harsh speech, and other forms of abuse—these are called the seven restraints (मर्यादाः).

Or alternatively, (the seven restraints are explained as): theft, adultery with the teacher's wife (गुरुतल्पारोहण), killing of a Brāhmaṇa, drinking liquor, repeatedly engaging in wicked deeds, and false undertakings—these are the sins mentioned in the Nirukta (6.27).

These restraints (मर्यादाः) have been firmly established. They (the wise) cut them off, meaning: they (the virtuous) gave them up, abandoned them. Of these restraints, if even one alone is transgressed by a man, he becomes sinful. Whoever commits such an act is indeed sinful.

Moreover, the pillar (स्कम्भः), the upholder of the life of that man, is Agni, who restrains (as Nirodhaka). In the blue place of the sky, near the abode of the paths, in the region of the sun, at the point of release of its rays, in the midst of the atmosphere, in the supporting waters—there Agni abides in the form of lightning. By this (it is shown) that Agni pervades the three worlds."

Brahma Vaivarata Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda, 33.47-63 Hari smiled when he heard all this and addressed him with words, delightful, substantial, truthful and beneficial to the world thus: “O Brahma, you are conversant with the Vedas. You are chief of the spiritual guides of the learned; and yet you have performed and act which cannot be committed by a murderer. Why did you subdue your passions? Nay, even in India, if a woman excited with passion accidently appears before a man and desires his company, the latter, even if dispassionate, should not reject her offer.

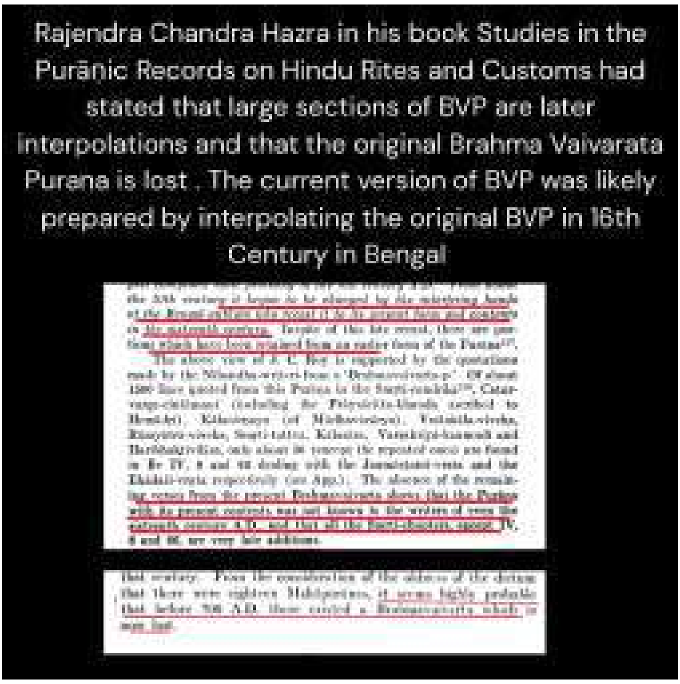
Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. Alas! Indra, Agni, Moon, and Brahmâ when these get overpowered by the strong influence of lust, are in illicit love with others' wives, where is the goodness and virtuous behavior in this Trilokî?"

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmad-bhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sati (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[174] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and then wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[175] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[176] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[177] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[178] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[179] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

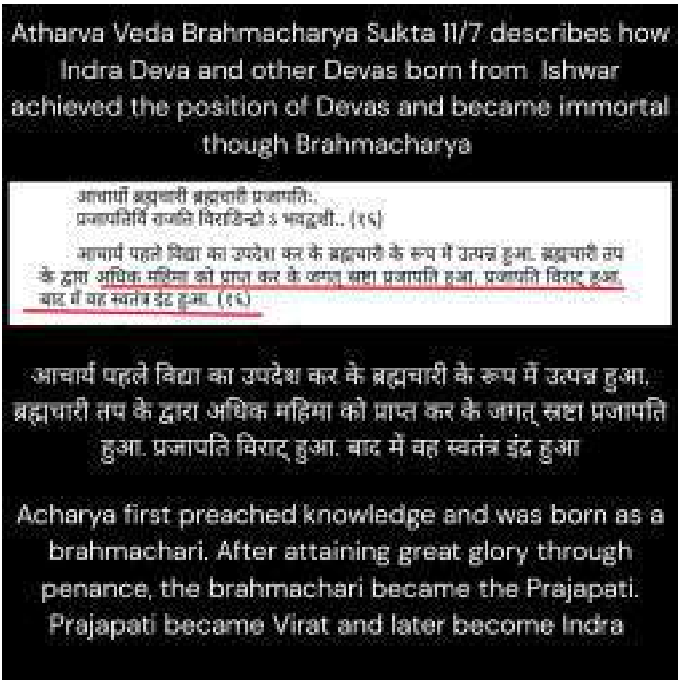
THE REAL CHARACTER OF DEVAS BASED ON VEDAS

In the above section I had already established that all Devas follow strict Brahmacharya and abstrains from all types of illicit sexual intercourse and follow celibacy and avoid all Sinful tasks

Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7 describes how Indra Deva and other Devas born from Ishwar achieved the position of Devas and became immortal though Brahmacharya

आचार्य पहले विद्या का उपदेश कर के ब्रह्मचारी के रूप में उत्पन्न हुआ. ब्रह्मचारी तप के द्वारा अधिक महिमा को प्राप्त कर के जगत् स्रष्टा प्रजापति हुआ. प्रजापति विराट् हुआ. बाद में वह स्वतंत्र इंद्र हुआ

Acharya first preached knowledge and was born as a brahmachari. After attaining great glory through penance, the brahmachari became the Prajapati. Prajapati became Virat and later become Indra



Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7/19

ब्रह्मचर्य रूपी तप के द्वारा देवों ने मृत्यु का हनन कर दिया अर्थात् देव अमर हो गए. इंद्र ने ब्रह्मचर्य के द्वारा देवों के लिए स्वर्ग पर अधिकार किया

Through the penance of Brahmacharya , the Devas defeated death, that is, the Devas became immortal. Indra took control of Swarga for the Devas through Brahmacharya.

Atharva Veda 11/7/7

उस ब्रह्मचारी ने ब्राह्मण जाति के जल अर्थात् गंगा आदि नदियों को, स्वर्ग आदि लोकों को, प्रजाओं की सृष्टि करने वाले प्रजापति को तथा प्रजापति के बाद सृष्टि की रचना करने वाले परमेष्ठी को उत्पन्न किया. वह ब्रह्मचारी मृत्यु रहित ब्रह्म की सत्ता, रज, तमोगुण वाली प्रकृति में गर्भ बन कर सब को जन्म देता है. उस ने तप के बल से इंद्र हो कर देवों के विरोधी असुरों का विनाश किया.

"That Brahmachari created the sacred waters of the Brahmin class, such as the Ganga and other rivers, the heavenly realms, the Prajapatis who created living beings, and thereafter, the supreme creator (Parameshthi) who ontinued the creation. That Brahmachari, being the immortal essence of Brahman, enters into nature—which is endowed with the qualities of rajas (activity) and tamas (inertia)—as a womb, and gives birth to all. Through the power of his Brahmacharya , he became Indra and destroyed the Asuras who opposed the Devas ."

Atharva Veda 11/7/11 states only By Brahmacharya one can become Devas including Devraj Indra and other Devas

इस स्वर्ग के नीचे एक सूर्यात्मक अग्नि है और दूसरी पृथ्वी के ऊपर है. इस स्वर्ग और धरती के मध्य दोनों अग्नियां आपस में मिल कर उदय होती हैं. उन सूर्य और अग्नि से संबंधित किरणें धरती और स्वर्ग के मध्य आश्रय लेती हैं. ब्रह्मचारी अपने तप की महिमा से उन का देवता बनता है.

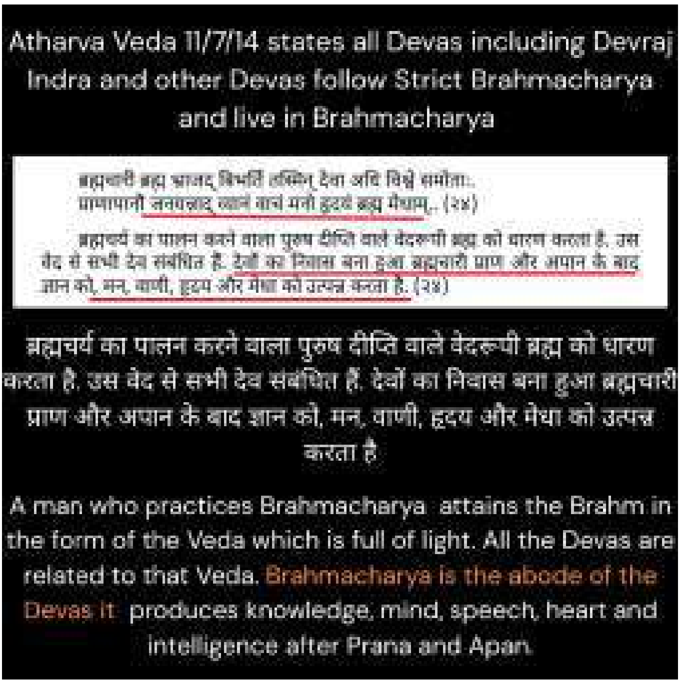
A man who practices Brahmacharya attains the Brahm in the form of the Veda which is full of light. All the Devas are related to that Veda. Brahmacharya is the abode of the Devas it produces knowledge, mind, speech, heart and intelligence after Prana and Apan.



Abstraining from Illicit sexual intercourse , following celibacy , behaving free from Sin and keeping your senses under control are all essential parts of Brahmacharya which are followed by All Devas including Devraj Indra

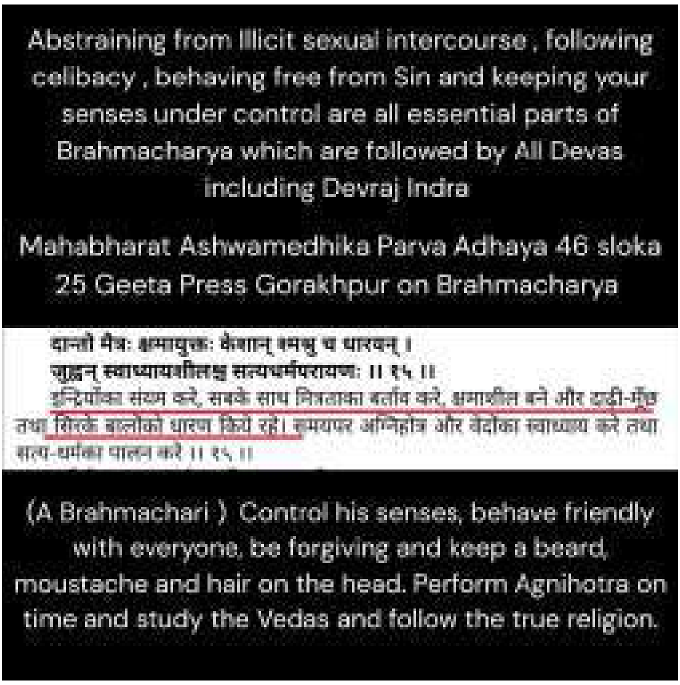
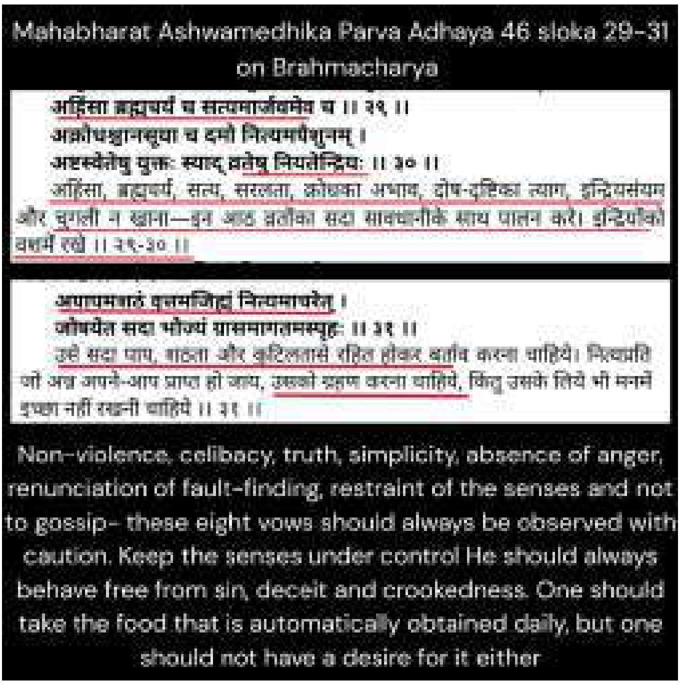
(A Brahmachari) Control his senses, behave friendly with everyone, be forgiving and keep a beard, moustache and hair on the head. Perform Agnihotra on time and study the Vedas and follow the true religion.

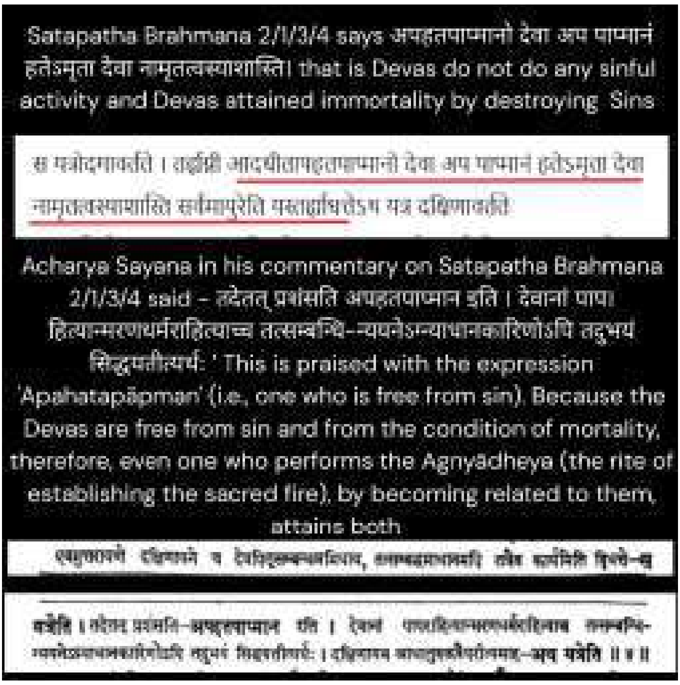
Non-violence, celibacy, truth, simplicity, absence of anger, renunciation of fault-finding, restraint of the senses and not to gossip- these eight vows should always be observed with caution. Keep the senses under control He should always behave free from sin, deceit and crookedness. One should take the food that is automatically obtained daily, but one should not have a desire for it either





Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 says अपहतपाप्मानो देवा अप पाप्मानं हतेऽमृता देवा नामृतत्वस्याशास्ति। that is Devas do not do any sinful activity and Devas attained immortality by destroying Sins

Acharya Sayana in his commentary on Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 said – तदेतत् प्रशंसति अपहतपाप्मान इति । देवानां पाप। हित्यान्मरणधर्मराहित्याच्च तत्सम्बन्धि-न्ययनेऽग्न्याधानकारिणोऽपि तदुभयं सिद्ध्यतीत्यर्थः ' This is praised with the expression 'Apahatapāpman' (i.e., one who is free from sin). Because the Devas are free from sin and from the condition of mortality, therefore, even one who performs the Agnyādheya (the rite of establishing the sacred fire), by becoming related to them, attains both



Allegations-

Shiva

In the Mahabharata, Shiva is said to have fornicated with wives and daughters of Rishis, Mahabharata 13.14.157 "He sports with the daughters and wives of the Rishis. His hair is long and erect. He is perfectly nude for he has the horizon for his dress. He has terrible eyes."

Padma Purana I.56.1-10 states that Shiva saw some beautiful Gandharis, Kinnaras and humans and wanted to have sex with them, he cast a spell on them which dragged them into the sky, where he had sex with them, meanwhile Parvati saw all that and became angry, she assumed a form and assaulted those women, as a result, their faces were disfigured, she also cursed them due to which they became Chandalas.

Padma Purana, Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa 1, chapter 56, verses 1-10 "Formerly, Śarva (i.e. Śaṅkara), having seen youthful and beautiful women of Gandharvas, Kinnaras and human beings, and with his mind set on them, pretended to be intent on practising penance, and with a spell dragged them far away into the sky. Then the great lord, the conqueror of the god of love, having fashioned a very delightful cottage, sported (there) with them. In the meanwhile, Gaurī's mind became excited. By means of meditation she saw the lord of the world, sporting with women. Knowing his intention she became angry. Then taking the form of Kṣemaṅkarī[1],

In Mahabharat 13/141/25-26 Maheshwar Shiva himself told to avoid the contact of other men wives as a sign of Dharma

Shri Maheshwara (Lord Shiva) said –
O Devi! Not causing harm to any living being, speaking the truth, showing compassion to all creatures, controlling the mind and senses, and giving charity according to one's capacity — these are the noble duties of a householder (Grihastha Ashrama). (Verse 25)

Maintaining these duties of household life —
Staying away from relations with another's wife, protecting entrusted goods and the honor of women, not taking anything without giving in return, and renouncing meat and alcohol — these are five types (aspects) of Dharma that lead to happiness.
Each of these Dharmic principles has many branches.
Those who consider Dharma to be supreme should certainly follow this virtuous and meritorious path.

श्रीमहेश्वर उवाच

अहिंसा सत्यवचनं सर्वभूतानुकम्पनम् ।
शमो दानं यथाशक्ति गार्हस्थ्यो धर्म उत्तमः ॥ २५ ॥

श्रीमहेश्वरने कहा—देवि! किसी भी जीवकी हिंसा न करना, सत्य बोलना, सब प्राणियोंपर दया करना, मन और इन्द्रियोंपर काबू रखना तथा अपनी शक्तिके अनुसार दान देना गृहस्थ-आश्रमका उत्तम धर्म है ॥ २५ ॥

परदारेष्वसंसर्गो न्यासस्त्रीपरिरक्षणम् ।
अदत्तादानविरमो मधुमांसस्य वर्जनम् ॥ २६ ॥
एष पञ्चविधो धर्मो बहुशाखः सुखोदयः ।
देहिभिर्धर्मपरमैश्चर्तव्यो धर्मसम्भवः ॥ २७ ॥

(उक्त गृहस्थ-धर्मका पालन करना,) परायी स्त्रीके संसर्गसे दूर रहना, धरोहर और स्त्रीकी रक्षा करना, बिना दिये किसीकी वस्तु न लेना तथा मांस और मदिराको त्याग देना—ये धर्मके पाँच भेद हैं, जो सुखकी प्राप्ति करानेवाले हैं। इनमेंसे एक-एक धर्मकी अनेक शाखाएँ हैं। धर्मको श्रेष्ठ माननेवाले मनुष्योंको चाहिये कि वे पुण्यप्रद धर्मका पालन अवश्य करें ॥

Regarding the false claims on Padma Purana Shristi khanda Adhaya 56

Rc Hazra in his book Puranic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs page no 120 said that the chapters after chapter 43 in Shristi khanda (including chapter 56) are later interpolations into Padma Purana and was composed likely after the Satanic Islamic Muhammadans established their rule in India . So this chapter is a later interpolation and not part of Padma Purana originally

120 Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs [CH

(5) SṚṢṬI-KHAṆḌA.*. This Khaṇḍa, which is assigned the fifth place in our edition, is really the first of the set. The position of the Khaṇḍa is betrayed by the mode of its beginning as well as by the sequence and contents of the five Parvans given in chap. 1.

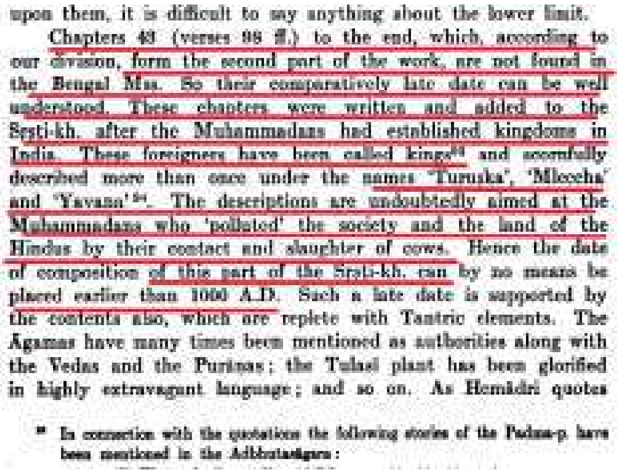
This Khaṇḍa, as we have it now, can be rightly divided into two parts:

(1) chaps. 1-45 (verses 1-97)

and (2) chaps. 46 (verses 98 ff.) to the end.

It will be seen hereinafter that the chapters of the second part were added to the Sṛṣṭi-kh. after the Muhammadans had established kingdoms in India. Hence the chapters of the first part, which are of earlier date, are examined first.

* The Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa in Bengal Mss consists only of 46 (or according to Aufrecht, 45) chapters. The corresponding chapters in a Bengal Ms. (No. 1661, D. U. Mss Lib.) of this Khaṇḍa and the AnSS ed. are given below:



upon them, it is difficult to say anything about the lower limit.

Chapters 49 (verses 98 ff.) to the end, which, according to our division, form the second part of the work, are not found in the Bengal Mss. So their comparatively late date can be well understood. These chapters were written and added to the Sṛṣṭi-kh. after the Muhammadans had established kingdoms in India. These foreigners have been called kings[43] and scornfully described more than once under the names 'Turuska', 'Mleccha' and 'Yavana'[44]. The descriptions are undoubtedly aimed at the Muhammadans who 'polluted' the society and the land of the Hindus by their contact and slaughter of cows. Hence the date of composition of this part of the Sṛṣṭi-kh. can by no means be placed earlier than 1000 A.D. Such a late date is supported by the contents also, which are replete with Tantric elements. The Āgamas have many times been mentioned as authorities along with the Vedas and the Purāṇas; the Tulasī plant has been glorified in highly extravagant language; and so on. As Hemādri quotes

* In connection with the quotations the following stories of the Padma-p. have been mentioned in the Adbhutasāgara:

Even Geeta Press Gorakhpur padma Purana has only 49 Chapters and no 56th chapter exists

Allegations-

Linga Purana, Section I, chapter 29, verses 46-64 "Formerly, a householder known as Sudarsana, vowed to conquer the God of Death. He said to his chaste wife. 'O lady of good holy rites, fine eye-brows and good fortune, listine to what I say, assiduously. Never should you dishonour the guests who visit your gouse. Since everyone of the guests is the Pinaka bearing lord, you should dedicate even your self to the guest and adore him…O excellent brahmins, in order to test their devotion, Dharma himself assumed the form of a brahmin and came to the house of the sage…Dharma disguised as a brahmin said 'O gentle lady where has your noble husband Sudarsana gone? O noble lady, enough of this cooked rice and other eatable! I say, you should dedicate yourself (to me)' Remembering what had been previously mentioned by her husband that chaste lady full of bashfulness and with closed eyes, began to move (towards him)…all the same, she made up her mind to dedicate herself to Dharma there itself at the behest of her own husband. In the meantime, Sudarsana, the husband of that lady, came to the threshold and called to her 'Come, come, O gentle lady? Where have you been?' It was the guest himself who replied to him. 'O Sudarsana, O highly blessed one, I am now engaged in sexual intercourse with this wife of yours. What should be done here may kindly be mentioned. O leading brahmin, the sexual intercourse is concluded. O excellent brahmin, I am satisfied.' Sudarsana the noble brahmin then said in great delight:- 'O excellent brahmin, enjoy her as you please. I shall go aw

Refutation-

Here is Linga Purana, Section I, chapter 29, verses 46-64 Geeta Press hindi translation . You can read this translation properly nowhere mention of any sexual interocourse or any uch thing like Adultery

The passage does not describe any act of adultery or misconduct by Dharma with the sage's wife. In this story, Dharma merely assumes the form of a Brāhmaṇa to test the devotion of the sage Sudarśana and his wife towards the sacred duty of welcoming guests. Following her husband's instructions, the chaste wife offers him water, arghya, and respect as part of guest service, without even a hint of impropriety. When Sudarśana returns home, Dharma reveals his true form, praises both of them for their unwavering adherence to dharma, and blesses them, declaring that through their devotion to atithi-pūjā (hospitality) they have conquered death. After granting them a boon, he departs. The entire episode is about the greatness of guest worship and not about lust, seduction, or adultery.

सुदर्शन ! मैं इस समय तुम्हारी इस भार्याके आतिथ्यसे तदनन्तर धर्मराजने अपना वास्तविक रूप उन्हें दिखाया और मनोवांछित वर देकर महान् कान्तिवाले धर्मने उनसे कहा- हे विप्रेन्द्र ! मैं यहाँ केवल तुम्हारी श्रद्धाकी परीक्षा करनेके निमित्त आया हूँ। हे सुव्रत ! तुमने अपने एकमात्र अतिथिपूजारूप धर्मसे मृत्युतकको जीत लिया है॥ ६१-६३॥ 'अहो, इस तपस्वीका ऐसा ओज' – इस प्रकार कहकर धर्म वहाँसे चले गये। [हे मुनियो !] इसलिये सभी अतिथियोंकी सदा पूजा करनी चाहिये। हे अभागे मुनीश्वरो ! अब अधिक कहनेसे क्या लाभ ? तुम लोग शीघ्र ही उन्हीं महादेवकी शरणमें जाओ ॥ ६४-६५ ॥

Verse 45
For crossing over the ocean of worldly existence (bhava-sāgara) and for the purification of the soul, there is no other means in this world for householders and noble twice-born ones except for the worship of guests.

Verses 46–47
In ancient times, a householder sage renowned by the name Sudarśana took a vow to conquer death. He said to his virtuous wife, who was blessed with children:
"O auspicious one! O beautiful-browed lady! O fortunate one! Listen carefully—
You must, with full effort, always honor and serve guests nd never show them any disrespect."

Verses 48–50½
“The guest is verily the embodiment of Śiva, the bearer of the bow Pināka. Therefore, even after offering everything you possess, worship the guest with full devotion.
O dear one! A guest is none other than Śiva Himself. One must give everything to a guest who is the very form of Śiva. Hence, all guests should always be worshipped without fail.”

Verse 51½
Hearing her husband’s words, that chaste wife, devoted to the path of pativratā-dharma, accepted her husband’s instructions like flowers offered before a deity, placing them on her head in reverence, and engaged wholeheartedly in serving guests.

Verses 52–53
O noble twice-born ones! To test the faith of that couple, Dharma himself came to their hermitage in the form of a beautiful Brāhmaṇa. Seeing that Brāhmaṇa, the pure-hearted wife of the sage worshipped him with offerings of water for washing the feet (arghya) and other rituals.

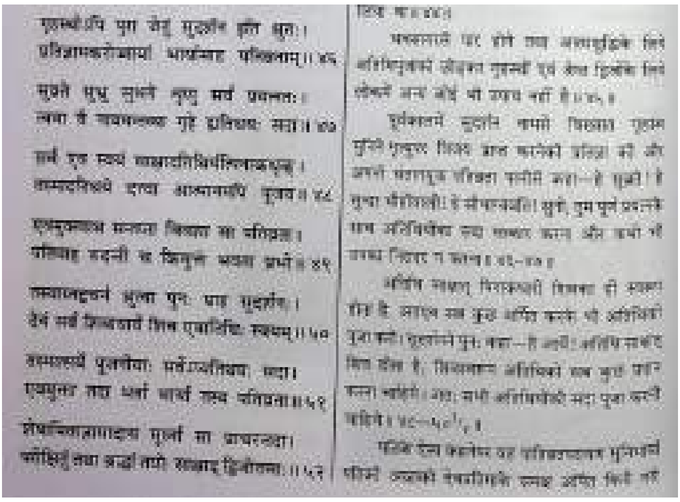
Verses 54–56½
“Where is the wise sage Sudarśana?”—asked the Brāhmaṇa. Then, recalling her husband’s instructions, that lady firmly resolved in her mind to serve the guest, who was in fact Dharma in disguise, with proper hospitality.

Verses 57–60½
Pleased by the thorough hospitality shown by that woman, the guest—Dharma in the guise of a Brāhmaṇa—spoke to her:
“O auspicious lady! Because of your service…”
Just at that moment, her wise husband Sudarśana arrived at the door of the house and called out:
“O gentle one! Where have you gone?”
Then the guest, Dharma himself, spoke to him:
“O greatly fortunate one! I am extremely pleased with you.”

Verses 61–63
After this, Dharma revealed his true form to them and, granting them a boon of their heart’s desire, spoke with great brilliance:
“O foremost of Brāhmaṇas! I have come here only to test your faith. O virtuous one! By your single-minded guest-worship, which is itself Dharma, you have conquered even Death!”

Saying, “Ah! What radiance this ascetic possesses!”, Dharma then departed.

Verses 64–65
Therefore, one must always worship guests.
O unfortunate sages! What more can be said?
Quickly, all of you, take refuge in that great Lord Mahādeva!



Allegations-

Shiva Purana, Satarudra Samhita 3, Chapter 26, verses 1-31 "O dear sage, listen to me. I shall tell you about Vaiśyanātha, the incarnation of Śiva, the supreme soul that yields great bliss. Formerly, in Nandigrāma there was a prostitute known as Mahānandā. She was very beautiful and a devotee of Śiva. Once Śiva assumed the form of a merchant and visited her house to test her. He had assumed the auspicious form of a devotee…The beautiful prostitute worshipped and welcomed the visitor with great joy. She made him sit with great respect….During the night she had her sexual union with the merchant who behaved like a libertine. She then went to sleep on the couch brilliant with a soft bed." Tr. J.L. Shastri

Shiva in order "to test" the devotion of a couple, went to their house as a Brahmin guest, the husband Sudarshana had advised his wife to treat their guests well as guests are equivalent to Shiva. Finding that Sudarshana was not in the house,

Refutation-

He has alleged on Satrudra Samhita of Shiva Purana .

According to R.C. Hazra and Ludo Rocher, the Śatarudra Saṁhitā, along with the Rudra Saṁhitā and Koṭirudra Saṁhitā, is a much later addition to the Śiva Purāṇa and cannot be dated earlier than the 14th century CE.

IX. Even as the Śatarudrasaṃhitā, the Koṭirudrasaṃhitā[582] is represented in the class B editions only. In this saṃhitā the sūta complies with the request of the sages to supplement his exposition on Śiva's incarnations with a description of "the divine phallic emblems of the great Lord, both in many places on earth and in any other places glorified by men." In addition to a number of upaliṅgas, the text deals extensively with the twelve jyotirliṅgas: Somanātha, Mallikārjuna, Mahākāla, Oṃkāreśvara, Kedāreśvara, Bhīmeśvara, Viśveśvara, Tryambakeśvara, Vaidyanātheśvara, Nāgeśvara, Rāmeśvara, and Ghuśmeśvara. Near the end the Koṭirudrasaṃhitā has a Śivasahasranāma, and devotes a few chapters to the Śivarātri. Here again, many chapters are said to have been taken from the Jñānasaṃhitā. In Hazra's opinion neither the Rudrasaṃhitā, nor the Śatarudra-

The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Śatarudra Saṁhitā.

saṃhitās, with different titles and different arrangements; two of their saṃhitās are not even listed in the Śiva° passages.[587] The following is a comparative survey of the saṃhitās, in the two passages of the Śiva° itself, and in the two sets of editions — which from now on I will refer to as class A and class B editions.

Śiva°	Class A Bombay 1884 Venkat 1895–96 Venga		Class B Venkat 1906, 1965 Paṇḍitapustakālaya 21: AITM
I. Vidyeśvara	XIII. Jñāna	ch. 78	Vidyeśvara/	ch. 25
II. Raudra	Vidyeśvara	25	Vighneśa
III. Vaināyaka	(Venga 16)		Rudra	197
IV. Bhauma/Auma	Kailāsa	12	Śatarudra	42
V. Mātṛ(purāṇa)	XIV. Sanatkumāra	59	Koṭirudra	43
VI. Rudraikādaśa	Vāyu/Vāyavīya		Umā/Auma	51
VII. Kailāsa	pūrvabhāga	30	Kailāsa	23
VIII. Śatarudra	uttarabhāga	30	Vāyavīya
IX. Koṭirudra	Dharma	65	pūrvabhāga	35
X. Sahasrakoṭirudra			uttarabhāga	41
XI. Vāyavīya
XII. Dharma(purāṇa)

It is clear from all this that the Śiva° is one of the more composite and unwieldy purāṇas, sections of which "were written by different hands in different climes and ages," it is also evident that "there were different traditions regarding the text of the Śiva-purāṇa."[588] Hazra, who did not include the Śiva° in his volume on the mahāpurāṇas, later published an extensive and comparative study of the various saṃhitās, which is repeatedly referred to in these pages. He came to the conclusion that the saṃhitās contained in the class A editions were generally the older ones, and that all other sections, manuscripts of which are rare, and the contents of which largely depend on the earlier saṃhitās as well as on other purāṇas, are more recent. In view of the great disparity between the two sets of editions, I will follow the order of the saṃhitās as set forth in the purāṇa itself.

In Mahabharat 13/141/25-26 Maheshwar Shiva himself told to avoid the contact of other men wives as a sign of Dharma

Shri Maheshwara (Lord Shiva) said –
O Devi! Not causing harm to any living being, speaking the truth, showing compassion to all creatures, controlling the mind and senses, and giving charity according to one's capacity — these are the noble duties of a householder (Grihastha Ashrama). (Verse 25)

Maintaining these duties of household life —
Staying away from relations with another's wife, protecting entrusted goods and the honor of women, not taking anything without giving in return, and renouncing meat and alcohol — these are five types (aspects) of Dharma that lead to happiness.
Each of these Dharmic principles has many branches.

Those who consider Dharma to be supreme should certainly follow this virtuous and meritorious path.

Allegations-

Krishan's grandson Aniruddha

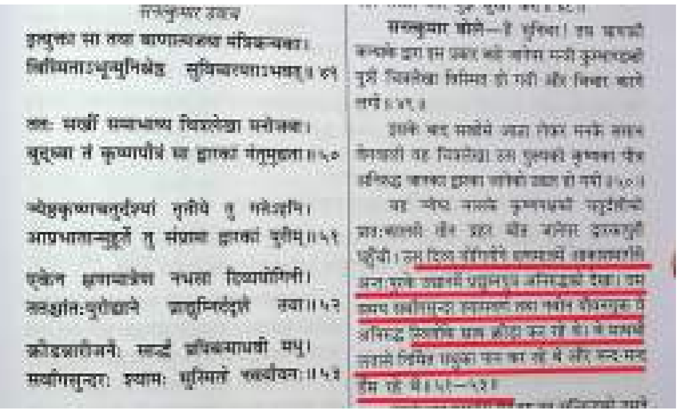
Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Yuddha Khanda section 5, Ch 52, verses 50-53 "Then taking leave of her friend, and knowing him to be the grandson of Ksna, Citralekha got ready to go to Dvaraka with the velocity of the mind…Then in the park of the harem the son of Pradyumna was seen by her playing with women and drinking wine. He was dark complexioned but beautiful in every limb, smiling in the prime of youth."

Refutation-

In the Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Yuddha Khanda, Section 5, Chapter 52, Verses 50–53 (Hindi translation by Gita Press, Gorakhpur), it is simply stated that Aniruddha, who had just attained youth (naveen yauvana-yukta), was playing with women. There is no mention anywhere of sexual intercourse or any sexual activity. Therefore, making allegations of adultery on the basis of such a straightforward description is completely baseless.

वह ज्येष्ठ मासके कृष्णपक्षकी चतुर्दशीको प्रातःकालसे तीन प्रहर बीत जानेपर द्वारकापुरी पहुँची। उस दिव्य योगिनीने क्षणमात्रमें आकाशमार्गसे अन्तःपुरके उद्यानमें प्रद्युम्नपुत्र अनिरुद्धको देखा। उस समय सर्वांगसुन्दर श्यामवर्ण तथा नवीन यौवनयुक्त वे अनिरुद्ध स्त्रियोंके साथ क्रीड़ा कर रहे थे। वे माधवी लतासे निर्मित मधुका पान कर रहे थे और मन्द-मन्द हँस रहे थे ॥ ५१-५३॥

On the morning of the fourteenth day (Chaturdashi) of the dark fortnight (Krishna Paksha) in the month of Jyeshtha, after three praharas had passed, she arrived at the city of Dwaraka. That divine yogini, in but a moment, traveled through the sky and beheld in the royal inner gardens the son of Pradyumna — Aniruddha. At that time, Aniruddha, whose entire form was beautiful, with a dark complexion and in the freshness of youth, was engaged in playful sport with women. He was drinking madhu from cups made of madhavi creepers, and was smiling gently. (Verses 51–53)



Allegations-

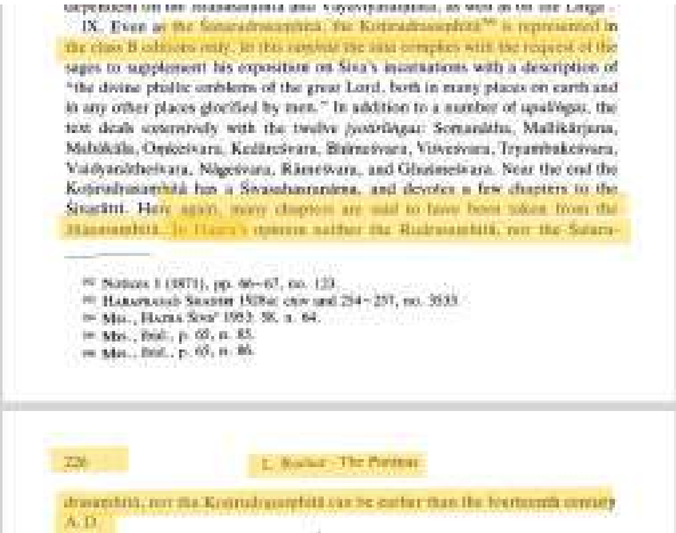
Vishnu

Shiva Purana, Satarudra Samhita 3, 22.45-46 In the meantime Visnu saw those damsels born of nectar sprays who were haughty due to their divine beauty and whose faces resembled the full moon. Fascinated by the cupid's arrow Visnu attained highest pleasure only there. He began to indulge in sexual dalliance with those women of exquisite beauty…"

Refutation-

He has alleged on Satrudra Samhita of Shiva Purana .

According to R.C. Hazra and Ludo Rocher, the Śatarudra Saṁhitā, along with the Rudra Saṁhitā and Koṭirudra Saṁhitā, is a much later addition to the Śiva Purāṇa and cannot be dated earlier than the 14th century CE.



The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Śatarudra Saṁhitā.

saṃhitās, with different titles and different arrangements; two of their saṃhitās are not even listed in the Śiva° passages.[97] The following is a comparative survey of the saṃhitās, in the two passages of the Śiva° itself, and in the two sets of editions — which from now on I will refer to as class A and class B editions.

Śiva°	Class A Bombay 1884 Venkat. 1895–96 Vaṅga		Class B Venkat. 1906, 1965 Paṇḍitapustakālaya [illegible]
I. Vidyeśvara	XIII. Jñāna	ch. 78	Vidyeśvara	ch. 25
II. Rudra	Vidyeśvara	25	Vighneśa
III. Vināyaka		(Vaṅga 16)	Rudra	197
IV. Bhauma/Auma	Kailāsa	12	Śatarudra	42
V. Mātṛ(purāṇa)	XIV. Sanatkumāra	59	Koṭirudra	43
VI. Rudraikādaśa	Vāyu/Vāyavīya		Umā/Auma	51
VII. Kailāsa	pūrvabhāga	30	Kailāsa	23
VIII. Śatarudra	uttarabhāga	30	Vāyavīya
IX. Koṭirudra	Dharma	65	pūrvabhāga	35
X. Sahasrakoṭirudra			uttarabhāga	41
XI. Vāyavīya
XII. Dharma(purāṇa)

It is clear from all this that the Śiva° is one of the more composite and unwieldy purāṇas, sections of which "were written by different hands in different climes and ages;" it is also evident that "there were different traditions regarding the text of the Śiva-purāṇa."[98] Hazra, who did not include the Śiva° in his volume on the mahāpurāṇas, later published an extensive and comparative study of the various saṃhitās, which is repeatedly referred to in these pages. He came to the conclusion that the saṃhitās contained in the class A editions were generally the older ones, and that all other sections, manuscripts of which are rare, and the contents of which largely depend on the earlier saṃhitās as well as on other purāṇas, are more recent. In view of the great disparity between the two sets of editions, I will follow the order of the saṃhitās as set forth in the purāṇa itself.

Scriptures such as the Mahābhārata—particularly the Viṣṇu Sahasranāma in Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149—describe Śrī Nārāyaṇa Deva as being utterly free from all defects, including lust, anger, and greed. He is Hṛṣīkeśa, the supreme master of all senses, and Śuddhātmā, the Pure Soul—completely untouched by impurities, attachments, and worldly illusions. Nārāyaṇa embodies absolute truth, divine consciousness, and eternal bliss, remaining beyond all material limitations and entirely free from sexual or any other form of desire or impurity. He is sinless—pure in every act, thought, and intention. As Dharmakṛt, He not only upholds dharma but practices it perfectly to establish it in the world. As Nivṛttātmā, His nature is intrinsically free from all worldly cravings, including lust and greed, and His mind remains eternally pure.

Allegations-

Kartikkeya

Kartikkeya was the son of Shiva. His mother Parvati told him to enjoy his life as wished. He took advantage of this and started committing adultery with the wives of gods. Many heaven dwellers tried to stop him but he didn't so they requested Parvati to do something. Urged by those people Parvati changed the appearance of women as herself whom Kartikkeya was approaching, so at last this stopped Kartikeya from committing adultery,

Brahma Purana: Gautami Mahatmya 11.2-5 "When the asura Taraka was killed and the three worlds became quiet and normal, Parvati spoke to her eldest son Karttikeya with great pleasure: 'By my consent and the grace of your father, be delighted in your mind. Enjoy as you please the worldly pleasures in the three worlds, which are dear to your mind.' Thus addressed by his mother, Visakha (Karttikeya) the beloved of gods, sported about as be pleased with the wives of gods. The wives of gods also sported about. While the wives of gods were being enjoyed, O Narada, the heaven-dwellers were not able to prevent Karrtikeya."

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmadbhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Saṃhitā (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[74] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and then wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[75] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[76] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[77] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[78] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[79] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

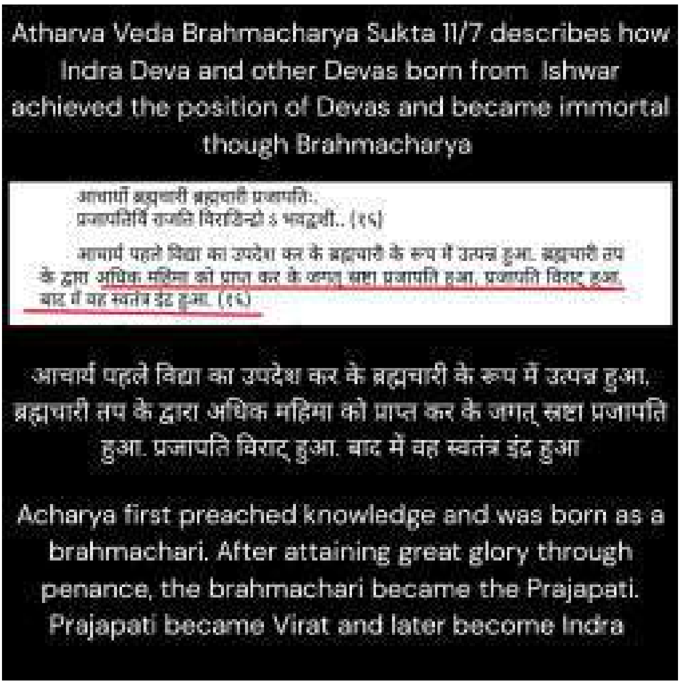
THE TRUE CHARACTER OF INDRA DEVA AND OTHER DEVAS FROM VEDAS

Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7 and Chandogya Upanishad says that Indra Deva and other Devas are eternal Brahmachari and follow Brahmacharya and as part of their vow of Brahmacharya abstains from all Types of Illicit Sexual Intercourse and lustful activities and follow Strict Celibacy . As per Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 Devas (including Devraj Indra) do not commit and avoid all Sinful activities and are free from Sin and Mortal Activities of Humans

Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7 describes how Indra Deva and other Devas born from Ishwar achieved the position of Devas and became immortal though Brahmacharya

आचार्य पहले विद्या का उपदेश कर के ब्रह्मचारी के रूप में उत्पन्न हुआ. ब्रह्मचारी तप के द्वारा अधिक महिमा को प्राप्त कर के जगत् स्रष्टा प्रजापति हुआ. प्रजापति विराट् हुआ. बाद में वह स्वतंत्र इंद्र हुआ

Acharya first preached knowledge and was born as a brahmachari. After attaining great glory through penance, the brahmachari became the Prajapati. Prajapati became Virat and later become Indra



Atharva Veda Brahmacharya Sukta 11/7/19

ब्रह्मचर्य रूपी तप के द्वारा देवों ने मृत्यु का हनन कर दिया अर्थात् देव अमर हो गए. इंद्र ने ब्रह्मचर्य के द्वारा देवों के लिए स्वर्ग पर अधिकार किया

Through the penance of Brahmacharya , the Devas defeated death, that is, the Devas became immortal. Indra took control of Swarga for the Devas through Brahmacharya.

Atharva Veda 11/7/7

उस ब्रह्मचारी ने ब्राह्मण जाति के जल अर्थात् गंगा आदि नदियों को, स्वर्ग आदि लोकों को, प्रजाओं की सृष्टि करने वाले प्रजापति को तथा प्रजापति के बाद सृष्टि की रचना करने वाले परमेष्ठी को उत्पन्न किया. वह ब्रह्मचारी मृत्यु रहित ब्रह्म की सत्ता, रज, तमोगुण वाली प्रकृति में गर्भ बन कर सब को जन्म देता है. उस ने तप के बल से इंद्र हो कर देवों के विरोधी असुरों का विनाश किया.

“That Brahmachari created the sacred waters of the Brahmin class, such as the Ganga and other rivers, the heavenly realms, the Prajapatis who created living beings, and thereafter, the supreme creator (Parameshthi) who ontinued the creation. That Brahmachari, being the immortal essence of Brahman, enters into nature—which is endowed with the qualities of rajas (activity) and tamas (inertia)—as a womb, and gives birth to all. Through the power of his Brahmacharya , he became Indra and destroyed the Asuras who opposed the Devas ."

Atharva Veda 11/7/11 states only By Brahmacharya one can become Devas including Devraj Indra and other Devas

इस स्वर्ग के नीचे एक सूर्यात्मक अग्नि है और दूसरी पृथ्वी के ऊपर है. इस स्वर्ग और धरती के मध्य दोनों अग्नियां आपस में मिल कर उदय होती हैं. उन सूर्य और अग्नि से संबंधित किरणें धरती और स्वर्ग के मध्य आश्रय लेती हैं. ब्रह्मचारी अपने तप की महिमा से उन का देवता बनता है.

Beneath this heaven, there is a solar fire, and another exists above the earth. Between heaven and earth, these two fires unite and rise together. The rays associated with that sun and fire take refuge in the space between earth and heaven. Through the greatness of his austerity (tapas), the Brahmachari becomes the Devas

Atharva Veda 11/7/14 states all Devas including Devraj Indra and other Devas follow Strict Brahmacharya and live in Brahmacharya

ब्रह्मचर्य का पालन करने वाला पुरुष दीप्ति वाले वेदरूपी ब्रह्म को धारण करता है. उस वेद से सभी देव संबंधित हैं. देवों का निवास बना हुआ ब्रह्मचारी प्राण और अपान के बाद ज्ञान को, मन, वाणी, हृदय और मेधा को उत्पन्न करता है

A man who practices Brahmacharya attains the Brahm in the form of the Veda which is full of light. All the Devas are related to that Veda. Brahmacharya is the abode of the Devas it produces knowledge, mind, speech, heart and intelligence after Prana and Apan.

Aitreya Brahmana 7/16 says amongst all Devas Indra Deva practices the most righteous path according to Dharma

विश्वेदेव उससे बोले 'इन्द्र ही देवताओं में सबसे अधिक ओजस्वी, बलवान्, महिष्णु, सत्यपर चलनेवाले तथा प्रभावशाली है, उन्हीं की स्तुति करो तो तुम्हें छोड़ दें।

Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 says अपहतपाप्मानो देवा अप पाप्मानं हतेऽमृता देवा नामृतत्वस्याशास्ति। that is Devas do not do any sinful activity and Devas attained immortality by destroying Sins

Acharya Sayana in his commentary on Satapatha Brahmana 2/1/3/4 said – तदेतत् प्रशंसति अपहतपाप्मान इति । देवानां पाप। हित्यान्मरणधर्मराहित्याच्च तत्सम्बन्धि-न्ययनेऽग्न्याधानकारिणोऽपि तदुभयं सिद्धयतीत्यर्थः ' This is praised with the expression 'Apahatapāpman' (i.e., one who is free from sin). The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Śatarudra Saṁhitā.

saṃhitās, with different titles and different arrangements; two of their saṃhitās are not even listed in the Śiva° passages.[97] The following is a comparative survey of the saṃhitās, in the two passages of the Śiva° itself, and in the two sets of editions — which from now on I will refer to as class A and class B editions.

Śiva°	Class A Bombay 1884 Venkat 1895–96 Venga		Class B Venkat 1906, 1965 Paṇḍitapustakālaya [illegible]
I. Vidyeśvara	XIII. Jñāna	ch. 78	Vidyeśvara	ch. 25
II. Raudra	Vidyeśvara	25	Vighneśa
III. Vaināyaka		(Venga 18)	Rudra	197
IV. Bhauma/Auma	Kailāsa	12	Śatarudra	42
V. Mātṛ(purāṇa)	XIV. Sanatkumāra	59	Koṭirudra	43
VI. Rudraikādaśa	Vāyu/Vāyavīya		Umā/Auma	51
VII. Kailāsa	pūrvabhāga	30	Kailāsa	23
VIII. Śatarudra	uttarabhāga	30	Vāyavīya
IX. Koṭirudra	Dharma	65	pūrvabhāga	35
X. Sahasrakoṭirudra			uttarabhāga	41
XI. Vāyavīya
XII. Dharma(purāṇa)

It is clear from all this that the Śiva° is one of the more composite and unwieldy purāṇas, sections of which "were written by different hands in different climes and ages," it is also evident that "there were different traditions regarding the text of the Śiva-purāṇa."[98] Hazra, who did not include the Śiva° in his volume on the mahāpurāṇas, later published an extensive and comparative study of the various saṃhitās, which is repeatedly referred to in these pages. He came to the conclusion that the saṃhitās contained in the class A editions were generally the older ones, and that all other sections, manuscripts of which are rare, and the contents of which largely depend on the earlier saṃhitās as well as on other purāṇas, are more recent. In view of the great disparity between the two sets of editions, I will follow the order of the saṃhitās as set forth in the purāṇa itself.

Sarasvati and King Pururavas

Brahma Purana, Gautami Mahatmya 31.2-9 "King Pururavas went to the abode of Brahma. There, by chance he saw the divine river Sarasvati laughing by the side of Brahma. On Seeing her richly endowed with beauty the king asked Urvasi: The King said: Who is this beautiful saintly lady near Brahma...Urvasi said to the king: This is the splendid divine river Sarasvati, the daughter of Brahma. She comes here daily and goes back…Then out of pleasure the king sent Urvasi there. Urvasi then went and repeated the words of the king. Sarasvati agreed to what was mentioned by Urvasi. She promised saying 'So be it' and went to the place where Pururavas was staying. He indulged in sexual dalliance on the banks of Sarasvati for many years. Sarasvan was born as (her) son…"

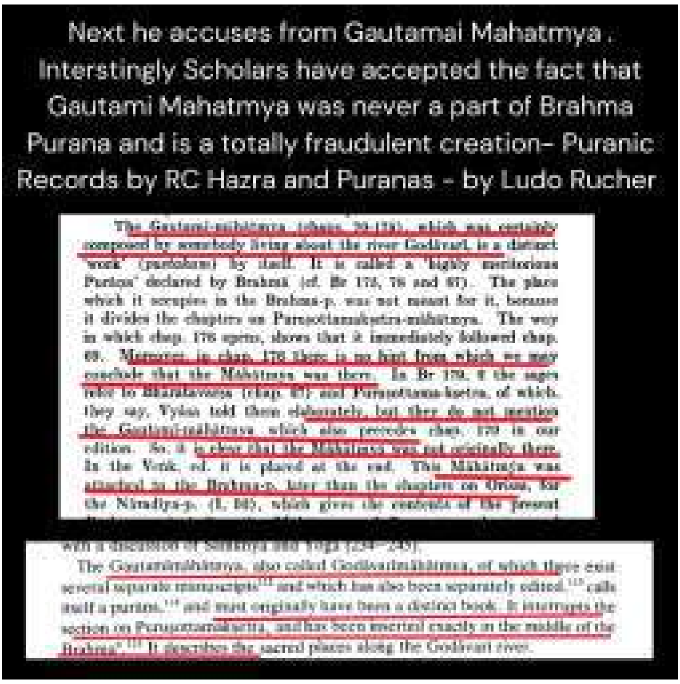
Refutation-

He accuses from Gautami Mahatmya . Interestingly Scholars have accepted the fact that Gautami Mahatmya was never a part of Brahma Purana and is a totally fraudulent creation- Puranic Records by RC Hazra and Puranas – by Ludo Rucher



Next he accuses from Gautamai Mahatmya . Interstingly Scholars have accepted the fact that Gautami Mahatmya was never a part of Brahma Purana and is a totally fraudulent creation- Puranic Records by RC Hazra and Puranas - by Ludo Rucher

The Gautami-māhātmya (chaps. 70-175), which was certainly composed by somebody living about the river Godāvarī, is a distinct work (purāṇam) by itself. It is called a 'highly meritorious Purāṇa' declared by Brahmā (cf. Br 175, 78 and 87). The place which it occupies in the Brahma-p. was not meant for it, because it divides the chapters on Puruṣottamakṣetra-māhātmya. The way in which chap. 176 opens, shows that it immediately followed chap. 69. Moreover, in chap. 178 there is no hint from which we may conclude that the Māhātmya was there. In Br 178, 4 the sages refer to Bhāratavarṣa (chap. 27) and Puruṣottama-kṣetra, of which, they say, Vyāsa told them elaborately, but they do not mention the Gautami-māhātmya which also precedes chap. 178 in our edition. So, it is clear that the Māhātmya was not originally there. In the Venk. ed. it is placed at the end. This Māhātmya was attached to the Brahma-p. later than the chapters on Orissa, for the Nāradiya-p. (I, 92), which gives the contents of the present [illegible] with a discussion of Sāṃkhya and Yoga (234–245).

The Gautamīmāhātmya, also called Godāvarīmāhātmya, of which there exist several separate manuscripts[111] and which has also been separately edited,[112] calls itself a purāṇa,[113] and must originally have been a distinct book. It interrupts the section on Puruṣottamakṣetra, and has been inserted exactly in the middle of the Brahma".[114] It describes the sacred places along the Godāvarī river.

Mitra

Vishnu created Urvashi and made her head of all Apsaras, Mitra had sexual relationship with him. This story seems to be another version of Mitra-Varuna ejaculating on seeing Urvashi.

Matsya Purana 61.25-26 "This is the nymph Urvasi, O Devas! and I have created her to become the head of all Apsaras. Then the God Mitra called her, and asked her to enjoy with Him, which she accepted."

Refutation-

Here is Matsya Purana 61.25-26 hindi translation by Geeta Press Gorakhpur . You can read nowhere written such thing .

यह देखकर कामदेव, वसन्त और अप्सराओंका समूह विषादमें डूच गया। तत्पश्चात् नरके अग्रज नारायणने उन्हें विशेषरूपसे क्षुब्ध करनेके हेतु अपने ऊरुप्रदेशसे एक ऐसी नारीको उत्पन्न किया, जो त्रिलोकीके मनुष्योंको मोहित करनेवालो थी। उस स्त्रीने समस्त देवताओं तथा उन दोनों देवश्रेष्ठोंको भलीभांति क्षुब्ध कर दिया। उस समय श्रीहरिने अप्सराओंके सामने ही देवताओंसे कहा- 'देवगण ! यह एक अप्सरा है। यह लोकमें उर्वशी नामसे प्रसिद्ध होगी ॥ २१- २९ ॥

Seeing this, Kāma (the god of love), Vasant (the spring personified), and the host of Apsarās (celestial nymphs) became filled with dejection.

Thereafter, to agitate them even more, Nārāyaṇa, the elder brother of Nara, produced from his own thigh a maiden so enchanting that she could captivate the minds of all beings in the three worlds.
That woman greatly disturbed (bewildered) all the gods as well as those two supreme sages themselves.
At that time, in front of the assembled Apsarās, Śrī Hari (Nārāyaṇa) said to the gods:
"O Devas! This is an Apsarā. In the world she shall become famous by the name Urvashī."

Krishna

Hindu apologists are masters of deceit and lies, they invent lies in such a clean manner that it deceives the gullible people. One such deceit is in defending the acts of Krishna. They say Krishna and Gopis were playing together when they were kids and in the play, Krishna and Gopis circumambulated the fire hence those 16008 Gopis accidentally became the wives of Krishna. Another rebuttal made by apologists is that, those 16008 girls belonged to a lower caste and were captured by a demon when Krishna defeated the Demon he married them to uplift their status.

So those were 16,100 Princess and later Krishna married additional 8 wives on various occasions, Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.55 Lord Devakī-suta, the chief of the Yadus, then took His dowry and Satyā to Dvārakā and continued to live there happily.

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.56 Bhadrā was a princess of the Kaikeya kingdom and the daughter of Lord Kṛṣṇa's paternal aunt Śrutakīrti. The Lord married Bhadrā when her brothers, headed by Santardana, offered her to Him.

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.57 Then the Lord married Lakṣmaṇā, the daughter of the King of Madra. Kṛṣṇa appeared alone at her svayaṁvara ceremony and took her away, just as Garuḍa once stole the demigods' nectar.

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.58 Lord Kṛṣṇa also acquired thousands of other wives equal to these when He killed Bhaumāsura and freed the beautiful maidens the demon was holding captive."

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.31 My dear King, Lord Kṛṣṇa forcibly took away Princess Mitravindā, the daughter of His aunt Rājādhidevī, before the eyes of the rival kings.

Srimad Bhagavatam 1.10.29 "The children of these ladies are Pradyumna, Sāmba, Amba, etc. Ladies like Rukmiṇī, Satyabhāmā and Jāmbavatī were forcibly taken away by Him from their svayaṁvara ceremonies after He defeated many powerful kings, headed by Śiśupāla. And other ladies were also forcibly taken away by Him after He killed Bhaumāsura and thousands of his assistants. All of these ladies are glorious."

The Verse of Linga purana doesn't give us the context of the story,It just gives brief two verse narration from Shrimad Bhagvata puran 10.59.33 so Account given in Bhagavata puran and mahabharat Should be studied in order understand the context here The english translators have interpreted उपभोग as pleasure and translated the verse – Shri Krishna married 16000 women for his own pleasure. That's utterly ridiculous! Scriptures declare that he rejoices in his own self- आत्मारामस्य कृष्णस्य ।। He is परब्रह्म, and is fully satisfied free of desires. He needn't be satisfied by anyone. The root/dhatu of भोग in उपभोग is भुज् which also refers to possess/obtain. So the verse actually translates as भगवान married 16000 women to obtain them (as wives). For example, in श्रीबृहद्भागवतामृतम् १.१.५०, it's written -महाप्रसादरूपान्नाद्युपभोग सुखाप्तित। Here, उपभोग has been interpreted as obtained.

Allegations-

Krishna married Rukmini after abducting her in a Rakshasa form of marriage which is described in Hindu scriptures as Rukmini herself wanted this to happen and later when Rukmi the brother of Rukmini came to know about it he fought Krishna to get back his sister,

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.54.32-33 "Seeing Lord Kṛṣṇa ready to kill her brother, saintly Rukmiṇī was filled with alarm. She fell at her husband's feet and piteously spoke as follows. Śrī Rukmiṇī said: O controller of all mystic power, immeasurable one, Lord of lords, master of the universe! O all auspicious and mighty-armed one, please do not kill my brother"

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.54.35 "Lord Kṛṣṇa tied up the evil-doer with a strip of cloth. He then proceeded to disfigure Rukmī by comically shaving him, leaving parts of his mustache and hair. By that time the Yadu heroes had crushed the extraordinary army of their opponents, just as elephants crush a lotus flower."

Refutation-

In Śrīmad Bhāgavatam (10.52.21–44), Devi Rukmini, the virtuous daughter of King Bhīṣmaka, had already chosen Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa in her heart as her husband and supreme Lord. However, her elder brother Rukmi, acting against her wishes, arranged her marriage with Shishupāla. Distressed by this, Devi Rukmini sent a confidential message to Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

In her letter, she expressed her unwavering devotion, declaring that she had surrendered her mind and heart entirely to Him, and that He alone was her chosen husband. She pleaded with Him to come and rescue her, stating that if He did not accept her hand, she would end her life by fasting unto death.

She further informed Śrī Kṛṣṇa that to marry her, He would have to confront and overcome the armies of Shishupāla, Jarāsandha, and other allies who would accompany the wedding procession, and then seize her from the ceremonial march to their family deity's temple, as per the traditional pre-wedding custom.

Thus, it became the Kshatriya duty of Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa to honor Devi Rukmini's wish—by carrying her away, marrying her, and valiantly confronting anyone who stood in their path.

Sri Suka narrated:

21. There was a great king called Bhismaka, a powerful monarch of the Vidarbhas. He had five sons and only one charming looking daughter.
22. The eldest son was Rukmi. After him was born Rukmabāhu and then Rukmakeśa, Rukma-malin and the pious Rukmini was their sister.
23. Listening attentively to the glorification of Lord Krsna's beauty, prowess, excellent virtues and affluence as sung by the visitors to her palace, she regarded him as her worthy spouse.
24. Krsna also made up his mind to marry her as he knew her to be a suitable wife due to her intelligence, auspicious characteristics, nobility of heart, beauty, high character and other excellences.
25. In spite of all brothers being desirous of giving their sister in marriage to Krsna, Rukmi who hated Krsna, came in the way of it and proposed śiśupāla, the king of Cedis.
26. Grasping the situation, the beautiful princess of Vidarbha was deeply agitated at heart. She pondered over the problem and immediately despatched a trusted Brāhmaṇa to Krsna with the mission of bringing him.

27. Arriving at Dvārakā, he was ushered into (Krsna's presence) by the door-attendants where he saw the First (the most ancient) Person (in the world) seated on a throne of gold.

28. Seeing him come, Lord Krsna who was always friendly to Brāhmaṇas, got down from his throne. Offering a (respectable) seat to the Brahmaṇa, he worshipped him (as an honourable guest) as gods used to treat him.

29. When he had taken his meals and rested comfor-tably, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the final asylum of the saintly people, appro-ached him and massaging gently his feet with his hand, he quietly enquired of the Brahmaṇa.

30. "Oh most prominent one among great Brāhmaṇas! Is your righteous course of conduct traditionally approved by the elders, going on without any difficulty? (I hope) you are (happy with it and) contented in your heart.

31. If a Brāhmaṇa adjusts himselfin contentment, with whatever he gets by chance, but does not swerve from his course of righteousness, he is like a wish-yielding cow capable of granting blessings to all the world (or that righteous course of conduct serves as a wish-yielding cow to him)

32. Even Indra, the king of gods, if discontented, has to wander from one world to another restlessly. But a destitute person, if contented, sleeps soundly without a touch of feverish anxiety to his body and mind.

33. I bow down again and again with my head to those Brahmaṇas who are happy with the realization of their self[2], pious and the best friends and well-wishers of all beings, free from ego, serene and self complacent.

34. Are you all happy (with a feeling of security) under your ruler, Oh Brahmaṇa? That king is liked by me in whose country the subjects protected by him lead a happy life.

35. Please tell me the place from which you have come here crossing this (unfordable) sea and the object of seeing me. If it be no undivulgable secret, please tell us every-thing-what we should do for you?"

36. When such relevant queries were made courteously to the Brahmaṇa by the Supreme Lord who had sportively assumed a human form, described to him in details (the situa-tion which led princess Rukmiṇi to depute him to Lord Krsna)*

37. Rukmini said in her message:

38. Oh the most-beautiful Person in all the worlds! Having listened to your excellent qualities which enter into the heart through (the passage of) ears and remove all the feveri-shness of the body and the mind, and of your excellent charms ensuring all the cherished blessings to those who possess eyes, my heart sheds all bashfulness and enters in you, Oh Immortal Lord!

39. Oh Krsna! Lion among men! What wise, judicious girl of very noble descent will not seek you as a husband at the proper time-you who are the most beautiful one among all men, and one's own compeer in family, character, personal charm, knowledge, youthfulness, affluence and splendour.*

40. I have, therefore, chosen you as my lord indeed. Oh Lotus-eyed dear lord! I have submitted my self unto you. Please do take me as your wife. Like a jackal polluting by his touch the lion's share of the prey, may not Siśupāla, the king of Cedis come hastily and touch the hero's share (i.e. myself).

41. If the Supreme Lord, the Almighty, has been pro-perly propitiated by me by religious deeds such as digging wells, performing sacrifices, giving donations, observance of religious rules and vows and the worship of gods, Brahmaṇas and preceptors and such other deeds, may Lord Krsna, the elder brother of Gada, come and marry me so that others like the son of Damaghoşa (Śiśupāla) may not take my hands. Oh Invincible Lord! May you come secretly with an army and generals to Vidarbha at the time of marriage which is to be celebrated very shortly. Defeat the armies of Caidya and Jarasandha, the king of Magadha, and take me away as the spoil of your prowess according to the Rākşasa form of marriage.1

42. 'How should I marry you who live in the precincts of the harem without putting your relatives to death?" If this be the ground for hesitation, I shall suggest you an expedient. On the day preceding the marriage there is (in your family a traditional) procession to our family deity. In that, the bride to be wed goes openly to her deity.*

43. Oh Lotus-eyed Krsna! In order to remove their personal ignorance, great-souled persons like god Śiva desire to have the dust on your lotus-like feet for covering their person as a bath. If I do not have this favour from you, I shall give up my life by starvation and other severe observance of vows so that at least after a hundred births I shall be favoured with your Grace.
The Brahmana said:

44. Oh Lord of Yadus! These are the secret words of the message that I have bought for you. Please consider what is worth doing in this (exigency of the situation), and prompt action should be taken immediately after this.

* Here Vrindāvan edition gives the additional chapters 56 and a part of 57. These are translated in the Appendix.

(respectable) seat to the Brāhmaṇa, he worshipped him (as an honourable guest) as gods used to treat him.

29. When he had taken his meals and rested comfortably, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the final asylum of the saintly people, approached him and massaging gently his feet with his hand, he quietly enquired of the Brāhmaṇa.

30. "Oh most prominent one among great Brāhmaṇas! Is your righteous course of conduct traditionally approved by the elders, going on without any difficulty? (I hope) you are (happy with it and) contented in your heart.

31. If a Brāhmaṇa adjusts himself in contentment, with whatever he gets by chance, but does not swerve from his course of righteousness, he is like a wish-yielding cow capable of granting blessings to all the world (or that righteous course of conduct serves as a wish-yielding cow to him)

32. Even Indra, the king of gods, if discontented, has to wander from one world to another restlessly.[1] But a destitute person, if contented, sleeps soundly without a touch of feverish anxiety to his body and mind.

33. I bow down again and again with my head to those Brāhmaṇas who are happy with the realization of their self[2], pious and the best friends and well-wishers of all beings, free from ego, serene and self complacent.

34. Are you all happy (with a feeling of security) under your ruler, Oh Brāhmaṇa? That king is liked by me in whose country the subjects protected by him lead a happy life.

35. Please tell me the place from which you have come here crossing this (unfordable) sea and the object of seeing me. If it be no undivulgable secret, please tell us everything—what we should do for you?"

36. When such relevant queries were made courteously to the Brāhmaṇa by the Supreme Lord who had sportively assumed a human form, described to him in details (the situation which led princess Rukmiṇī to depute him to Lord Kṛṣṇa)*

1586 Bhāgavata Purāṇa

Rukmiṇī said in her message :

37. Oh the most-beautiful Person in all the worlds! Having listened to your excellent qualities which enter into the heart through (the passage of) ears and remove all the feverishness of the body and the mind, and of your excellent charms ensuring all the cherished blessings to those who possess eyes, my heart sheds all bashfulness and enters in you, Oh Immortal Lord!

38. Oh Kṛṣṇa! Lion among men! What wise, judicious girl of very noble descent will not seek you as a husband at the proper time—you who are the most beautiful one among all men, and one's own compeer in family, character, personal charm, knowledge, youthfulness, affluence and splendour.*

39. I have, therefore, chosen you as my lord indeed. Oh Lotus-eyed dear lord! I have submitted my self unto you. Please do take me as your wife. Like a jackal polluting by his touch the lion's share of the prey, may not Śiśupāla, the king of Cedis come hastily and touch the hero's share (i.e. myself).

40. If the Supreme Lord, the Almighty, has been properly propitiated by me by religious deeds such as digging wells, performing sacrifices, giving donations, observance of religious rules and vows and the worship of gods, Brāhmaṇas and preceptors and such other deeds, may Lord Kṛṣṇa, the elder brother of Gada, come and marry me so that others like the son of Damaghoṣa (Śiśupāla) may not take my hands.

X.52.44. 1587

41. Oh Invincible Lord! May you come secretly with an army and generals to Vidarbha at the time of marriage which is to be celebrated very shortly. Defeat the armies of Caidya and Jarāsandha, the king of Magadha, and take me away as the spoil of your prowess according to the Rākṣasa form of marriage.[1]

42. 'How should I marry you who live in the precincts of the harem without putting your relatives to death?' If this be the ground for hesitation, I shall suggest you an expedient. On the day preceding the marriage there is (in your family a traditional) procession to our family deity. In that, the bride to be wed goes openly to her deity.*

43. Oh Lotus-eyed Kṛṣṇa! In order to remove their personal ignorance, great-souled persons like god Śiva desire to have the dust on your lotus-like feet for covering their person as a bath. If I do not have this favour from you, I shall give up my life by starvation and other severe observance of vows so that at least after a hundred births I shall be favoured with your Grace.

The Brāhmaṇa said :

44. Oh Lord of Yadus! These are the secret words of the message that I have bought for you. Please consider what is worth doing in this (exigency of the situation), and prompt action should be taken immediately after this.

Allegations-

Krishna also beat Jambavati's father before marrying her, Jambavati after fighting Krishna for 27 days presented his daughter to Krishna, Srimad Bhagavatam 10.83.10 "Śrī Jāmbavatī said: Unaware that Lord Kṛṣṇa was none other than his own master and worshipable Deity, the husband of Goddess Sītā, my father fought with Him for twenty-seven days. When my father finally came to his senses and recognized the Lord, he took hold of His feet and presented Him with both me and the Syamantaka jewel as tokens of his reverence. I am simply the Lord's maidservant."

Refutation-

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.83.10 – Bhagwan Shree Krishna was testing Jambavati's father whether he realises him as his master Lord Ramachandra and then Jambavati's father realized him to be none other than Lord Ramachandra and then he offered his daughter , Jambavati to Bhagwan Shree Krishna in marriage

Jāmbavati said :

10. My father could not recognize him (Lord Krsna) to be his (former) Master and deity, Rāmacandra, the husband of Sītā. He fought with him for twenty seven days. When he stood the test, my father came to know him, (to be no other than Ramacandra). Then he (my father) took hold of his feet and offered me along with the jewel as a present. (O Draupadi) I am not very great. I am his female servant .

Jāmbavatī said :

Allegations-

Krishna had also beaten up Mitravinda's brother before marrying her,

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.83.12 "Śrī Mitravindā said: At my svayaṁvara ceremony He came forward, defeated all the kings present — including my brothers, who dared insult Him — and took me away just as a lion removes his prey from amidst a pack of dogs. Thus Lord Kṛṣṇa, the shelter of the goddess of fortune, brought me to His capital city. May I be allowed to serve Him by washing His feet, life after life."

Refutation-

This story is about Queen Bhadra not Mitravinda . How did Bhagwan Shree Krishna marry Mitravinda

Srimad Bhagvatam 10.83.15-16 –

15. O Draupadi, my father of his own accord invited Kṛṣṇa who is my maternal cousin and as my mind was (attach-ed to and) fixed on him, gave me in marriage to him along with my maids of honour and an akşauhini of army.
16. May I be blest with the opportunity of serving his feet (lit. touch of his feet) in every birth whenever I may be tossed by my Karman. That touch of his feet) will confer on me the highest good (Moksa).

Mitravindā said :

15. O Draupadī, my father of his own accord invited Kṛṣṇa who is my maternal cousin and as my mind was (attached to and) fixed on him, gave me in marriage to him along with my maids of honour and an akṣauhiṇī of army.

16. May I be blest with the opportunity of serving his feet (lit. touch of his feet) in every birth whenever I may be tossed by my Karman. That touch of his feet) will confer on me the highest good (Mokṣa).

Bhagwan Shree Krishna married Bhadra by defeating her Brothers and kings who offered Resistance just like he married Devi Rukmini

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.83.12

Bhadra said:

Attending my svayamvara and defeating my brothers and kings who offered resistance, my Lord carried me away to his capital (Dvārakā) just as a lion seizes away his share (prey) from a pack of hounds. May I have the good luck of washing the feet of him who is the abode of the goddess Śrī, in every birth.

Bhadrā said :

12. Attending my svayamvara and defeating my brothers and kings who offered resistance, my Lord carried me away to his capital (Dvārakā) just as a lion seizes away his share (prey) from a pack of hounds. May I have the good luck of washing the feet of him who is the abode of the goddess Śrī, in every birth.

Moreover we don't have to forget the fact that All Queens of Bhagwan Shree Krishna including Devi Rukmini and Devi Bhadra were forms of Mahalakshmi herself – Garga Samhita 6.17.34 and Srimad Bhagvatam 10.59.43 so their Union in marriage was already fixed .

Srimad Bhagvatam 10.59.43 – All the 16000 Queens of Bhagwan Shree Krishna were Amsa of Maha-Lakshmi herself

43. In their mansions which surpassed all comparisons and were endowed with super-abundant affluence, the imperishable Lord of incomprehensible activities remained present (all the while simultaneously). Though he was perfectly satis-fied with his own bliss, he sported with those amsas (rays) of goddess Laksmi (viz. those newly wedded 16000 damsels) and like other house-holders attended to his house-hold duties

He alleged on Shri Krishna having 16108 wives . Bhagvatam and Mahabharat contains the narration on how Shree Krishna got 16108 wives.
Mahabhat Anushashan Parva Adhyay 15 says on request of Jambavati for getting a son like Pradyumna Shree Krishna went to Kailasa and did penace to impress Maheshwar Shiva and Devi Parvati . Devi Parvati granted the boon to Shree Krishna that he will have 16000 wives

भगवती उमाने कहा—अमरोंके समान प्रभावशाली श्रीकृष्ण! ऐसा ही होगा। मैं कभी झूठ नहीं बोलती हूँ। तुम्हें सोलह हजार रानियाँ होंगी। उनका तुम्हारे प्रति प्रेम रहेगा। तुम्हें अक्षय धनधान्यकी प्राप्ति होगी। बन्धु-बान्धवोंकी ओरसे तुम्हें प्रसन्नता प्राप्त होगी। मैं तुम्हारे इस शरीरके सदा कमनीय बने रहनेका वर देती हूँ और तुम्हारे घरमें प्रतिदिन सात हजार अतिथि भोजन करेंगे ॥ ७-८ ॥

Srimad Bhagvatam 10.59.43 - All the 16000 Queens of Bhagwan Shree Krishna were Amsa of Maha-Lakshmi herself

43. In their mansions which surpassed all comparisons and were endowed with super-abundant affluence, the imperi-shable Lord of incomprehensible activities remained present (all the while simultaneously). Though he was perfectly satis-fied with his own bliss, he sported with those amśas (rays) of goddess Lakṣmī (viz. those newly wedded 16000 damsels) and like other house-holders attended to his house-hold duties.

Mahabhat Anushashan Parva Adhyay 15 sloka 6-8
Bhagwati Uma said- Shri Krishna, who is as powerful as the immortals! This will happen. I never lie. You will have sixteen thousand queens. They will love you. You will get endless wealth and grains. You will get happiness from your relatives. I bless you that your body will always remain beautiful and seven thousand guests will eat in your house every day.

So in order to fulfill the boon of Devi Uma Devi Lakshmi by her amsa incarnated into 16000 forms - Garga Samhita 6.17.34

Whenever in the past I incarnated in the world the goddess of fortune would also incarnate as My queen. This time she will incarnate as My sixteen-thousand queens.

Allegations-

This Halala Putra Pedophile follower of a Child Rapist Pedophile Lusty Prophet is repeatedly alleging that Shri Radha ji was the aunt of Bhagwan Shree Krishna so we will debunk this allegation as well

Refutation-

Traditional Sri Vaishnava Acharya Pandit Madhvacharya Shastri explained in his book Purana Digdarshan page 516/788

दयानन्दियों का कहना है कि 'ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण' (ब्रह्मपर्व ५) में कृष्ण के साथ राधा के तीन अजीब रिश्ते बताये हैं। तदनुसार राधा कृष्ण की पुत्री, पुत्र-वधू, वा मामी हुई ।
वाह रे महाशयो ! बीच के श्लोकों को छोड़ कर और श्लोकों के आधे २ अशुद्ध टुकड़े लिख कर एवं प्रकरण-विरुद्ध कहीं की कथा कहीं जुटा कर और मनमाने अर्थ घड़ कर कृष्ण और राधा के अजीब तीन रिश्तों का कैसा बेतुका झूठा राग आलापा है ! तथा जनता को धोखा देने और भ्रम में डालने का कैसा घृणित प्रयास किया है !!
म उक्त श्लोकों को पूरा पूरा देकर प्रकरणानुकूल वास्तविक अर्थ दिखाते हैं। उक्त

प्रकरण में भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के दिव्य अंगप्रत्यंग से मानसी (अमैथुनी) सृष्टि का वर्णन है। जितने देव पुरुष श्रीकृष्ण के शरीर से उत्पन्न हुए हैं उन उन पुरुषों की स्त्रियां उन २ पुरुषों के बाएं अंग से उत्पन्न हुई हैं। जैसे-

आविर्बभूव तत्पश्चात् कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः । मानसाच्च पुमानेकस्तप्तकांचनसन्निभः ।।६।। तन्नाम 'मन्मथं' तेन प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः । तस्य पुंसो वामपार्वात् कामस्य कामिनी वरा । बभूवातीव ललिता सर्वेषां मोहकारिणी ।। ७।८।।
(ब्रह्म वै० ब्रह्म ख० ब्रह्म कल्प अ० ४)

अर्थात् – उसके पश्चात् परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण के मन से तपे हुए सुवर्ण की कान्ति वाला एक पुरुष उत्पन्न हुआ। उसको बुद्धिमान् लोग मन्मथ (कामदेव) कहते हैं। उस पुरुष कामदेव के वाम पार्श्व से (वाम अङ्ग से अति सुन्दर सब को मोहने वाली उसकी श्रेष्ठ स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई ।
उसी प्रकार-

आविर्बभूव कन्यैका कृष्णस्य वामपार्श्वतः ।
धावित्वा पुष्पमानीय ददावर्ध प्रभोः पदे ।। तेन राधा समाख्याता पुराविद्भिर्द्विजोत्तम । प्राणाधिष्ठात्री सा देवी कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः ।।
(२५ । २६ । २घ)

अर्थात् –परमात्मा कृष्ण से बाएं श्रङ्ग से एक कमनीया स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई । उसने भगवान् कृष्ण के चरणों की धोकर फूल लाकर अर्घ्य दिया, विद्वानों ने उसका नाम (आराधनात्) राधा कहा है। वह कृष्ण की प्राणाधिष्ठात्री देवी थी। अन्यत्र कहा है-

योगेनात्मा सृष्टिविधौ द्विधारूपो बभूव सः । पुमांश्च दक्षिणार्द्धाङ्गो वामाङ्गः प्रकृतिः स्मृतः ।।
(ब्रह्म बै० प्रकृ० खं० आ० १२ श्लो० ६)

अर्थात् – परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण सृष्टि रचना के समय दो रूप वाले हो गये । दाहिना आधा अङ्ग पुरुष और बांया अंग प्रकृति रूपा स्त्री हुई। ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण का यह वर्णन वेद एवं उपनिषदों के द्वारा प्रति-पादित है। जैसे-

स वै नैव रेमे तस्मादेकाकी न मैच्छत् स हैतावानास यथा स्त्रीपुमा रमते स द्वितीय-सौ संपरिष्वक्तौ स इममेवात्मानं द्वेधापातयत् ततः पतिश्च पत्नी चाभवताम् ।
(बृहदारण्यक १।४३)

अर्थात् – उस ब्रह्म ने रमण (सृष्टि उत्पादन रूप खेल) नहीं किया था इस कारण कि वह अकेला रमण नहीं करता। उसने दूसरे की इच्छा की। जिस प्रकार परस्पर ग्रालङ्गित स्त्री पुरुष होते हैं, वैसा उसका स्वरूप हो गया। उसने अपने को ही दो भागों में विभक्त कर डाला । वे पति और पत्नी हुवे। भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के वामाङ्ग से श्रीराधा की उत्पत्ति का भाव है कि वे एक से दो अर्थात् पति-पत्नी रूप में हो गये ।

आगे प्रकरण को देखिये-
वृषभानोश्च वैश्यस्य सा च कन्या बभूव ह ।
अयोनिसम्भवा देवी वायुगर्भा कलावती ॥
सुषुवे मायया वायुं स तत्राविर्बभूव ह ।
अतीते द्वादशाब्दे तु दृष्ट्वा तां नवयौवनाम् ।।
सार्ध रायणवैश्येन तत्सम्बन्धं चकार सः ।
छायां संस्थाप्य तद्गेहे सान्तर्धानमवाप ह ।।
बभूव तस्य वैश्यस्य विवाहश्छायया सह ।
कृष्ण माता यशोदा या रायणस्तत् सहोदरः ।।
गोलोके गोपकृष्णांशः सम्बन्धात्कृष्णमातुलः ।।
कृष्णेन सह राधायाः पुण्ये वृन्दावने वने ।
विवाहं कारयामास विधिना जगतां विधिः ।।
(ब्रह्म वै० खं० २ अ० ४६ श्लो० ३२ से ४२)

अर्थात् ब्रजभूमि में अवतार लेने पर वह राधा वषभानु वैश्य की कन्या हुई ।।२६।। वृषभानु की स्त्री कलावती वायुगर्भा (जिसके गर्भ केवल वायु मात्र थी) थी उसने वायु प्रसव किया। प्रसव होते ही

श्री राधा देवी अयोनिजा (गर्भ से उत्पन्न न होने वाली) प्रकट हो गई। ।।३७।। बारह वर्ष व्यतीत होने पर उसके पिता ने उसे नवयुवती होने वाली देख कर रायण वैश्य के साथ उसका सम्बन्ध – सगाई कर दी ।।३८।। किन्तु राधा जी अपने प्रभाव से अपने ही अनुरूप एक 'छाया' नाम की कन्या को उत्पन्न कर और उसे घर में स्थापित कर स्वयं अन्तर्धान हो गई, रायण वैश्य का विवाह उसी 'छाया' नाम की कन्या के साथ हुआ ।।३०।। श्रीकृष्ण की घायरूप माता जो यशोदा थीं, रायण उसका भाई था। वह गोलोक में गोप कृष्ण का अंश (अर्थात्– उन कृष्ण के अंश से गोलोक के सृष्टि प्रकरण में जिस प्रकार अन्य अनेक व्यक्तियों की उत्पत्ति हुई थी उसी प्रकार उत्पन्न होने वाला) सखा था। ब्रज में उनकी धाय रूप माता यशोदा का भाई होने के नाते श्रीकृष्ण जी का वह मामा हुआ। पवित्र वृन्दावन में श्री ब्रह्मा जी ने कृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का विधिपूर्वक दिव्य विवाह कराया ।।४०11

English

The Malechas claim that in the 'Brahmavaivarta Purana' (Brahma Parva 5), three unusual relationships between Krishna and Radha have been described. According to them, Radha is Krishna's daughter, daughter-in-law, and aunt.

Oh, what an absurd fabrication! By omitting intermediate verses, distorting portions of others, misplacing narratives from different contexts, and constructing arbitrary meanings, they have spun an unreasonable and false tale about Krishna and Radha's supposed relationships! What a despicable attempt to deceive people and sow confusion!

Now, I will present the complete verses with their correct context and meaning. This section describes the divine, non-physical creation (Manasi Srishti) from the sacred body of Lord Krishna. The women associated with the divine beings emerging from Krishna's form originate from the left portion of those male entities. For example:

That means: After that, a male figure emerged from the divine mind of Paramatma Shri Krishna, possessing the radiant brilliance of heated gold. The wise refer to him as Manmatha (Kamadeva). From his left side, a supremely beautiful woman, the most enchanting among all, was created as his consort.

Similarly:

आविर्बभूव कन्यैका कृष्णस्य वामपार्श्वतः । धावित्वा पुष्पमानीय ददावर्ध प्रभोः पदे ।। तेन राधा समाख्याता पुराविद्भिर्द्विजोत्तम । प्राणाधिष्ठात्री सा देवी कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः ।। (२५ । २६ । २घ)

That means: From the left part of Paramatma Shri Krishna, an exquisite maiden was created. She approached the Lord, washed His feet, and offered flowers as a sacred oblation. The learned sages named her Radha due to her act of devotion (Aradhana). She became the divine presiding deity of Krishna's life energy.

Elsewhere, it is stated:

That means: At the time of creation, Paramatma Shri Krishna manifested in a dual form. His right half took the form of a male, while his left half became the female aspect—Prakriti.

The description in Brahmavaivarta Purana aligns with what is established in the Vedas and Upanishads, such as:

स वै नैव रेमे तस्मादेकाकी न मैच्छत् स हैतावानास यथा स्त्रीपुमा रमते स द्वितीय-सौ संपरिष्वक्तौ स इममेवात्मानं द्वेधापातयत् ततः पतिश्च पत्नी चाभवताम् । (बृहदारण्यक १।४३)

That means: That supreme Brahman did not engage in divine play (creation) because He was alone. He desired another. Just as men and women embrace each other, His form transformed similarly. He then divided Himself into two parts. They became husband and wife. This signifies that Shri Krishna manifested Radha from His left side as His eternal consort.

Now, consider the further context:

वृषभानोश्च वैश्यस्य सा च कन्या बभूव ह । अयोनिसम्भवा देवी वायुगर्भा कलावती ॥ सुषुवे मायया वायुं स तत्राविर्बभूव ह । अतीते द्वादशाब्दे तु दृष्ट्वा तां नवयौवनाम् ।। सार्ध रायणवैश्येन तत्सम्बन्धं चकार सः । छायां संस्थाप्य तद्गेहे सान्तर्धानमवाप ह ।। बभूव तस्य वैश्यस्य विवाहश्छायया सह । कृष्ण माता यशोदा या रायणस्तत् सहोदरः ।। गोलोके गोपकृष्णांशः सम्बन्धात्कृष्णमातुलः ।। कृष्णेन सह राधायाः पुण्ये वृन्दावने वने । विवाहं कारयामास विधिना जगतां विधिः ।। (ब्रह्म वै० खं० २ अ० ४६ श्लो० ३२ से ४२)

That means: When Radha took birth in Braj, she was the daughter of the Vaishya, Vrishabhanu. Vrishabhanu's wife, Kalavati, carried only air in her womb (Vayugarbha). When she delivered, Devi Radha, who was Ayonija (not born from a womb), manifested immediately.

After twelve years, upon seeing her radiant youth, her father arranged a marital alliance with Rayana Vaishya. However, due to her divine nature, Radha manifested a shadow-like replica of herself, named 'Chhaya,' and installed it in the household before she disappeared. Thus, Rayana Vaishya married 'Chhaya,' not Radha.

Shri Krishna's foster mother, Yashoda, was Rayana's sister. Therefore, in a worldly sense, Rayana, who was originally a divine manifestation from Goloka, became Krishna's maternal uncle. In the sacred forest of Vrindavan, Lord Brahma solemnized the divine marriage of Shri Radha with Shri Krishna.

Thus, the Brahmavaivarta Purana clearly states that Radha was not married to Rayana Vaishya, but to Krishna Himself in a divine ceremony. Therefore, the false claims that Radha was Krishna's daughter, daughter-in-law, or aunt are completely unfounded.

Thus it must be clear from this that Radha ji did not marry Rayana Gopa . It was A Shadow form of Radha Chayya Radha who married Rayana Gopa . Moreover Rayana Gopa himself was an Amsa of Shree krishna . Radha Rani never married someone other than Shree Krishna . She remained always present with Shree Krishna as his inseparable divine energy .

क्या कृष्ण के राधा से तीन रिश्ते थे ?

दयानन्दियों का कहना है कि 'ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण' (ब्रह्मपर्व ५) में कृष्ण के साथ राधा के तीन अजीब रिश्ते बताये हैं। तदनुसार राधा कृष्ण की पुत्री, पुत्र-वधू, या पत्नी हुई।

हम उक्त श्लोकों को पूरा पूरा देकर प्रकरणानुकूल वास्तविक अर्थ दिखाते हैं। उक्त प्रकरण में भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के दिव्य संकल्पज से मानसी (अयोनिजा) सृष्टि का वर्णन है। जितने देव पुरुष श्रीकृष्ण के शरीर से उत्पन्न हुए हैं उन उन पुरुषों की स्त्रियां उन २ पुरुषों के वाम अंग से उत्पन्न हुई हैं। जैसे—

आविर्बभूव तत्पश्चात् कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः।
मानसाच्च पुमानेकस्तप्तकांचनसन्निभः ॥६॥
तन्नाम 'मन्मथं' तेन प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः।
तस्य पुंसो वामपार्श्वात् कामस्य कामिनी वरा।
बभूवातीव ललिता सर्वेषां मोहकारिणी ॥७।८॥

(ब्रह्म वै० ब्रह्म ख० ब्रह्म कल्प अ० ४)

अर्थात्—उसके पश्चात् परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण के मन से तपे हुए सुवर्ण की कान्ति वाला एक पुरुष उत्पन्न हुआ। उसको बुद्धिमान् लोग मन्मथ (कामदेव) कहते हैं। उस पुरुष कामदेव के वाम पार्श्व से (वाम अङ्ग से अति सुन्दर सब को मोहने वाली उसकी श्रेष्ठ स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई। उसी प्रकार—

आविर्बभूव कन्यैका कृष्णस्य वामपार्श्वतः।
धावित्वा पुष्पमानीय ददावर्घ्यं प्रभोः पदे ॥
तेन राधा समाख्याता पुराविद्भिर्द्विजोत्तम।
प्राणाधिष्ठात्री सा देवी कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः ॥

(२५ । २६ । २७)

अर्थात्—परमात्मा कृष्ण के वाएं अङ्ग से एक कन्यारूपा स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई। उसने भगवान् कृष्ण के चरणों को धोकर फूल लाकर अर्घ्य दिया, विद्वानों ने उसका नाम (आराधनात्) राधा कहा है। वह कृष्ण की प्राणाधिष्ठात्री देवी थी। आगत कहा है—

योगेनात्मा सृष्टिविधौ द्विधारूपो बभूव सः।
पुमांश्च दक्षिणार्द्धाङ्गो वामाङ्गः प्रकृतिः स्मृतः ॥

(ब्रह्म वै० प्रकृ० खं० अ० १२ श्लो० ६)

अर्थात्—परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण सृष्टि रचना के समय दो रूप वाले हो गये। दाहिना आधा अङ्ग पुरुष और बांया अंग प्रकृति रूपा स्त्री हुई। ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण का यह वर्णन वेद एवं उपनिषदों के द्वारा प्रतिपादित है। जैसे—

स वै नैव रेमे तस्मादेकाकी न रमते स द्वितीयमैच्छत् स हैतावानास यथा स्त्रीपुमांसौ संपरिष्वक्तौ

स इममेवात्मानं द्वेधापातयत् ततः पतिश्च पत्नी चाभवताम् । (बृहदारण्यक १ । ४ । ३)

अर्थात्—उस ब्रह्म ने रमण (सृष्टि उत्पादन रूप खेल) नहीं किया था इस कारण कि वह अकेला रमण नहीं करता। उसने दूसरे की इच्छा की। जिस प्रकार परस्पर आलिङ्गित स्त्री पुरुष होते हैं, वैसा उसका स्वरूप हो गया। उसने अपने को ही दो भागों में विभक्त कर डाला। वे पति और पत्नी हुवे। भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के वामाङ्ग से श्रीराधा की उत्पत्ति का भाव है कि वे एक से दो अर्थात् पति-पत्नी रूप में हो गये।

आगे प्रकरण को देखिये—

अर्थात्—ब्रजभूमि में अवतार लेने पर वह राधा वृषभानु वैश्य

की कन्या हुई ॥३९॥ वृषभानु की पत्नी कलावती वायुगर्भा (जिसके गर्भ में केवल वायु मात्र थी) थी उसने वायु प्रसव किया। प्रसव होते ही श्री राधा देवी अयोनिजा (गर्भ से उत्पन्न न होने वाली) प्रकट हो गईं। ॥३७॥ बारह वर्ष व्यतीत होने पर उनके पिता ने उन्हें नवयुवती होने वाली देख कर रायण वैश्य के साथ उनका सम्बन्ध—सगाई कर दी ॥३८॥ किन्तु राधा जी अपने प्रभाव से अपने ही अनुरूप एक 'छाया' नाम की कन्या को उत्पन्न कर और उसे घर में स्थापित कर स्वयं अन्तर्धान हो गईं, रायण वैश्य का विवाह उसी 'छाया' नाम की कन्या के साथ हुआ ॥३०॥ श्रीकृष्ण की व्यावहारिक माता जो यशोदा थीं, रायण उनका भाई था। वह गोलोक में गोप कृष्ण का अंश (अर्थात्—उन कृष्ण के अंश से गोलोक के सृष्टि प्रकरण में जिस प्रकार अन्य अनेक व्यक्तियों की उत्पत्ति हुई थी उसी प्रकार उत्पन्न होने वाला) अंश था। व्रज में उनकी पालन रूप माता यशोदा का भाई होने के नाते श्रीकृष्ण जी का वह मामा हुआ। पवित्र वृन्दावन में श्री ब्रह्मा जी ने कृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का विधिपूर्वक दिव्य विवाह कराया ॥४०॥

ऊपर के ब्रह्म० वै० पुराण प्रकरण से स्पष्ट है कि रायण वैश्य के साथ दिव्य 'छाया' का विवाह हुआ था और श्रीकृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का दिव्य विवाह हुआ। अतः आक्षेपकर्त्ताओं का श्रीराधा जी को श्रीकृष्ण जी की पुत्री, पुत्र वधू व मामी कहना सरासर झूठ है।

What was the relationship between Shri Radha ji and Shree krishna ?

राधा का कृष्णा से क्या नाता है ?
भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण साक्षात् ब्रह्म हैं तो श्री राधिका जी उनकी अभिन्न छाया माया हैं- यह तो हुआ उनका पारमाथिक लोकोत्तर सम्बन्ध ! परन्तु व्यावहारिक सम्बन्धों में- राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से क्या नाता है ? इस विषय पर भी प्रकाश डालना परमावश्यक है, क्योंकि शास्त्र के गहरे स्वाध्याय और समन्वय के बिना इस समस्या का हल होना भी असम्भव नहीं तो अतीव कठिन अवश्य है। हम क्या कोई भी, यदि आर्ष ..न्थों में मिलने वाले राधाकृष्ण सम्बन्धी प्रसंगों का सर्वाङ्गीण समन्वय करेगा तो

वह इसी परिणाम पर पहुंचेगा कि राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से व्यावहारिक न तो कोई भी नाता हैः क्योंकि लोक में

- दादी, नानी, फूफी, मां, ताई चाची बहिन, पत्नी, साली, मामी, भाणजी श्रादि जो रवत से सम्बन्ध रखने वाले नाते रिश्ते हैं, न तो इनमें से कोई नाता श्री राधाजी के साथ कृष्ण का था और नांही–स्वकीया परकीया, गणिका, दासी आदि जो साहित्य-वर्णित स्नेहजन्य सम्बन्ध हैं, उनमें से कोई नाता भगवान् से रात्रा का प्रकट होता है। हम पाठकों के सौकर्य के लिये कतिपय संभावित सम्बन्ध के विषय में कुछ कारणावलिपूर्वक विचार करते हैं जिसने हमारी पूर्व प्रर्दाशत स्थापना का तत्त्व जल्दी समझ में आ सके –
(१) श्रीकृष्णचन्द्र जी विशुद्ध क्षत्रिय कुलोत्पन्न थे और श्री राधा जी वृषभानु गोप की कन्या थीं, इसप्रकार धर्मशास्त्र की दृष्टि से उनका कोई भी वर्ण = जातिजन्य परस्पर सम्बन्ध नहीं था ।
(२) कदाचित् भगवान् कृष्ण के बाल्यकालीन पालक पिता श्रीनन्द जी को गोप जातीय होने के कारण भगवान् को भी गोप मान लिया जाय और एतावत राधा के साथ कृष्ण के वैवाहिक सम्बन्ध की कल्पना की जाए तो यह कोरी कल्पना ही रह जाती है, क्योंकि 'गर्ग-संहिता' आदि राधा-चरित्र के मुख्य ग्रन्थों में कही भी राधा कृष्ण के लौकिक विवाह का उल्लेख नहीं। केवल वर-वरण अर्थात् 'सगाई' मात्र का उल्लेख है, और वह भी नन्द के कुछ प्रतिद्वन्द्वी असहिष्णु गोपों द्वारा वृषभानु को बहकाकर उनके वैभव की परीक्षा के लिये ही हुआ है, जैसा कि, 'गर्गसंहिता' (गिरि० अध्याय ५-६) में लिखा है। यथा–
- यदि नन्दसुतः साक्षात् परिपूर्णतमो हरिः ।
- सर्वेषां पश्यतां नस्तत्परीक्षां कारय प्रभो ।। (एर्ग० ६८)
- अर्थ- [गोपों ने राधा के पिता वृषाभानु जी से कहा कि –

यदि नन्द का बेटा साक्षात् परमात्मा है तो हम सब के सामने उसकी महिमा की परीक्षा कीजिये ।
(३) जहां राधा कृष्ण का सर्वजनविदित लौकिक विवाह नहीं हुआ है वहाँ भगवान् की 'स्तनन्धय' दुधमुंही अवस्था में विश्वकर्ता ब्रह्माजी ने भाँडीरक वन में असीम आकाश के निर्मल एवं प्राकृतिक वितान-मण्डप के नीचे, मेघों की गम्भीर गर्जना और बिजली की कोलाहलपूर्ण कड़-कड़ाहट के गाजे बाजों के तुमुल निनाद में, उनके कोकोत्तर विवाह का अभिनय अवश्य किया है, जिसका पता न राधा के माता-पिता कलावती और वृषभानु को हुआ और माहीं कृष्ण के माता-पिता यशोदा और नन्दबाबा को चला, न किसी को भाईचारे की भाजी मिली और नाहीं किसी गोप ग्वाले को बाराती की हैसियत से करण का भर मिठाई मिली। राधा कृष्ण और ब्रह्मा इस त्रयी को छोड़कर संसार के किसी भी अन्य प्राणी को इसका कानों कान पता तक भी नहीं चला। शायद इसी अभूतपूर्व विवाह के कारण 'पूड़ा न पापड़ी- पटाक बहू श्रापड़ी' की लोकोक्ति प्रसिद्ध हुई हो। आइये हम आपको राधाकृष्ण के सदैव जुड़े रहने वाले बेजोड़ एवं बेमिसाल विवाह का गर्ग जी के शब्दों में फोटो दिखाए :-

What is the relationship between Radha and Krishna? Since Bhagwan Shri Krishna is the Supreme Brahman, Shri Radhika is His inseparable divine energy—this describes their transcendental, spiritual relationship. However, in terms of their practical worldly relationship, what connection does Radha have with Krishna? This question is crucial, as resolving it requires deep study and synthesis of scriptural texts. Without thorough research, arriving at an accurate conclusion is nearly impossible or at least extremely difficult. Anyone who conducts a comprehensive study of the scriptures discussing Radha and Krishna will ultimately conclude that Radha and Krishna do not share any ordinary worldly relationship.

In society, familial and marital relationships like grandmother, aunt, mother, sister, wife, sister-in-law, maternal aunt, niece, and others define interpersonal bonds. However, none of these relationships exist between Shri Radha and Krishna. Similarly, the relationships described in literature—such as wife, beloved, courtesan, or servant—do not apply to Radha and Krishna in a worldly sense. For the convenience of the readers, let us examine some possibilities along with logical reasoning, so that the essence of our earlier statement becomes clear:

1. Shri Krishna was born into a pure Kshatriya lineage, whereas Shri Radha was the daughter of Vrishabhanu, a Gopa (cowherd). Thus, from the perspective of Dharma Shastra (scriptural law), there was no caste-based or lineage-related connection between them.
2. Some may argue that since Shri Krishna was raised by His foster father Nanda, who was also of the Gopa community, Krishna should be considered a Gopa. Based on this, one might imagine a marital connection between Krishna and Radha. However, such speculation remains mere imagination because major texts on Radha's life, such as 'Garga Samhita,' do not mention any worldly marriage between Radha and Krishna. The only reference found is regarding a ceremonial engagement, and even that was orchestrated by a few rival Gopas who misguided Vrishabhanu in order to test his wealth. This is mentioned in 'Garga Samhita' (Chapter 5-6):

यदि नन्दसुतः साक्षात् परिपूर्णतमो हरिः । सर्वेषां पश्यतां नस्तत्परीक्षां कारय प्रभो ।। (गर्ग संहिता ६८)

Meaning: The Gopas said to Radha's father, Vrishabhanu—"If Nanda's son is truly the Supreme Lord, then let Him prove His greatness in front of all of us."

3. While Radha and Krishna did not have a universally recognized worldly marriage, during Krishna's infancy, Lord Brahma performed a mystical wedding ceremony between Radha and Krishna in the sacred Bhaṇḍīraka forest. This divine event took place under the boundless sky, in a natural canopy formed by the heavens themselves, with the roaring thunder and crackling lightning serving as celestial musical instruments. However, Radha's parents, Kalavati and Vrishabhanu, were unaware of this ceremony. Likewise, Krishna's parents, Yashoda and Nanda Baba, had no knowledge of it. No relatives were invited, no Gopas attended as wedding guests, and no sweets were distributed. Except for Krishna, Radha, and Brahma, no living being in the world even heard of this divine event. Perhaps it was due to this unique wedding that the popular folk saying arose: "पूड़ा न पापड़ी – पटाक बहू श्रापड़ी" (loosely meaning "A grand affair witnessed by none").

भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण साक्षात् ब्रह्म हैं तो श्री राधिका जी उनकी अभिन्न ह्लादा शक्ति है—यह तो हुआ उनका पारमार्थिक लोकोत्तर सम्बन्ध ! परन्तु व्यावहारिक सम्बन्धों में—राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से क्या नाता है ? इस विषय पर भी प्रकाश डालना परमावश्यक है, क्योंकि शास्त्र के गहरे स्वाध्याय और समन्वय के बिना इस समस्या का हल होना यदि असम्भव नहीं तो अतीव कठिन अवश्य है। हम क्या कोई भी, यदि आर्ष ग्रन्थों में मिलने वाले राधाकृष्ण सम्बन्धी प्रसंगों का सर्वाङ्गीण समन्वय करेगा तो वह इसी परिणाम पर पहुंचेगा कि राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से व्यावहारिक न तो कोई भी नाता है ; क्योंकि लोक में

—दादी, नानी, बुआ, मां, ताई, चाची, बहिन, पत्नी, साली, भाभी, मामाजी आदि जो रक्त से सम्बन्ध रखने वाले नाते रिश्ते हैं, न तो इनमें से कोई नाता श्री राधाजी के साथ कृष्ण का था और नाही— स्वकीया परकीया, गणिका, दासी आदि जो साहित्य-वर्णित स्नेहजन्य सम्बन्ध हैं, उनमें से कोई नाता भगवान् से राधा का प्रकट होता है। हम पाठकों के सौकर्य के लिये कतिपय संभावित सम्बन्धों के विषय में कुछ शास्त्रावलिपूर्वक विचार करते हैं जिससे हमारी पूर्व उपस्थित स्थापना का तत्त्व जल्दी समझ में आ सके—

(१) श्रीकृष्णचन्द्र जी विशुद्ध क्षत्रिय कुलोत्पन्न थे और श्री राधा जी वृषभानु गोप की कन्या थीं, इसप्रकार धर्मशास्त्र की दृष्टि से उनका कोई भी रक्त = जातिजन्य परस्पर सम्बन्ध नहीं था।

(२) कदाचित् भगवान् कृष्ण के बाल्यकालीन पालक पिता श्रीनन्द जी को गोप जातीय होने के कारण भगवान् को भी गोप मान लिया जाय और एतावता राधा के साथ कृष्ण के वैवाहिक सम्बन्ध की कल्पना की जाए तो यह कोरी कल्पना ही रह जाती है, क्योंकि 'गर्ग-संहिता' आदि राधा-चरित्र के मुख्य ग्रन्थों में कहीं भी राधा कृष्ण के लौकिक विवाह का उल्लेख नहीं। केवल वर-वरण अर्थात् 'सगाई' मात्र का उल्लेख है, और वह भी नन्द के कुछ प्रतिद्वन्द्वी असहिष्णु गोपों द्वारा वृषभानु को बहकाकर उनके वैभव की परीक्षा के लिये ही हुआ है, जैसा कि, 'गर्गसंहिता' (गिरि० अध्याय ५-६) में लिखा है। यथा—

यदि नन्दसुतः साक्षात् परिपूर्णतमो हरिः ।

अर्थ—[गोपों ने राधा के पिता वृषभानु जी से कहा कि—]

यदि नन्द का बेटा साक्षात् परमात्मा है तो हम सब के सामने उसकी महिमा की परीक्षा कीजिये।

(३) जहां राधा कृष्ण का सर्वजनविदित लौकिक विवाह नहीं हुआ है वहां भगवान् की 'स्तनन्धय' = दुधमुंही अवस्था में विश्वकर्ता ब्रह्माजी ने भांडीरक वन में प्रदीप्त आकाश के निर्मल एवं प्राकृतिक वितान-मण्डप के नीचे, मेघों की गम्भीर गर्जना और बिजली की कोलाहलपूर्ण कड़-कड़ाहट के बाजे बाजों के तुमुल निनाद में, उनके लोकोत्तर विवाह का अभिनय सम्पन्न किया है, जिसका पता न राधा के माता-पिता कलावती और वृषभानु को हुआ और नाही कृष्ण के माता-पिता यशोदा और नन्दबाबा को चला, न किसी को भाईचारे की शादी मिली और नाही किसी गोप ग्वाले को बाराती की हैसियत से कण का भर मिठाई मिली। राधा = कृष्ण और ब्रह्मा इन तीनों को छोड़कर संसार के किसी भी अन्य प्राणी को इसका कानों कान पता तक भी नहीं चला। शायद इसी अभूतपूर्व विवाह के कारण 'गुड्डा न गुड्डी- फटाक ब्याह करदी' की लोकोक्ति प्रसिद्ध हुई हो। आइये हम आपको राधाकृष्ण के सर्वदा जुड़े रहने वाले बेजोड़ एवं बेमिसाल विवाह का गर्ग जी के शब्दों में फोटो दिखाएं :—

Allegations-

5. Krishna with his concubines

Vishnu Purana 5.13.55-61
The Gopīs repeatedly exclaimed, “Bravo, Kṛṣṇa!” to his song. When leading, they followed him; when returning, they encountered him; and, whether he went forwards or backwards, they ever attended on his steps. Whilst frolicking thus with the Gopīs, they considered every instant without him a myriad of years; and, prohibited in vain by husbands, fathers, brothers, they went forth at night to sport with Kṛṣṇa, the object of their affection.”

Shrimad Bhagavatam 10.33.16-17
In this way Lord Krsna, the original Lord Närãyana, master of the goddess of fortune, took pleasure in the company of the young women of Vraja by embracing them, caressing them and glancing lovingly at them as He smiled His broad, playful smiles. It was just as if a child were playing with his own reflection.- Their senses overwhelmed by the joy of having His physical association, the gopis could not prevent their hair, their dresses and the cloths covering their breasts from becoming disheveled. Their garlands and ornaments scattered, O hero of the Kuru dynasty.”

Shrimad Bhagavatam 10.29.45-46
Śrī Kṛṣṇa went with the gopīs to the bank of the Yamunā, where the sand was cooling and the wind, enlivened by the river’s waves, bore the fragrance of lotuses. There Kṛṣṇa threw His arms around the gopīs and embraced them. He aroused Cupid in the beautiful young ladies of Vraja by touching their hands, hair, thighs, belts and breasts, by playfully scratching them with His fingernails, and also by joking with them, glancing at them and laughing with them. In this way the Lord enjoyed His pastimes.”

Skanda Purana 2.3.4.17
With the tip of his nail with which he had pierced the neck of hyena, he pinched the breasts of the cowherd lasses. He has been sportingly given many forms by young women. Let this Śeṣa (?) be for (i.e. bring about) calmness and peace.”

Shrimad Bhagavatam 3.3.21
The Lord enjoyed His pastimes, both in this world and in other worlds [higher planets], specifically in the association of the Yadu dynasty. At leisure hours offered by night, He enjoyed the friendship of conjugal love with women.”

Shrimad Bhagavatam 10.30.33-34
Certainly Kṛṣṇa sat down here with His girlfriend to arrange Her hair. The lusty boy must have made a crown for that lusty girl out of the flowers He had collected. [Śukadeva Gosvāmī continued:] Lord Kṛṣṇa enjoyed with that gopī, although He enjoys only within, being self-satisfied and complete in Himself. Thus by contrast He showed the wretchedness of ordinary lusty men and hardhearted women.”

Kurma Purana 1.26.14-16 ”A certain fawn eyed damsel, fascinated by passionate love, approached Krsna and kissed his lotus like face. Catching hold of the hand of Govinda, the first cause of the wordls, a certain girl who was deluded by his Maya, took him to her own house. Assuming multifarious forms sportively, the lotus-eyed Lord Krsna fulfilled their desires.” ”

Here is Vishnu Purana 5.13.55-61 geeta press Gorakhpur hindi translation . This particular Prakaran is about Rasleela

किसी निपुण गोपीने भगवान्के गानकी प्रशंसा करनेके बहाने भुजा फैलाकर श्रीमधुसूदनको आलिंगन करके चूम लिया ॥ ५४ ॥ श्रीहरिकी भुजाएँ गोपियोंके कपोलोंक चुम्बन पाकर उन (कपोलों) में पुलकावलिरूप धान्यर्क उत्पत्तिके लिये स्वेदरूप जलके मेघ बन गयीं ॥ ५५।
कृष्णचन्द्र जितने उच्चस्वरसे रासोचित गान गाते थे उससे दूने शब्दसे गोपियाँ "धन्य कृष्ण ! धन्य कृष्ण !!" की ही ध्वनि लगा रही थीं ॥ ५६ ॥ भगवान्के आगे जानेपर गोपियाँ उनके पीछे जातीं और लौटनेपन सामने चलतीं, इस प्रकार वे अनुलोम और प्रतिलोम-गतिसे श्रीहरिका साथ देती थीं ॥ ५७ ॥ श्रीमधुसूदन भगोपियोंके साथ इस प्रकार रासक्रीडा कर रहे थे कि उनके बिना एक क्षण भी गोपियोंको करोड़ों वर्षोंके समान बीतता था ॥ ५८ ॥ वे रास-रसिक गोपांगनाएँ पति, माता-पिता और भ्राता आदिके रोकनेपर भरात्रिमें श्रीश्यामसुन्दरके साथ विहार करती थीं ॥ ५९। शत्रुहन्ता अमेयात्मा श्रीमधुसूदन भी अपनी किशोरावस्थाक मान करते हुए रात्रिके समय उनके साथ रमण करते थे ॥ ६० ॥ वे सर्वव्यापी ईश्वर श्रीकृष्णचन्द्र गोपियोंमें उनके पतियोंमें तथा समस्त प्राणियोंमें आत्मस्वरूपस् वायुके समान व्याप्त थे ॥ ६१ ॥ जिस प्रकार आकाश, अग्नि पृथिवी, जल, वायु और आत्मा समस्त प्राणियोंमें व्याप्त हैं उसी प्रकार वे भी सब पदार्थोंमें व्यापक हैं॥ ६२।

A skillful Gopi, under the pretext of praising Lord Krishna's singing, spread her arms and embraced Shri Madhusudan, kissing him lovingly.

When the Lord's arms touched the cheeks of the Gopis with tender kisses, those cheeks erupted in thrill, and sweat appeared like clouds bringing the rain of joy for the harvest of goosebumps.

As Krishna sang melodies suited for the Rasa dance in a melodious voice, the Gopis responded with even louder voices, repeatedly exclaiming, "Blessed is Krishna! Blessed is Krishna!"

When the Lord moved forward, the Gopis followed him behind; when he turned back, they came in front. Thus, moving with him in direct and reverse motion, they gracefully accompanied Shri Hari. Engaged in such divine Rasa play with the Gopis, every moment of separation from him felt like millions of years for them.Those Rasa-enchanted Gopis, despite being restrained by their husbands, parents, and brothers, still went out at night to enjoy pastimes with Shyamsundar in the forest.Even Shri Madhusudan, the destroyer of enemies and unfathomable soul, joyfully engaged in loving pastimes with them during the nights, honoring his youthful form.That all-pervading Lord Krishna was present within the Gopis, their husbands, and all living beings, just as air pervades everywhere as the soul of all.Just as space, fire, earth, water, air, and the self exist within all beings, in the same way, he too is immanently present in all elements of creation.

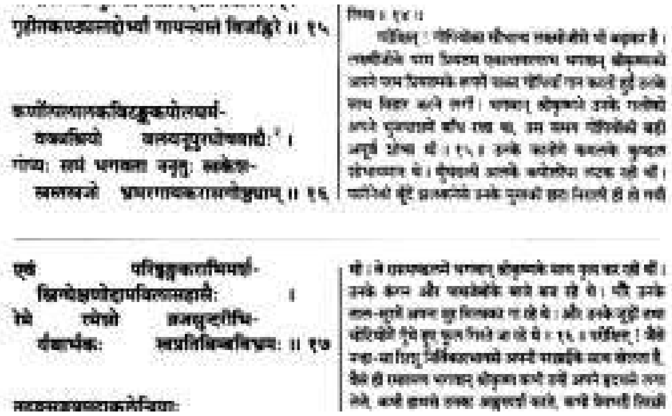
Accurate translation of Srimad Bhagavatam 10.33.16-17

परीक्षित्! गोपियोंका सौभाग्य लक्ष्मीजोसे भी बढ़कर है। लक्ष्मीजीके परम प्रियतम एकान्तवल्लभ भगवान् श्रीकृष्णको अपने परम प्रियतमके रूपमें पाकर गोपियाँ गान करती हुई उनके साथ विहार करने लगीं। भगवान् श्रीकृष्णने उनके गलोंको अपने भुजपाशमें बाँध रखा था, उस समय गोपियोंकी बड़ी अपूर्व शोभा थी ॥ १५ ॥ उनके कानोंमें कमलके कुण्डल शोभायमान थे। घुँघराली अलकें कपोलौंपर लटक रही थीं। पसीनेकी बूँदे झलकनेसे उनके मुखकी छटा निराली ही हो गयी थी। वे रासमण्डलमें भगवान् श्रीकृष्णके साथ नृत्य कर रही थीं। उनके कंगन और पायजेबोंके बाजे बज रहे थे। भौरे उनके ताल-सुरमें अपना सुर मिलाकर गा रहे थे। और उनके जूड़ों तथा चोटियोंमें गुंथे हुए फूल गिरते जा रहे थे ॥ १६ ॥ परीक्षित्! जैसे नन्हा-सा शिशु निर्विकारभावसे अपनी परछाईके साथ खेलता है, वैसे ही रमारमण भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण कभी उन्हें अपने हृदयसे लगा लेते, कभी हाथसे उनका अङ्गस्पर्श करते

"O Parīkṣit! The fortune of the Gopīs surpasses even that of Goddess Lakṣmī.
Having attained the Supreme Beloved — Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the one who is the most cherished by even Lakṣmī herself — the Gopīs began to sing and joyfully sport with Him. Śrī Kṛṣṇa embraced them with His mighty arms, and in that moment, their beauty became divine and unparalleled.
(Verse 15)

Their ears were adorned with lotus-shaped earrings, and curly locks of hair gently hung down over their cheeks. Beads of sweat shimmered on their glowing faces, enhancing their charm. As they danced with Lord Kṛṣṇa in the Rāsa-maṇḍala (circle of divine dance), their bangles and anklets jingled rhythmically. Even the black bees harmonized with their melodies, humming in sync with the musical rhythm. The flowers woven into their braids and hair buns kept falling gracefully as they danced.
(Verse 16)

O Parīkṣit! Just as a small, innocent child plays joyfully with its own shadow, in the same pure and detached manner — Rāma's beloved, Lord Kṛṣṇa — sometimes drew the Gopīs close to His heart and at other times touched their limbs with His hands."



Accurate translation of Srimad Bhagavatam 10.29.45-46

After this, Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa arrived with the Gopīs at the sacred bank of the Yamunā River, which sparkled with sand as white and fragrant as camphor. That delightful riverbank was cooled by the gentle waves of Yamunā's flowing waters and perfumed with the natural fragrance of the blooming kumudinī (water lilies). The soothing breeze, scented and refreshing, served them like a celestial attendant. On that blissful shore, the Lord joyfully played with the Gopīs.
(Verse 45)

Stretching out His hands, embracing them, pressing their hands affectionately, touching their braids, thighs, waistbands (nīvi), and bosoms — engaging in playful gestures, gently marking them with His nails, exchanging glances filled with loving mischief, and smiling sweetly — through all these tender, sportive acts, Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa stirred the divine rasa (essence) of love within the Gopīs, kindling their supremely radiant feelings of transcendental affection. Thus, through divine play, He brought them immense joy."
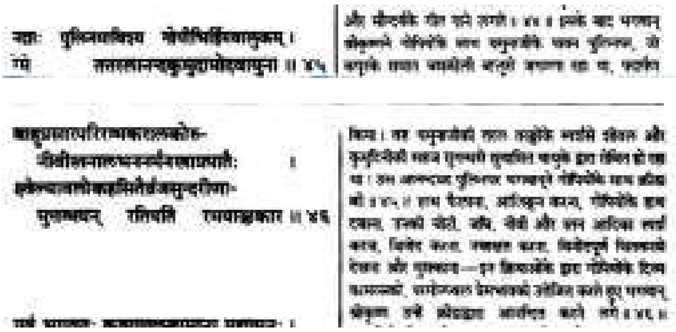
(Verse 46)



Accurate translation of Srimad Bhagvatam 3.3.21

मधुर मुसकान, स्नेहमयी चितवन, सुधामयी वाणी, निर्मल चरित्र तथा समस्त शोभा और सुन्दरताके निवास अपने श्रीविग्रहसे लोक-परलोक और विशेषतया यादवोंको आनन्दित किया तथा रात्रिमें अपनी प्रियाओंके साथ क्षणिक

अनुरागयुक्त होकर समयोचित विहार किया और इस प्रकार उन्हें भी सुख दिया ॥ २०-२१ ॥

and His divine form — the very abode of all beauty and auspiciousness —
Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa brought joy to both this world and the next, especially delighting the Yādavas.

During the night, He engaged in timely, gentle pastimes with His beloveds, their hearts momentarily filled with tender affection.
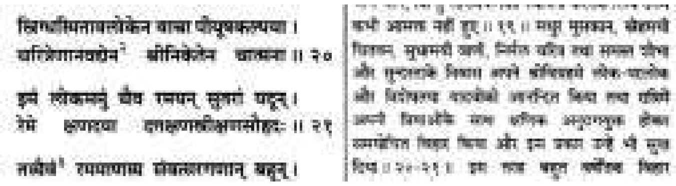
In this way, He bestowed joy upon them as well.”
(Verses 20–21)



Accurate Translation of Srimad Bhagvatam 10.30.33-34

“No doubt — right here, the Lord of Love must have lifted His beloved onto His shoulders.
(Verse 32)

Look, look! Over here, the supremely loving Vrajavallabha (Beloved of Vraja) must have gently helped His beloved down to pick flowers. And here — the dearest Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself picked flowers for her.
Due to stretching high again and again to pluck them,
His toes sank deep into the earth — there’s no trace of His heels!
(Verse 33)

Like a passionate lover, the supreme beloved Śrī Kṛṣṇa has arranged His beloved’s hair right at this spot.
See — He must have been sitting here to lovingly weave the handpicked flowers into her braid.”
(Verse 34)

Verses 15-18:
"He who, abandoning Lord Śiva (Īśāna), constantly takes exclusive refuge in Me (Viṣṇu) while insulting Him, remains in hell for ten thousand years.
Therefore, O twice-born ones (Brahmins), one must carefully give up any attempt to insult Paśupati (Śiva) and His devotees through mind, speech, or action.
O best of the twice-born! In the sacrifice of Dakṣa Prajāpati, those Brahmins of your lineage who were cursed by Sage Dadhīci due to their hatred towards Lord Īśāna—all of them will take birth on earth in the age of Kali.
The devotees should make every effort to shun such people. Even the superior Brahmins should not speak with those who are cursed by the great sage Gautama."

रासलीला

भगवान् कृष्ण की रासलीला से प्रायः सभी हिन्दूमात्र परिचित हैं। कुछ वैदिक हिन्दू उक्त लीला के विषय में भी अपनी कलिकल्मष-कलुषित प्रवृत्ति से विवश होकर अनावश्यक प्रलाप अलाप करते हैं, यह लीला मानों पुरुषों को बदनाम करने के ठेकेदारों का अमीष्ट कहलाता है। अपनी नाक खुद काट कर दूसरे का शकुन बिगाड़ने के शौकीन समाजी, प्रायः सभी शाखाओं में इस लीला का मनमाने

अर्थात्—(क) [ब्रह्मा जी ने देवताओं के प्रति कहा कि—] साक्षात् परम पुरुष भगवान् वसुदेव जी के घर में अवतार लेंगे। इस लिये हे देववृन्द ! आप और आपकी स्त्रियों को भी उनके सहयोग के लिये व्रजभूमि में अपने २ अंशों से अवतीर्ण होना चाहिये। (ख) सो सब गोपाल लोग ग्वाल वेश में छुपे हुये देवता ही थे। (ग) भगवान् कृष्ण ने सात वर्ष की छोटी सी आयु में गोवर्द्धन पर्वत को एक हाथ में उठा लिया जैसा कि कमल के फूल को मस्त हाथी उठा लिया करता है। [उसके अगले वर्ष में रासलीला हुई थी जब कि भगवान् की आयु आठ वर्ष की थी] (घ) भगवान् ने शरद् ऋतु की विकसित मल्लिका वाली रात्रियों को जानकर अपनी योगमाया के आश्रय से क्रीड़ा करने का विचार किया ॥१॥ स्त्रियों के मन को लुभाने वाली कलनिनादिनी

पीड़ा को दूर करने के लिये अवतीर्ण हुये हो ? हे आर्तबन्धो ! इसलिये अपने हस्तकमल हम किङ्करियों के स्तनों और सिरों पर रखिए ॥४१॥ योगेश्वर भगवान् को इस तरह उन गोपियों का करुणाक्रन्दन सुनकर दया आ गई और अपने आप में ही रमण करते हुये भी वे हँसकर गोपियों को रमण कराने लगे ॥४३॥ बाहु फैलाना, लिपटना, गले लगाना, हाथ, अलक, जंघा, नीवी (कमर के कपड़े की गांठ) और स्तनों को छूना, हँसी मसखरी, नखच्छेद देना, क्रीड़ा, कटाक्ष और मन्द मुस्कान आदि से कामोद्दीपन करते हुये भगवान् गोपियों को रमण कराने लगे ॥४६॥ इस प्रकार महात्मा कृष्ण जी से मान पाकर वे गोपियें अपने आपको भूमण्डल में सर्वाधिक सुन्दरी समझने लगीं ॥४७॥ भगवान् इनके इस सौभाग्य मद और मान को नष्ट करके कृपाप्रसाद दिखाने के लिये तत्काल वहीं अन्तर्धान हो गये ॥ ४८ ॥ (ङ) [तब विरहकातर गोपियें रो रो कर कहने लगीं कि—] हे भगवान् ! आप निश्चित ही किसी गोपी के पुत्र नहीं हैं बल्कि समस्त प्राणियों के अन्तरात्मा हैं। हे प्यारे कृष्ण ! आप तो ब्रह्मा जी की प्रार्थना से इस विश्व की रक्षा के लिये सात्वत कुल में अवतीर्ण हुए हो ॥ ४६ ॥ हे भगवन् ! आपके—शरणागत प्राणियों के पापों को दूर करने वाले पशुओं के चर होते हुवे भी भक्तिवश गौओं के पीछे भागने वाले और विषधर कालीय सर्प के क्रूर फणों पर नृत्य करने वाले जो चरण कमल हैं उन्हें हमारी कुचाओं पर रखकर कामदेव को विनष्ट कर डालिये ॥७॥ (च) इस तरह गोपियें गाती हुई और अनेक प्रकार के प्रलाप करती हुईं भगवान् के दर्शनों की इच्छा से ऊँची आवाज से रोने लगीं ॥१॥ तब उन सब के बीच में मन्द २ मुस्कराते हुवे साक्षात् कामदेव को भी लजाने वाले भगवान् आविर्भूत हुये। जो पीताम्बर पहिने और गले में माला धारण किये हुये थे ॥ २ ॥ (छ) तब वहां भगवान् ने अपनी परम भक्त सुन्दरतम गोपियों के हाथों में हाथ डालकर रासक्रीड़ा

वास्तविक भाव

हमने उक्त लीला पर बार बार मनन करने पर जो अभिप्राय समझा है, पाठकों के लाभार्थ हम उसे भी प्रकट कर देते हैं। हम यह बात पीछे प्रमाणपूर्वक सिद्ध कर चुके हैं कि व्रज के समस्त गोप और

गोपियें देवताओं के आंशिक अवतार थे, परन्तु मानव-स्थूल-शरीर की उपाधि से वे अपने देवत्व को भूले हुये थे। सो भगवान् ने जिस समय रासक्रीड़ा का अभिनय करना चाहा तो वंशी से कामबीज 'क्लीं' मन्त्र का निनाद किया जिससे स्त्रीभावापन्न दिव्य आत्माएं जग उठीं और वे भगवान् के निकट आ पहुंचीं। यह रहस्य श्रीमद्भा० (१०।२९।३) के—

'जगौ 'कलं' वामदृशां मनोहरम्'—

—पद में व्यक्त किया है। उक्त पद में—'कलं–क्लीं = कामबीज का निदर्शक है और 'वामदृशां मनोहरम्' का अभिप्राय—स्त्रीभावापन्न दिव्य आत्माओं पर ही उसका प्रभाव पड़ सकता था—यह बताने के लिए प्रयुक्त हुआ है। इसीलिये वंशी का शब्द सुनकर गोपियें ही भगवान् के निकट आईं थीं!

भगवान् ने यह जानने के लिये कि—'उक्त दिव्यात्माओं को अपने दैवत्व का कुछ स्मरण है—या स्थूल शरीर की उपाधि से वह सर्वथा विस्मृत हो गया उनको वापिस लौट जाने का उपदेश दिया। जिसके उत्तर में गोपियों ने स्पष्ट शब्दों में बतला दिया कि 'तुम तो समस्त विषयों को छोड़ कर शरणागत भक्त हैं और मोक्ष की इच्छा से यहां आई हैं आप भी आदिपुरुष और सबके अन्तरात्मा हो...(वह भाग १०। २९। ३१-३२) में 'संत्यज्य सर्वविषयान्'—'भगत—आदिपुरुष' और 'मुमुक्षून्' आदि शब्दों द्वारा अभिव्यक्त किया गया है। जब गोपियों की उक्तियों से भगवान् ने अच्छी तरह जान लिया कि ये सब आत्माएं मेरी वंशी के निनाद से प्रबुद्ध हो गई हैं और इनको अब दैवत्व का पूरा ज्ञान है तब भगवान् ने उनका विशुद्ध प्रेम और रासक्रीड़ा की अभिलाषा जानकर अपनी योगमाया के प्रभाव से उनके दो दो स्वरूप बनाए। उनमें से पहिले जो कि पांचभौतिक स्थूल शरीरावच्छिन्न स्वरूप थे उन्हें वापिस उन उन के घर में पहुंचा दिया, जिससे गोप

ग्वालों में अपनी २ माता, पत्नी आदि को घर में न देखकर किसी प्रकार की बेचैनी न हो? और दूसरे योगमायाविनिर्मित दिव्यात्मासम्पन्न स्वरूपों को घर में ही रहने दिया। इसके बाद जो भी लीला हुई है वह योग-मायाविनिर्मित भगवान् के अपने ही स्वरूपों के साथ हुई है। व्यास जी ने उक्त रहस्य का संकेत करने के लिये मूलग्रन्थ में ही निम्नलिखित शब्दों का उल्लेख किया है- यथा—

(क) मन्यमानाः स्वपार्श्वस्थान् स्वान्स्वान्दारान्व्रजौकसः।
(श्री० भा० १० । ३३ । ३८)

(ख) यथार्भकः स्वप्रतिबिम्बविभ्रमः।
(श्री० भा० १० । ३३ । १७)

(ग) कृत्वा तावन्तमात्मानं यावतीर्व्रजयोषितः।
(श्री० भा० १० । ३३ । २०)

(घ) पुरुषः शक्तिभिर्यथा। (श्री० भा० । १० । ३२ । १०)

अर्थात्—(क) व्रजनिवासियों ने अपनी कुटुम्बिनियों को अपने २ पास माना [अर्थात्—भगवान् की माया से पांचभौतिक स्थूल शरीरा-वच्छिन्न गोपियें नित्य की तरह विद्यमान रहीं।] (ख) जैसे बालक अपनी परछाईं से खेल करता है [इसी तरह भगवान् ने अपनी योगमाया से निर्माण की हुई दिव्यात्मासम्पन्न गोपियों से रासक्रीड़ा की।] (ग) भगवान् ने अपने उतने ही रूप बना लिये जितनी कि गोपियें थीं। (घ) ब्रह्म जिस तरह अपनी माया शक्तियों से विनोद किया करता है उसी तरह भगवान् ने गोपियों से रासक्रीड़ा की।

उपर्युक्त प्रमाणों से यह ज्ञात होता है कि जिस तरह ब्रह्मा जी द्वारा वत्स और गोप चुराए जाने पर भगवान् ने अपनी योगमाया से उनके और वैसे ही ग्वाले तथा बछड़े बनाकर वर्षभर काम जारी रखा था,

किसी को कानों कान भी यह रहस्य विदित न हो सका था इसी तरह रासलीला के समय भी भगवान् ने देवात्मा-सम्पन्न एवं दिव्यशरीरावच्छिन्न गोपियों को तो मुक्त कर देने के लिये अपनी रासलीला में बुला लिया और इस रहस्य को गुप्त रखने के लिये नकली गोपियों को वापिस व्रज में भेज दिया।

प्रायः देखा गया है कि जब जिस अंशावतार का कार्य समाप्त हो जाया करता है तो भगवान् किसी बहाने से उसकी उस दिव्य शक्ति को छीन लिया करते हैं, जैसे रामावतार में शिवधनुर्भङ्ग हो जाने के पश्चात् श्रीपरशुराम जी की अवतारी शक्ति भगवान् रामचन्द्र जी में समा गई थी, तथा भगवान् कृष्ण जी के लीलासंवरण के पश्चात् वीरशिरोमणि अर्जुन साधारण निहत्थे ग्वालों से पराजित हो गया था अर्थात्—नारायणावतार श्रीकृष्ण के विदा होते ही नरावतार अर्जुन भी अपनी उस अपूर्व शक्ति से हीन हो गया था। तो इसी तरह सब देवता भी श्री ब्रह्मा जी की आज्ञानुसार केवल भगवान् कृष्ण की प्रसन्नता के लिये ही अपने २ अंशों से व्रजभूमि में अवतीर्ण हुए थे। जब भगवान् गोकुल वृन्दावन का कार्य प्रायः समाप्त कर चुके और दस दिन के बाद कंस विध्वंसादि का अवसर सामने दिखने लगा तो भगवान् को उन देवांशभूत गोप और गोपियों का व्रज में रहना अनावश्यक जान पड़ा अतः भगवान् ने अपने बालसखा गोपों को तो 'ब्रह्मवत्सहरण' लीला के बहाने वापिस ब्रह्मलोक को भेज दिया था और नकली गोप घर में रख दिये थे अर्थात् सब देवता तो इस तरह अपना कार्य समाप्त हो जाने पर पुनः अपने असली पद पर प्रतिष्ठित हो चुके थे और व्रज में नकली ग्वाले रह गये थे। शेष रही थीं—गोपीभूत देवाङ्गनायें—सो उन्हें भी भगवान् ने 'रासलीला' के बहाने वंशी के इशारे से सब कुछ समझा कर अपने पास बुला लिया और उनके स्थान में नकली गोपियाँ

को घर भेज दिया। इस तरह अपनी बाल लीला की समाप्ति के साथ भगवान् ने देवांशभूत गोपियों के अवतार काल का उपसंहार कर डाला था।

उपर्युक्त रीति से जब यह निश्चित हो गया कि भगवान् ने रासलीला में किसी परस्त्री का स्पर्श नहीं किया बल्कि अपनी योगमाया द्वारा उद्भावित देवात्मा-सम्पन्न अपने ही रूपों से क्रीड़न किया है, तब स्वभावतः यह जिज्ञासा उत्पन्न होती है कि ऐसी दशा में परीक्षित के पूर्वोक्त प्रश्न का क्या समन्वय होगा? अस्तु, इसका भी विवेचन किया जाता है।

परीक्षित पूछते हैं कि—भगवान् का अवतार धर्मसंस्थापन और अधर्मनाश के लिये हुआ है परन्तु रासक्रीड़ा का धर्मसंस्थापन और अधर्मनाशरूप अवतार कार्य से कोई सम्बन्ध नहीं है अर्थात्—यह तो केवल बालक्रीड़ा = विनोद मात्र है। तो आप्तकाम = 'पूर्णकाम' परमात्मा को अपने अनेक रूप बनाकर खेल करने की क्या आवश्यकता थी?—विनोद मात्र के लिये भगवान् का 'परदाराभिमर्शन' = (—(परस्य परमात्मनो दाराः रूपिण्यो या मायाशक्तयस्तासामभिमर्शनं बलादाकर्षणमिति 'बृहद्भगवत्तोषिणी' टीकाकारः) आप्तकामता के 'प्रतीप'—प्रतिकूल है—इसका क्या अभिप्राय है? परीक्षित के प्रश्न का सार यह है कि रासलीला भगवान् का बालविनोद है परन्तु 'आप्तकाम' को विनोदार्थ मायाश्रयण की क्या आवश्यकता थी? यदि धर्मसंस्थापना और अधर्मनाशन के लिये मायाश्रयण किया जाता तो वह अवतार-धर्म के अनुरूप होता परन्तु खेल कूद के लिये अपने अनेक रूप बनाने का क्या अभिप्राय? इस प्रश्न के उत्तर में शुकदेव जी ने समझाया कि—भगवान् का विनोदमात्र के लिये योगमायाश्रयण करना, धर्मस्थापन और अधर्मनाशरूप अवतार-धर्म का व्यतिक्रम अवश्य है परन्तु ईश्वरावतारों का केवल क्रीड़ार्थ भी ऐसा करना देखा गया है, जो दोषास्पद नहीं।

पूर्णकाम परमात्मा को मायाश्रयण से सृष्टि की उत्पत्ति, पालन और संहार आदि करने की क्या आवश्यकता है और सृष्टि-उत्पादन-विनाशन रूप 'पूर्णकामता' विरुद्ध ईश्वरेच्छा का क्या अभिप्राय है ? इस जिज्ञासा का उत्तर वेद ने इस प्रकार दिया है कि—

न तस्य कार्यं करणं च विद्यते ।
स्वाभाविकी ज्ञानबलक्रिया च ।। (श्वेताश्वतर ६ । ८)

अर्थात्—सृष्टि का उत्पादन और विनाश आदि करने में ईश्वर का कोई खास प्रयोजन नहीं है किन्तु यह उसकी स्वाभाविक चेष्टा है ।

यहां (वेद में) यह उत्तर दिया गया है कि ईश्वर का स्वाभाविक कार्य 'पूर्णकामता' का बाधक नहीं हो सकता । श्रीमद्भागवत में भी परीक्षित का यही प्रश्न था कि भगवान् को आप्तकाम होते हुये भी गोपाङ्गनाश्रयण से अनेक रूप बनाकर खेल करने की क्या आवश्यकता थी ? जिसका वेदानुमोदित यही उत्तर दिया गया है कि ईश्वरावतारों का विनोदार्थ भी मायाश्रयण करना स्वाभाविक है अतएव वह पूर्णकामता का बाधक नहीं हो सकता । जिस प्रकार परमात्मा के लिये स्वेच्छा से उत्पादित सृष्टि के स्थितिलयादि बन्धन के कारण नहीं, इसी प्रकार तदवतारों के लिये स्वेच्छा से किये हुये क्रीडनादि भी बन्धन नहीं हो सकते । यह है परीक्षित के प्रश्न और शुकदेव जी के उत्तर का समन्वय ।

(d) Knowing that the nights of the autumn season were full of blooming jasmine, the Lord thought of playing with the shelter of his Yogamaya. ॥1॥ He played the Kaninadini flute which attracts the hearts of women. ॥3॥ (On hearing this, the women of Braja) All the enchanted Gopis whose souls had been stolen by Krishna did move away even after being stopped by their husbands, fathers, brothers and relatives. The Gopis who were confined in their houses who did not get time to go out due to their love for the Lord, immediately left their virtuous bodies and became free. ॥6॥11॥ The eloquent Lord, knowing that the women of Braj had come to Him, said in heart-pleasing words, ॥17॥ O Braj beauties! It is a dark night and many dreadful creatures live in this forest, therefore all of you should return to Braj. No woman should stay here. ॥16॥ Because serving the husband with pure feelings is the ultimate duty of women. ॥24॥ And the kind of love and devotion that is generated in me by listening, watching, meditating and singing, does not happen by staying close. Therefore, return to your homes immediately.

Therefore, return to your homes immediately. ॥27॥ (Hearing these words of the Lord, the Gopis said that) O Lord! You are not being served in this way. It is not appropriate to speak harsh words to us We are your devotees who have left all the worldly pleasures and have come to your feet for shelter, so do not rebuke us. Rather, just as the Supreme Soul, the Supreme Being, keeps the seekers of liberation under His protection, similarly, you also take us under your protection. ॥31॥ You are certainly the loving soul pervading all the embodied beings. ॥32॥ The fire of lust that is burning in our hearts by seeing you and hearing the sound of your loving flute, please quench it by watering it with the flow of your love. Otherwise, dear Krishna! We all, burnt by the flames of this fire of separation, will merge (die) here at your feet while meditating on you. ॥35॥ You are undoubtedly the protector of the gods, the Supreme Being, and you have incarnated to remove the pain of the people of Braj. Oh dear ones! Therefore, please place Your lotus hands on the breasts and heads of us Kikri girls. ॥ 41॥ Hearing the pitiful cries of the Gopis, the Lord Yogeshwara felt pity and while He was engaged in His own pleasure, smilingly, He began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. ॥43॥ Stretching His arms, embracing them, touching their hands, hair, thighs, Nivi (knot of the waist cloth) and breasts, laughing, joking, pinching their nails, caressing, taunting and smiling, etc., arousing them with such grace and sensuality, the Lord began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. 46. Having thus gained respect from the great soul Krishna, the Gopis began to consider themselves the most beautiful women on earth. ॥47॥ To destroy their pride and arrogance of good fortune and to show His mercy, the Lord immediately disappeared from there. 48.न खलु गोषिकानन्दनो भवा-,नखिलदेहिनामन्तरात्मदृक् ।। विखनसाथितो विश्वगुप्तये, सख ! उदेयिवान्सात्वतां कुले ।। ४ ।। प्रणतदेहिनां पापकर्शनं, तृणचरानुगं श्रीनिकेतनम् ।।फणिफणार्पितं ते पदाम्बुजं, कृरणु कुचेषु नः कृन्धि हृच्छयम् ।।७।।(श्रीमद्भागवत १० । ३१।४)

Then the lovelorn Gopis started weeping and saying, O Lord! You are definitely not the son of any Gopi but the conscience of all living beings. O dear Krishna! You have incarnated n on the prayers of Lord Brahma to protect this world. 46. O Lord! You are the lotus feet which remove the sins of those who surrender to you, who despite being the husband of Lakshmi run after cows due to devotion and dance on the cruel hoods of the poisonous Kaliya serpent, place them on our shoulders and destroy Kamadev. 7.

(d) Knowing that the nights of the autumn season were full of blooming jasmine, the Lord thought of playing with the shelter of his Yogamaya. II1II He played the Kaninadini flute which attracts the hearts of women. II3 II (On hearing this, the women of Braja) All the enchanted Gopis whose souls had been stolen by Krishna did move away even after being stopped by their husbands, fathers, brothers and relatives. The Gopis who were confined in their houses who did not get time to go out due to their love for the Lord, immediately left their virtuous bodies and became free. II6 II11II The eloquent Lord, knowing that the women of Braj had come to Him, said in heart-pleasing words, II17 II O Braj beauties! It is a dark night and many dreadful creatures live in this forest, therefore all of you should return to Braj. No woman should stay here. II16 II Because serving the husband with pure feelings is the ultimate duty of women. II24 II And the kind of love and devotion that is generated in me by listening, watching, meditating and singing, does not happen by staying close. Therefore, return to your homes immediately.

II27 II (Hearing these words of the Lord, the Gopis said that) O Lord! You are not being served in this way. It is not appropriate to speak harsh words to us. We are your devotees who have left all the worldly pleasures and have come to your feet for shelter, so do not rebuke us. Rather, just as the Supreme Soul, the Supreme Being, keeps the seekers of liberation under His protection, similarly, you also take us under your protection. II31 II You are certainly the loving soul pervading all the embodied beings. II32 II The fire of lust that is burning in our hearts by seeing you and hearing the sound of your loving flute, please quench it by watering it with the flow of your love. Otherwise, dear Krishna! We all, burnt by the flames of this fire of separation, will merge (die) here at your feet while meditating on you. II35 II You are undoubtedly the protector of the gods, the Supreme Being, and you have incarnated to remove the pain of the people of Braj. Oh dear ones! Therefore, please place Your lotus hands on the breasts and heads of us Kikri girls.

॥41॥ Hearing the pitiful cries of the Gopis, the Lord Yogeshwara felt pity and while He was engaged in His own pleasure, smilingly, He began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. ॥43॥ Stretching His arms, embracing them, touching their hands, hair, thighs, Nivi (knot of the waist cloth) and breasts, laughing, joking, pinching their nails, caressing, taunting and smiling, etc., arousing them with such grace and sensuality, the Lord began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. 46. Having thus gained respect from the great soul Krishna, the Gopis began to consider themselves the most beautiful women on earth. ॥ 47॥ To destroy their pride and arrogance of good fortune and to show His mercy, the Lord immediately disappeared from there. 48.

न खलु गोपिकानन्दनो भवा-,नखिलदेहिनामन्तरात्मदृक् ।। विखनसार्थितो विश्वगुप्तये, सख ! उदेयिवान्सात्वतां कुले ।। ४ ।। प्रणतदेहिनां पापकर्शनं, तृणचरानुगं श्रीनिकेतनम् ।।फणिफणार्पितं ते पदाम्बुजं, कृणु कुचेषु नः कृन्धि हृच्छयम् ।।७।।(श्रीमद्भागवत १० । ३१।४)

Then the lovelorn Gopis started weeping and saying, O Lord! You are definitely not the son of any Gopi but the conscience of all living beings. O dear Krishna! You have incarnated n on the prayers of Lord Brahma to protect this world. 46. O Lord! You are the lotus feet which remove the sins of those who surrender to you, who despite being the husband of Lakshmi run after cows due to devotion and dance on the cruel hoods of the poisonous Kaliya serpent, place them on our shoulders and destroy Kamadev. 7.

The gopas, bewildered by Maya, considered their women to be very close to them, so they could not blame the Lord's character in any way.

The most important part and understanding the real meaning of Rasleela

वास्तविक भाव

For the benefit of the readers, we are revealing the meaning of the above mentioned Leela as we have understood it after reciting it repeatedly. We have already proved with evidence that all the gopas and the hermits of Braj were were partial incarnations of the Devas , but they had forgotten their divinity due to the status of human-physical bodies. So when the Lord wanted to perform the Raas Leela, he played the Kaambeej mantra 'Kleem' on the flute, due to which the divine souls with feminine feelings awoke and came near the Lord. This secret is given in Shrimadbhaga (10.26.3) – 'जगौ 'कलं' वामदृशां मनोहरम्' –

It is expressed in a verse. In the said verse 'Kalam' indicates the seed of love and 'Vaamdrisham Manoharam' means that it could have its effect only on the divine souls having feminine feelings. That is why only the gopis came near the Lord on hearing the sound of the flute.

In order to know whether the above mentioned divine souls remember their divinity or have forgotten it completely due to the status of the gross body, Krishna advised them to return. In reply to which the gopis clearly told that 'we are surrendered devotees leaving all worldly pleasures and have come here with the desire of salvation' You are also the original person and the inner soul of all... (This Bhaav 10.26.31-32) has been expressed by the words like 'Santyajya Sarvavishiyan' – 'Bhakt – Original person' and 'Mumukshu' etc. When Krishna understood well from the words of the gopis that all these souls have been enlightened by the sound of my flute and now they have full knowledge of divinity, then knowing their pure love and desire for Raas Leela, Krishna created two forms of them with the effect of his Yogamaya. The first ones who were of the five elements were sent back to their respective homes so that the cowherds may not feel uneasy seeing their mother, wife etc. not at home.

And the other divine soul-like forms created by Yogamaya were allowed to stay at home. After this, whatever Leela happened, it happened with the God's own forms created by Yogamaya. Vyas has mentioned the following words in the original text itself to indicate the above mentioned secret – as – (क) मन्यमानाः स्वपार्श्वस्थान् स्वान्स्वान्दरान्ब्रजौकसः । (थी० भा० १० । ३३।३८) – a) The residents of Braj considered their family members to be with them [meaning – due to the illusion of Krishna the gopis who were of the five elements and had physical bodies remained present as usual . (ख) यथार्भकः स्वप्रतिविम्वविभ्रमः ।

Just like Brahm plays with his magical powers, in the same way Krishna played Raas Leela with the Gopis.

From the above mentioned evidences, it can be seen that just as when Brahma Ji stole the calves and cowherds, Krishna created the same number of cowherds and calves through his Yogmaya and continued the same work. This secret could not be known to anyone even by hearsay. Similarly, during the Raasleela also, the Lord called the divine soul-endowed and divine body-bound Gopis to his Raasleela in order to free them and give them salvation and sent the fake Gopis back to Braj to keep this secret hidden.It is often seen that when the work of an incarnation is over, Shri Hari snatches away his divine power on some pretext, like in Rama avatar, after Shiva's Dhanush was broken, the incarnational power of Shri Parashuram ji was absorbed in Lord Ramchandra ji, and after the Leelasamvaran of Lord Krishna ji, Veershiro-Mani Arjun was defeated by ordinary unarmed cowherds, that is – after the departure of Narayan avatar Shri Krishna, Naravatar Arjun also became devoid of his unique power.

So in the same way, all the Devas also incarnated in Braj Bhoomi with their parts only for the happiness of Lord Krishna as per the order of Shri Brahma ji. When Krishna had almost finished the work of Gokul Vrindavan and after ten days the opportunity of destruction of Kansa was visible, then krishna felt that the stay of those gopas and gopis who were the incarnations of Devas in Braj was unnecessary. So Krishna sent his childhood friend gopas back to Brahmaloka on the pretext of 'Brahmavatsahan' leela and kept fake gopas at home, that is, all the Devas were reinstated in their real positions after their work was over and fake cowherds were left in Vraj. What remained were the gopi-based celestial maidens – so Krishna called them to himself on the pretext of 'Raasleela' by explaining everything with the gesture of the flute and in their place fake gopis were kept . He sent them home. In this way, with the end of his childhood leela, Krishna had concluded the period of the incarnation of the gopis who were the incarnations of the deities.

When it was confirmed in the above manner that Krishna did not touch any other woman in Raasleela but played with his own divine forms created by his Yogmaya, then naturally the curiosity arises that in such a situation what will be the relevance of the above question of Parikshit? So, this is also discussed. Parikshit asks that – Krishna has incarnated for the establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, but Raasleela has no connection with the work of establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, i.e. – this is only Babkrida = mere entertainment. So, what is the need to play with the Aptakama 'Purnakama' God by making His many forms? – 'Pardarabhimarshan' of God just for the sake of fun (- (Parasya Paramatmano Dararupinyo or Maya Shaktyasta Sambhimarshanam Baladashrayanmiti 'Brihadbhaktatoshini' Commentator:) 'Pratip' of Aptakamata – is unfavorable – what is the meaning of this? The essence of Parikshit's question is this. Rasleela is Krishna's childhood entertainment, but what was the need of Mayashrayan for the sake of fun?

If Maya-shrayan was done for establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, then it would have been in ccordance with the Dharma of incarnation, but what is the meaning of creating many forms for fun? In answer to this question, Shukdev Ji explained that Brahm taking shelter of Yog-Maya only for destruction is definitely a violation of the Dharma of incarnation in the form of establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, but it has been seen that the incarnations of God do this only for fun, which is not faulty. What is the need for the Paramatma to take shelter of Maya and create, maintain and destroy the universe, etc. and what is the meaning of God's will against 'full-favour' in the form of creation-destruction of the universe? The answer to this question has been given in the Vedas in this way that– न तस्य कार्य करणं च विद्यते । स्वाभाविकी ज्ञानबलक्रिया च ।। (श्वेताश्वतर ६।८) – That is, God has no specific purpose in creating and destroying the universe, but this is his natural effort.

Here (in the Vedas) it is answered that God's natural work cannot be an obstacle to 'purna-kamata'. In Shrimad Bhagwat also, Parikshit had the same question that despite being completely आप्तकाम, what was the need for God to take shelter of Yog-maya and play by taking many forms? To which the Veda-approved answer is given that it is natural for God's incarnations to take shelter of Maya for fun, and hence it cannot be an obstacle to 'purna-kamata'. Just as for God, the existence of the universe created by his own will cannot be a bondage, similarly, for the incarnations of God, the games done by his own cannot be a bondage. This is the coordination of Parikshit's question and Shukdev's answer.

महर्षि वेदव्यास जी ने ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण (ब्रहाखण्ड अध्याय ४) में रासलीला का सम्बन्ध सृष्टि रचना के आरम्भिक रहस्यों से भी सम्बद्ध किया है। श्रीकृष्ण जी को केन्द्रीभूत ब्रह्मा और गोगियों को प्रकृति की विभिन्न शक्तियों की प्रतिमूर्ति मानकर इनके संघर्ष से ही सृष्टि का प्रादुर्भाव माना है। हम पीछे इसी अध्याय में 'जल में बीर्यस्खलन' शीर्षक के नीचे – उक्त रूपक पर कुछ पंक्तियें लिख आये हैं अतः पिष्टपेषण करना व्यर्थ है। केवल एतावन्मात्र संकेत करना अनावश्यक न होगा जब स्वयं पुराणकर्ता व्यास जी महाराज ही स्थानान्तर में उक्त लीला का रूपक प्रायः अर्थ लगाते हैं तब सर्वसाधारण को भी अपनी रुचि के अनुसार आध्यात्मिक आदि सुसम्बद्ध तात्पर्थों के मनन करने में क्या हर्ज ही सकता है ?

Maharishi Ved Vyas Ji has also related the Raas Leela to the initial mysteries of the creation of the universe . Considering Shri Krishna Ji as the Param Brahm and the Gopis as the image of various powers of Prakriti , the universe is believed to have originated from their conflict that is Rasleela

So, this is also discussed. Parikshit asks that - Krishna has incarnated for the establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, but Raasleela has no connection with the work of establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, i.e. - this is only Babkrida = mere entertainment. So, what is the need to play with the Aptakama 'Purnakama' God by making His many forms? - 'Pardarabhimarshan' of God just for the sake of fun (-(Parasya Paramatmano Dararupinyo or Maya Shaktyasta Sambhimarshanam Baladashrayanmiti 'Brihadbhaktatoshini' Commentator:) 'Pratip' of Aptakamata - is unfavorable - what is the meaning of this? The essence of Parikshit's question is this. Rasleela is Krishna's childhood entertainment, but what was the need of Mayashrayan for the sake of fun?

If Maya-shrayan was done for establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, then it would have been in accordance with the Dharma of incarnation, but what is the meaning of creating many forms for fun? In answer to this question, Shukdev Ji explained that Brahm taking shelter of Yog-Maya only for destruction is definitely a violation of the Dharma of incarnation in the form of establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, but it has been seen that the incarnations of God do this only for fun, which is not faulty. What is the need for the Paramatma to take shelter of Maya and create, maintain and destroy the universe, etc. and what is the meaning of God's will against 'full-favour' in the form of creation-destruction of the universe? The answer to this question has been given in the Vedas in this way that-- न तस्य कार्यं करणं च विद्यते । स्वाभाविकी ज्ञानबलक्रिया च ॥ (श्वेताश्वतर ६।८) - That is, God has no specific purpose in creating and destroying the universe, but this is his natural effort.

Here (in the Vedas) it is answered that God's natural work cannot be an obstacle to 'purna-kamata'. In Shrimad Bhagwat also, Parikshit had the same question that despite being completely आप्तकाम, what was the need for God to take shelter of Yog-maya and play by taking many forms? To which the Veda-approved answer is given that it is natural for God's incarnations to take shelter of Maya for fun, and hence it cannot be an obstacle to 'purna-kamata'. Just as for God, the existence of the universe created by his own will cannot be a bondage, similarly, for the incarnations of God, the games done by his own cannot be a bondage. This is the coordination of Parikshit's question and Shukdev's answer.

महर्षि वेदव्यास जी ने ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण (ब्रहाखण्ड अध्याय ४) में रासलीला का सम्बन्ध सृष्टि रचना के आरम्भिक रहस्यों से भी सम्बद्ध किया है। श्रीकृष्ण जी को केन्द्रीभूत ब्रह्मा और गोगियों को प्रकृति की विभिन्न शक्तियों की प्रतिमूर्ति मानकर इनके संघर्ष से ही सृष्टि का प्रादुर्भाव माना है। हम पीछे इसी अध्याय में 'जल में बीर्यस्खलन' शीर्षक के नीचे – उक्त रूपक पर कुछ पंक्तियें लिख आये हैं अतः पिष्टपेषण करना व्यर्थ है। केवल एतावन्मात्र संकेत करना अनावश्यक न होगा जब स्वयं पुराणकर्ता व्यास जी महाराज ही स्थानान्तर में उक्त लीला का रूपक प्रायः अर्थ लगाते हैं तब सर्वसाधारण को भी अपनी रुचि के अनुसार आध्यात्मिक आदि सुसम्बद्ध तात्पर्थों के मनन करने में क्या हर्ज ही सकता है ?

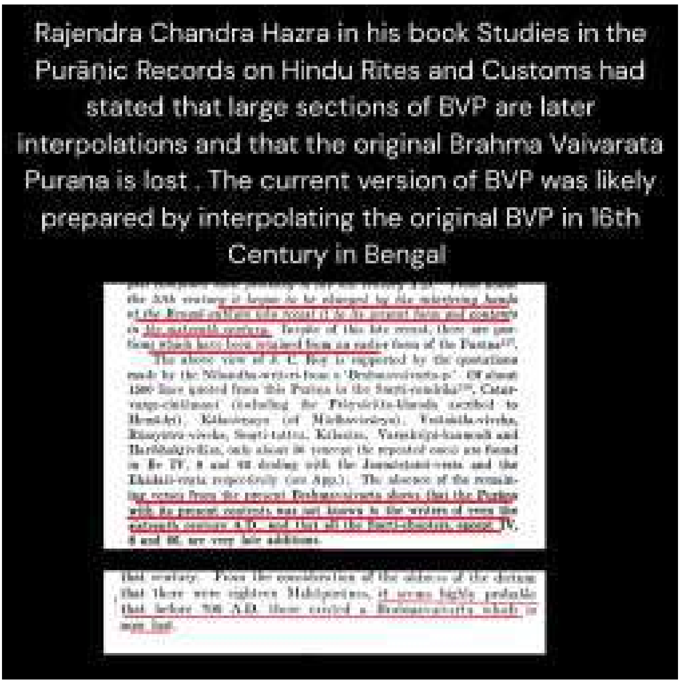
DEBUNKING HALALA PUTRA PEDOPHILE FOLLOWERS FALSE ALLEGATIONS AGAINST BRAHMA VAIVARTA PURANA

I will take his allegations on Brahma Vaivarata Purana and other Puranas together here

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. 8. Krishna's intercourse with the hump-back lady

Brahma Viavarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda 72.56-69
Instead of waking all the attendants of Kubja, lord woke her p alone and spoke to the chaste lady. Lord Krsna said, "O virtuous one, O beautiful one, wake up and let me enjoy the love-sport with you because in earlier birth you happened to be Surpanakha, the sister of Ravana. O damsel, during my incarnation as Rama you had performed the tapas for me. Influenced by those tapas I have taken to this form and have come to you as your beloved. Therefore, you serve me. Presently you enjoy all the pleasures with me and then proceed on to Goloka which destroys birth and death. Thus speaking lord Krsna embraced her and unrobing her, enjoyed her passionate advances. With a serene smile on her face, the passionate damsel felt shy at the first union but implanted a kiss on the lord. The lord took her in his lap like Laksmi. O Narada, the lord was well-versed in the art of making love and both of them did not rest during the physical union and they enjoyed the love-sport in various ways. Lord Krsna scratched her breasts and the pelvic region with the nails and also sucked her nectar-like lips. At the end of the night the lord implanted the semen in her womb after which the beautiful damsel fainted. In the lap of lord Krsna she lost the consciousness about day and night, heaven or earth, water or earth."

Shrimad Bhagavatam 10.48.6-10
Calling forward His beloved, who was anxious and shy at the prospect of this new contact, the Lord pulled her by her bangled hands onto the bed. Thus He enjoyed with that beautiful girl, whose only trace of piety was her having offered ointment to the Lord. Simply by smelling the fragrance of Krsna's lotus feet, Trivakrá cleansed away the burning lust Cupid had aroused in her breasts, chest and eyes. With her two arms she embraced between her breasts her lover, Sri Krsna, the personification of bliss, and thus she gave up her long-standing distress. Having thus gotten the hard-to-get Supreme Lord by the simple act of offering Him body ointment, unfortunate Trivakra submitted to that Lord of freedom the following request. [Trivakra said:] O beloved, please stay here with me for a few days more and enjoy. I cannot bear to give up Your association, O lotus- eyed one! Promising her the fulfilment of this lusty desire, considerate Krsna, Lord of all beings, paid Trivakra His respects and then returned with Uddhava to His own supremely opulent residence."

The correct meaning of Reme and Rati

यहाँ यह बतलाने की आवश्यकता नहीं कि रति, रमण, रम्य, रमणीय, रमा, रामा, रात्रि और राम आदि सभी शब्द 'रम्' क्रीडायाम् धातु से बने हैं।

स्थिति में यदि 'रति' और 'रमण' शब्द का अर्थ विषयानन्द किंवा व्यभिचार है तो राम का अर्थ व्यभिचार करना होगा परन्तु वस्तुतः राम शब्द का निर्वचन है- 'रमन्ते योगियो यस्मिन्' अर्थात् – योगीजन जिसमें 'रमण' करते हों, अथवा – आत्मानन्द का अनुभव करते हों वह ईश्वर ।

It need not be stated that the words rati, ramaṇa, ramya, ramaṇīya, Ramā, Rāmā, rātri, and Rāma are all derived from the verbal root "ram" (ram – to delight, to play).Now, if the words rati and ramaṇa were to mean only sensual pleasure or debauchery, then Rāma would also have to mean "one who indulges in debauchery." But in reality, the etymological explanation (nirvacana) of the word Rāma is: "ramante yogino yasmin" – "That in which the yogis find delight," or, "That in which they experience the bliss of the Self" — and that is none other than the Supreme Lord.

From a BrahmaDrushti

Lord Krishna was the embodiment of Brahman, and fulfilling the desires of surrendered devotees was the primary purpose of His incarnation. Kubja, a hunchbacked woman, had been cherishing the hope of embracing and meeting Him with all her heart for a long time. Although her love was not entirely pure, its exclusivity had matured to the point that it gave rise to an intense sense of absorption ("tanmayata") in her heart. Lord Krishna, being aware of this, sought to fulfill the desire of this absorbed devotee. He visited Kubja's home, accompanied by Uddhava.At Kubja's home, her manner of hospitality is described in the original text in detail, Kubja embraced the Lord and quenched her long-held longing. In return, the Lord, to entertain her heart, engaged in all pure acts of play and delight within the bounds of righteousness, leaving no effort spared. Kubja's desires were fulfilled, but unfortunately, she, being less fortunate, failed to take full advantage of this "Ganga come to her home." Instead of asking for liberation, she chose to remain in the world and sought trivial pleasures from the Lord.

As per His principle of reciprocation, the Lord granted whatever she asked for. Hence, Kubja was granted her wish to remain in her worldly existence, leading Sage Shuka to remark that her decision was short-sighted. Lord Krishna's principle, as expressed in the Bhagavad Gita 4/11

("As people approach Me, I reciprocate with them accordingly.")- Bhagavad Gita 4/11

From the perspective of Brahman, this episode reflects the Lord's ideal of fulfilling the sentiments of His surrendered devotees. Understanding this, King Parikshit felt no need to ask further questions in the original narration.

He accused that Shri Krishna enjoyed sexual relationship with Kubja which is totally baseless because as per Srimad Bhagvatam Lord Narayana who is Shri Krishna himself does not have a material body . Kubja's desires were fulfilled, but unfortunately, she, being less fortunate, failed to take full advantage of this "Ganga come to her home." Instead of asking for liberation, she chose to remain in the world and sought trivial pleasures from the Lord.

As per His principle of reciprocation, the Lord granted whatever she asked for. Hence, Kubja was granted her wish to remain in her worldly existence, leading Sage Shuka to remark that her decision was short-sighted. Lord Krishna's principle, as expressed in the Bhagavad Gita 4/11

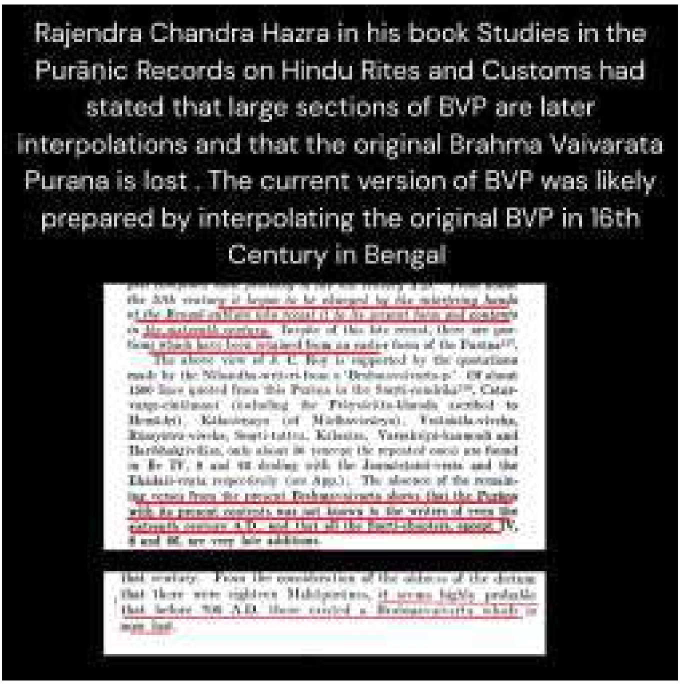
Ye yathā māṁ prapadyante tāṁstathaiva bhajāmyaham;
Mama vartmānuvartante manuṣyāḥ pārtha sarvaśaḥ.

11. In whatever way men approach Me, even so do I reward them; My path do men tread in all ways, O Arjuna!

("As people approach Me, I reciprocate with them accordingly.")- Bhagavad Gita 4/11
From the perspective of Brahman, this episode reflects the Lord's ideal of fulfilling the sentiments of His surrendered devotees. Understanding this, King Parikshit felt no need to ask further questions in the original narration.

Regarding Brahma Viavarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda 72.56-69

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata Purana Volume 1 and 2 translated by Ram Sharma Acharya QR code provided here

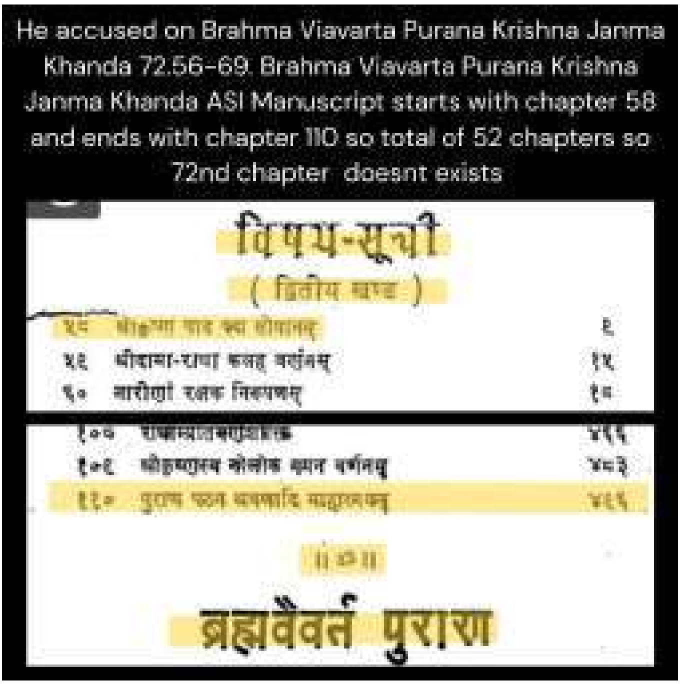
He accused on Brahma Viavarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda 72.56-69. Brahma Viavarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda ASI Manuscript starts with chapter 58 and ends with chapter 110 so total of 52 chapters so 72nd chapter doesnt exists



Allegations-

He had committed fornication with an independent woman named Naradi, Narada Purana, Uttarabhaga 80.31-32 "When the messengers returned, Naradi was called by the lover of cowherdesses. After bowing down to the lord, she went near him bashfully. The man of taste (Lord Krsna) embraced her, had the sportful dalliance with her and then dismissed her. Gradually she came once again to the lake Puspasaras.

Refutation-

This Prakaran is very much similar to the Krishna-Kubja story present in Srimad Bhagavatam and hence it must be interpreted similarly .

Narada Purana, Uttarabhaga 80.31-32 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications

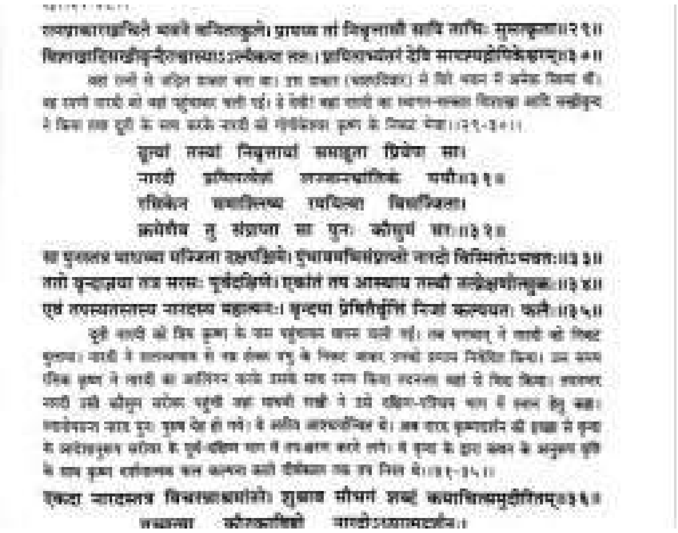
वहां रत्नों से जड़ित प्राकार बना था। उस प्राकार (चाहरदिवार) से घिरे भवन में अनेक स्त्रियां थीं। वह रमणी नारदी को वहां पहुंचाकर चली गई। हे देवी! वहां नारदी का स्वागत सत्कार विशाखा आदि सखीवृन्द ने किया तथा दूती के साथ करके नारदी को गोपीकेश्वर कृष्ण के निकट भेजा।।२९-३०।।

दूती नारदी को प्रिय कृष्ण के पास पहुंचाकर वापस चली गई। तब भगवान् ने नारदी को निकट बुलाया। नारदी ने सलज्जभाव से नम्र होकर प्रभु के निकट जाकर उनको प्रणाम निवेदित किया। उस समय रसिक कृष्ण ने नारदी का आलिंगन करके उसके साथ रमण किया तदनन्तर वहां से विदा किया। तदनन्तर नारदी उसी कौसुम सरोवर पहुंची जहां माधवी सखी ने उसे दक्षिण-पश्चिम भाग में स्नान हेतु कहा। स्नानोपरान्त नारद पुनः पुरुष देह हो गये। वे अतीव आश्चर्यान्वित थे। अब नारद कृष्णदर्शन की इच्छा से वृन्दा के आदेशानुरूप सरोवर के पूर्व-दक्षिण भाग में तपःश्चरण करने लगे। वे वृन्दा के द्वारा कथन के अनुरूप वृत्ति के साथ कृष्ण दर्शनात्मक फल कल्पना करते दीर्घकाल तक तप निरत थे।।३१-३५।।

There was an enclosure inlaid with jewels. Inside the building surrounded by that enclosure were many women. That beautiful woman brought Naradī there and then departed. O Goddess! There, Naradī was welcomed and honored by Viśākhā and other groups of companions, and, along with the messenger-woman, was brought into the resence of Gopīkeśvara Kṛṣṇa. (29–30)

The messenger, after bringing Naradī to the beloved Kṛṣṇa, returned. Then the Lord called Naradī near. Naradī, with bashfulness and humility, approached the Lord and offered her respectful salutations. At that time, the playful Kṛṣṇa embraced Naradī and sported with her, and afterward bid her farewell.

After this, Naradī returned to that same Kusuma Lake where her friend Mādhavī told her to bathe in the south-western part.



REFUTATION OF ALLEGATIONS ON THIS PRAKARAN FROM NARADA PURANA

1. Lord Kṛṣṇa's Body is Not Material — Sexual Implications Impossible

Just as in the Kubja case, the fundamental point stands: Śrī Hari, being the Supreme Lord, is not subject to the limitations or impulses of a material body.

- Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 10.88.5 — Lord Hari is beyond the range of Prakṛti, devoid of the attributes of material nature, and is the witness to all. His interactions, therefore, are never bound by the modes of nature or bodily desires.
- Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 10.46.38 — He has no wife, no children, no relatives, and no corporeal form. He has no bondage of karma. This rules out the possibility of Him engaging in sexual contact as a biological being.
- Mahābhārata Śānti Parva 351.2 — Nārāyaṇa is free from gross, subtle, and causal bodies; He dwells in all yet is untouched by their actions.

Implication: Even though the text uses the word raman ("sporting"), this cannot mean material intercourse. It can only denote spiritual, pure, and līlā-based play.

5. Lord Hari, on the other hand, is unaffected by and hence devoid of the attributes (of Prakrti). He is the Supreme Person far beyond the range of Prakrti. He is omniscient and is a witness to everything. A person who worships him becomes bereft of guṇas.

2. The Meaning of "Raman" and "Reme"

Just as in the Kubja episode:

The Sanskrit root ram (रम्) means "to delight, to sport, to rejoice" — primarily in the sense of play, self-delight, or companionship.

- Pandit Madhavacharya Shastri explains: "रेमे" and "रति" in such contexts mean innocent play, divine love, and pure joy, not sexual activity.
- If one takes "rati" or "raman" only as sexual, then even "Rāma" (from the same root) would mean "one who commits adultery" — an absurdity. The correct understanding is "one in whom yogis rejoice".

In Naradī's case: The Lord embraced and "sportively" interacted with her, as a parent may with a child or as the Lord may with any surrendered soul, in a way entirely devoid of carnal implication.

आर्य वाङ्मय में रतिरमण आदि शब्द

संस्कृत साहित्य में उक्त अर्थों में ही रति, रमण, आदि शब्दों के सहस्रों प्रयोग द्रष्टव्य हैं— यथा—

(क) सदानुकूलेषु हि कुर्वते रतिम् ······ (भारवि)

(ख) यश्चात्मरतिः (श्रीमद्भगवद्गीता)

(ग) रमते न मरालस्य मानसं मानसं विना । (सुभाषित रत्न भाण्डागार)

(घ) आत्मारामाश्च मुनयः (श्रीमद्भागवत)

(ङ) क्षणे क्षणे यन्नवतामुपैति तदेव रूपं रमणीयतायाः (शिशुपाल वध)

(च) ये रमणीयचरणाः···रमणीयां योनिमापद्येरन् (छान्दोग्य)

(छ) यत्र नार्यस्तु पूज्यन्ते रमन्ते तत्र देवताः । (मनु)

(ज) जन्म जन्म रति राम पद यह बरदान न आन । (रामचरित मानस)

यहाँ यह बतलाने की आवश्यकता नहीं कि रति, रमण, रम्य, रमणीय, रमा, रामा, रात्रि और राम आदि सभी शब्द 'रमु' क्रीडायाम् धातु से बने हैं। अतः सब शब्दों का मूल एक ही है, केवल प्रत्यय प्रत्ययों

(५३०) पुराण विमर्श

के भेद से विभिन्न रूप बन जाते हैं। 'रमु' धातु से 'क्तिन्' प्रत्यय करने पर जैसे 'रति' शब्द सिद्ध होता है, वैसे ही 'ल्यु' प्रत्यय लगाने से 'रमण' शब्द बनता है, तथा 'घञ्' प्रत्यय करने पर 'राम' शब्द बनता है। ऐसी स्थिति में यदि 'रति' और 'रमण' शब्द का अर्थ विषयानन्द किंवा व्यभिचार है तो राम का अर्थ व्यभिचार करना होगा परन्तु वस्तुतः राम शब्द का निर्वचन है—'रमन्ते योगिनो यस्मिन्' अर्थात्—योगीजन जिसमें 'रमण' करते हों, अथवा—आत्मानन्द का अनुभव करते हों वह ईश्वर।

3. Context of the Transformation and Līlā

The narrative shows that:

- Nārada was transformed into Naradī as part of a divine play orchestrated by Vṛndā and Mādhavī.
- Kṛṣṇa's embrace and "raman" was the culmination of this playful transformation, intended to give Nārada an experiential understanding of gopī-bhāva — the mood of the gopīs' devotion.
- After the embrace, Naradī was sent away without any description of sensual activity; she immediately reverted to her male form upon bathing.

Narada Purana Chapter 80 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications

हे मोहिनी ! तब नारद के सामने ही वहां गोप-गोपीगण के यूथ आने लगे। वहां एक प्रहर विश्राम करने के अनन्तर जब आधा प्रहर दिवस बाकी रहता था, तभी सब लोग उस अद्भुद् आश्रम में प्रविष्ट होने लगते ! वहां कृष्णभक्ति निरत वृन्दा सभी आगन्तुकों का फलादि से आतिथ्य करती थीं। हे भद्रे ! तपस्विनी को देखकर साधु शिरोमणि नारद ने उनको प्रणाम किया तथा सविनय वहीं बैठ गये। तदनन्तर ध्यान भंग होने पर वृन्दा ने अतिथि नारद को आसन प्रदान किया। नारद भी उन देवी से गोपिकाओं के ईश्वर कृष्ण का रहस्य जानने हेतु उनका सत्कार स्वीकार करके आसनासीन हो गये। तभी ब्रह्मनन्दन ने वृन्दा को अपने प्रति कृपालु देखकर अपनी हार्दिक अभिलाषा को उनसे कहा- ।।११-१८।।

हे भामिनी! उसी समय वृन्दा ने ध्यान योग के द्वारा नारद के वांछित विषय को जाना तथा सखी माधवी से कहा- "हे माधवी! इन महात्मा नारद की अभिलाषा पूरी करो। यह कार्य इस आश्रम के लिये महत्ववर्द्धक होगा। जो व्यक्ति आश्रमागत व्यक्ति की अभिलाषा पूरी नहीं करता, उसका आश्रम शृगाल गृहवत् व्यर्थ है।।१९-२१।।

तदनन्तर देवी माधवी स्वामिनी वृन्दा के आदेशानुरूप नारद के साथ सरोवर के श्रेष्ठ तट पर गई तथा उन्होंने नारद से सरोवर के पश्चिमोत्तर भाग में स्नानार्थ कहा। माधवी से प्रेरित देवदर्शन नारद श्रीकृष्ण

का चिन्तन करते हुये स्नानरत हो गये। हे भद्रे ! नारद को वहां स्नानरत छोड़कर माघवी वृन्दा के पास चली आई, क्योंकि वे वृन्दा की आज्ञा का पालन करने वाली थीं। नारद ने स्नानोपरान्त सरोवर से बाहर आते ही स्वयं को नारीरूप में पाया। तदनन्तर शुचिस्मिता नारदी ने चतुर्दिक् देखने पर ईशान कोण में खड़ी उत्तम आभूषण भूषित एक रमणी को देखा जो अंगुलियों के इंगित से नारदी को बुला रही थी। नारदी उस रमणी के समीप गई, तब उसने नारदी को विश्वास दिलाया और स्वस्थ चित्तनारदी को लेकर अन्यत्र चली गई।।२२-२८।।

O Mohinī! Then, right before Nārada, groups of cowherds and cowherd maidens began to arrive there. After resting for one prahar (about three hours), when half a prahar of the day remained, all of them would begin entering that wondrous hermitage. There, Vṛndā—ever engaged in devotion to Kṛṣṇa—welcomed all the visitors with offerings of fruit and the like.

O noble lady! Seeing the ascetic woman, the foremost of sages, Nārada, offered her salutations and humbly sat down there. Then, when her meditation ended, Vṛndā offered the guest Nārada a seat. Accepting her hospitality, Nārada, desiring to know the secret of Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of the cowherd maidens, took his seat before that divine lady.

At that time, the son of Brahmā, seeing Vṛndā to be gracious towards him, expressed to her his heartfelt wish. (11–18)

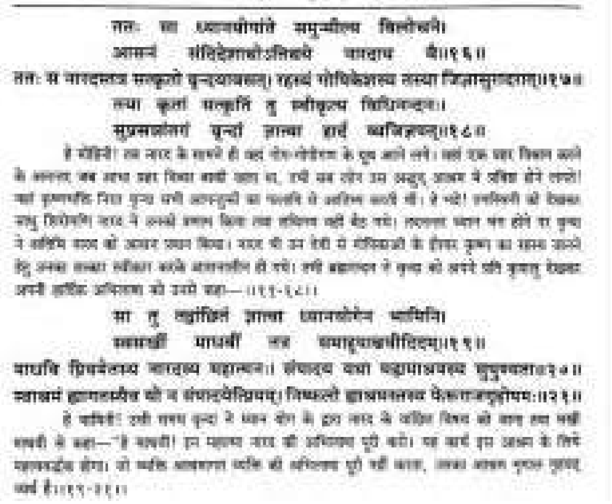
O charming one! At that very moment, Vṛndā, through meditative yoga, understood the object of Nārada's desire and said to her friend Mādhavī:
"O Mādhavī! Fulfil the wish of this great soul Nārada. This act will enhance the glory of this hermitage. The hermitage of one who does not fulfill the wish of a visiting guest is as useless as the lair of a jackal." (19–21)

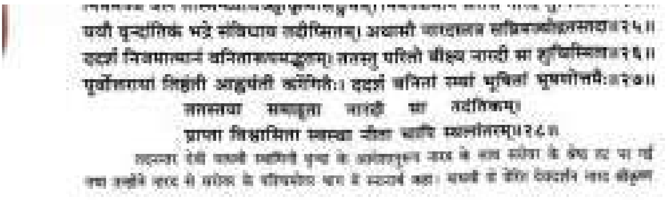
Then, the lady Mādhavī, following the command of her mistress Vṛndā, went with Nārada to the excellent bank of the lake, and she told Nārada to bathe in the north-western part of the lake. Inspired by Mādhavī, the god-seeing Nārada began bathing there, meditating upon Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

O noble lady! Leaving Nārada bathing there, Mādhavī returned to Vṛndā, for she was one who obeyed Vṛndā's commands.

After completing his bath, Nārada, upon coming out of the lake, found himself in a woman's form. Then, the beautiful-smiling Naradī looked around in all directions and saw, in the north-eastern quarter, a charming woman adorned with excellent ornaments, who was beckoning Naradī with her fingers.

Naradī went near that woman, and she reassured Naradī and, with a calm and confident heart, led her away to another place. (22–28)





4. Spiritual Symbolism

- Naradī's visit represents the jīva's journey through the bhakti-mārga, guided by guru-like figures (Vṛndā, Mādhavī) towards Kṛṣṇa.
- The embrace signifies acceptance into divine relationship — a symbol of spiritual union, not physical union between God and a human devotee .
- The return to male form after bathing represents the restoration of one's essential self after experiencing devotional sweetness in a different bhāva.

5. Why Sexual Interpretation is Baseless

- Śrī Kṛṣṇa is pūrṇa-brahma — without material urges.
- There is no mention of any sexual act, only the words "embraced" and "raman," both of which in devotional literature denote affectionate play, not intercourse.
- The entire context is steeped in devotional imagery, not erotic description.
- Just like with Kubja, if someone insists on a carnal reading, they are projecting material notions (gramya-buddhi) onto transcendental līlā — akin to the "village boar" analogy given by Pandit Madhvacharya Shastri .

6. Principle of Divine Reciprocation

Nārada, as Naradī, approached Kṛṣṇa in the mood of a gopī; Kṛṣṇa reciprocated in that bhāva, granting him the xperiential taste he sought — nothing more.

Bhagavad Gītā 4.11 — "As people approach Me, I reciprocate with them accordingly."

ये यथा मां प्रपद्यन्ते तांस्तथैव भजाम्यहम् ।
मम वर्त्मानुवर्तन्ते मनुष्याः पार्थ सर्वशः ॥ ११ ॥

11. Howsoever men approach Me, even so do I reward them; My path do men follow in all things O son of Pritha.

I reward men by granting them the things they desire just in accordance with the way in which they seek Me and the motive with which they seek Me; for they do not seek for moksha. One cannot indeed pursue pleasure and at the same time seek for moksha. Wherefore, I reward seekers of fruits by securing to them their selfish ends; I reward the unselfish, who do their prescribed duties and seek for moksha, by granting them knowledge; I reward men of knowledge who have renounced the world and seek for moksha, by granting them moksha; similarly, I reward men in distress by relieving them from distress. Thus do I reward all, just in the way they seek Me. But never do I reward any from affection or aversion, or from delusion. In all things, men follow My path, the path of the Isvara who exists in all forms." [Here 'men' stands for all those † who are engaged in works prescribed according to their respective ends.]

Conclusion:

Just as with the Kubja episode, the Naradī–Kṛṣṇa encounter in Narada Purana is purely spiritual, symbolic, and devotional. It is a līlā designed to teach the mood of selfless love for the Lord, not a record of material indulgence. Any sexualized reading is a distortion born of projecting human sensuality onto the transcendental.

CONCLUSION-

Moreover, he attempted to show from Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Brahma Purana, and Bhagavata Purana that Bhagwan Shree Krishna engaged in sexual relations with the Gopis. However, Such interpretation is not consistent with the descriptions found in the Mahabharata and Srimad Bhagavatam, which affirm that Bhagwan Shree Krishna does not possess a gross or subtle material human body. Being transcendental, He is beyond all material activities, including acts such as sexual intercourse.

Higher canonical texts such as the Mahabharata refer to Bhagwan Shree Krishna with epithets like Yogeshwara (Lord of Yoga and Senses) and Hrishikesha (Master of the Senses) and Suddhatma (a Pure Soul, free from all impurities, attachments, and worldly illusions who embodies absolute truth, divine consciousness, and eternal bliss, untouched by material limitations or Sexual or any form of impurities) , underscoring His supreme control over the mind and senses. These designations alone are sufficient to refute claims of Bhagwan Krishna's involvement in acts such as illicit sexual relations, which are fundamentally incompatible with His divinely transcendental nature as described in these authoritative scriptures.

In this mortal world, neither Indra nor all the gods and demons can defeat Him. Shri Krishna is Narayana, and Arjuna is considered to be Nar. Narayana and Nar are of the same divine essence, but for the welfare of the world, they have manifested in two separate bodies. ॥20॥

By the power of their righteous actions, these two pervade the eternal and steadfast realms. For the welfare of the world, whenever and wherever the occasion for battle arises, they repeatedly incarnate there. ॥21॥

Mahabharat Udyoga Parva Adhaya 70 – Description of Various Names and Qualities of Bhagvan Shree Krishna by Mahatma Sanjaya

भगवान् समस्त प्राणियोंके निवासस्थान हैं तथा वे सब भूतोंमें वास करते हैं, इसलिये 'वसु' हैं एवं देवताओंकी उत्पत्तिके स्थान होनेसे और समस्त देवता उनमें वास करते हैं, इसलिये उन्हें 'देव' कहा जाता है। अतएव उनका नाम 'वासुदेव' है, ऐसा जानना चाहिये। बृहत् अर्थात् व्यापक होनेके कारण वे ही 'विष्णु' कहलाते हैं ।। ३ ।।

भारत! मौन, ध्यान और योगसे उनका बोध अथवा साक्षात्कार होता है; इसलिये आप उन्हें 'माधव' समझें। मधु शब्दसे प्रतिपादित पृथ्वी आदि सम्पूर्ण तत्त्वोंके उपादान एवं अधिष्ठान होनेके कारण मधुसूदन श्रीकृष्णको 'मधुहा' कहा गया है ।। ४ ।।

'कृष्' धातु सत्ता अर्थका वाचक है और 'ण' शब्द आनन्द अर्थका बोध कराता है, इन दोनों भावोंसे युक्त होनेके कारण यदुकुलमें अवतीर्ण हुए नित्य आनन्दस्वरूप श्रीविष्णु 'कृष्ण' कहलाते हैं ।। ५ ।।

नित्य, अक्षय, अविनाशी एवं परम भगवद्धामका नाम पुण्डरीक है। उसमें स्थित होकर जो अक्षतभावसे विराजते हैं, वे भगवान् 'पुण्डरीकाक्ष' कहलाते हैं। (अथवा पुण्डरीक -कमलके समान उनके अक्षि- नेत्र हैं, इसलिये उनका नाम पुण्डरीकाक्ष है)। दस्युजनोंको त्रास (अर्दन या पीड़ा) देनेके कारण उनको 'जनार्दन' कहते हैं ।।

वे सत्यसे कभी च्युत नहीं होते और न सत्त्वसे अलग ही होते हैं, इसलिये सद्भावके सम्बन्धसे उनका नाम 'सात्वत' है। आर्ष कहते हैं वेदको, उससे भासित होनेके कारण भगवान्का एक नाम 'आर्षभ' है। आर्षभके योगसे ही वे 'वृषभेक्षण' कहलाते हैं (वृषभका अर्थ है वेद, वही ईक्षण-नेत्रके समान उनका ज्ञापक है; इस व्युत्पत्तिके अनुसार वृषभेक्षण नामकी सिद्धि होती है) ।।

शत्रुसेनाओंपर विजय पानेवाले ये भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण किसी जन्मदाताके द्वारा जन्म ग्रहण नहीं करते हैं, इसलिये 'अज' कहलाते हैं। देवता स्वयंप्रकाशरूप होते हैं, अतः उत्कृष्ट रूपसे प्रकाशित होनेके कारण भगवान् श्रीकृष्णको 'उदर' कहा गया है और दम (इन्द्रियसंयम) नामक गुणसे सम्पन्न होनेके कारण उनका नाम 'दाम' है। इस प्रकार दाम और उदर-इन दोनों शब्दोंके संयोगसे वे 'दामोदर' कहलाते हैं ।। ८ ।।

वे हर्ष अर्थात् सुखसे युक्त होनेके कारण हृषीक हैं और सुख-ऐश्वर्यसे सम्पन्न होनेके कारण 'ईश' कहे गये हैं। इस प्रकार वे भगवान् 'हृषीकेश' नाम धारण करते हैं। अपनी दोनों बाहुओंद्वारा भगवान् इस पृथ्वी और आकाशको धारण करते हैं, इसलिये उनका नाम 'महाबाहु' है ।। ९ ।।

श्रीकृष्ण कभी नीचे गिरकर क्षीण नहीं होते, अतः ('अधो न क्षीयते जातु' – इस व्युत्पत्तिके अनुसार) 'अधोक्षज' कहलाते हैं। वे नरों (जीवात्माओं) के अयन (आश्रय) हैं, इसलिये उन्हें 'नारायण' भी कहते हैं ।। १० ।।

वे सर्वत्र परिपूर्ण हैं तथा सबके निवासस्थान हैं, इसलिये 'पुरुष' हैं और सब पुरुषोंमें उत्तम होनेके कारण उनकी 'पुरुषोत्तम' संज्ञा है। वे सत् और असत् सबकी उत्पत्ति और लयके स्थान हैं तथा सर्वदा उन सबका ज्ञान रखते हैं; इसलिये उन्हें 'सर्व' कहते हैं ।। ११

वे भगवान् गोविन्द सत्यसे श्रीकृष्ण सत्यमें प्रतिष्ठित हैं और सत्य उनमें प्रतिष्ठित है। भी उत्कृष्ट सत्य हैं। अतः उनका एक नाम 'सत्य' भी है ।। १२ ।।

विक्रमण (वामनावतारमें तीनों लोकोंको आक्रान्त) करनेके कारण वे भगवान् 'विष्णु' कहलाते हैं। वे सबपर विजय पानेसे 'जिष्णु', शाश्वत (नित्य) होनेसे 'अनन्त' तथा गौओं (इन्द्रियों) के ज्ञाता और प्रकाशक होनेके कारण (गां विन्दति) इस व्युत्पत्तिके अनुसार 'गोविन्द' कहलाते हैं ।। १३

वे अपनी सत्ता-स्फूर्ति देकर असत्यको भी सत्य-सा कर देते हैं और इस प्रकार ारी प्रजाको मोहमें डाल देते हैं ।। १४ ।।

निरन्तर धर्ममें तत्पर रहनेवाले उन भगवान् मधुसूदनका स्वरूप ऐसा ही है। अपनी मर्यादासे कभी च्युत न होनेवाले महाबाहु श्रीकृष्ण कौरवोंपर कृपा करनेके लिये यहाँ पधारनेवाले हैं ।। १५ ।।

Sanjaya said, "O King! I have heard the auspicious derivation of the names of Vasudeva's son, Lord Krishna. As much as I remember, I shall narrate. In truth, Lord Krishna is beyond the reach of all beings.

The Lord is the abode of all beings and dwells in all creatures; therefore, He is called 'Vasu'. Since He is the origin of the gods and they reside in Him, He is known as 'Deva'. Thus, His name is 'Vasudeva'. He is vast and all-pervading, hence He is called 'Vishnu'.

O Bharata! Through silence, meditation, and yoga, He is realized; thus, you should understand Him as 'Madhava'. Since He is the substratum and the origin of the elements, He is also called 'Madhuha'.

The root 'Kṛṣ' denotes existence, and 'ṇa' signifies bliss. Being the embodiment of both, the ever-blissful Lord Vishnu, born in the Yadu dynasty, is known as 'Krishna'.

The eternal, indestructible, and supreme abode of the Lord is called 'Pundarika'. Residing there eternally, He is known as 'Pundarikaksha'. (Alternatively, His eyes are like lotus petals, hence His name 'Pundarikaksha'). As He causes distress to evil beings, He is called 'Janardana'.

He never deviates from truth nor from purity; therefore, in relation to pure existence, He is called 'Satvat'. The term 'Arsha' refers to the Vedas, and as He illuminates them, His name is 'Arshabha'. Through the association with 'Arshabha', He is called 'Vrishabhekshana'. (Since 'Vrishabha' means Veda, which acts as His eye or vision, this name is derived).

The Lord, victorious over enemy forces, is not born from any progenitor, hence He is called 'Aja'. The gods are self-effulgent, and due to His supreme radiance, He is called 'Udara'. As He possesses the quality of restraint ('dama'), His name is 'Dam'. The union of 'Dam' and 'Udara' results in the name 'Damodara'.

Since He is always full of joy, He is called 'Hrishika', and as He possesses divine wealth, He is known as 'Isha'. Thus, He bears the name 'Hrishikesha'. The Lord supports the earth and sky with His two arms, hence He is called 'Mahabahu'.

Lord Krishna never declines or diminishes; thus, He is called 'Adhokshaja'. As He is the refuge of all living beings ('Naras'), He is also named 'Narayana'.

Since He is present everywhere and is the dwelling place of all, He is called 'Purusha'. Among all beings, He is the supreme, hence 'Purushottama'. He is the origin and dissolution of existence and non-existence, and He always holds knowledge of all, thus He is known as 'Sarva'.

Lord Govinda is firmly established in truth, and truth is established in Him. He Himself is the supreme truth, so He is named 'Satya'.

Due to His conquest (as in the Vamana incarnation, where He encompassed the three worlds), He is called 'Vishnu'. Victorious over all, He is 'Jishnu'. Eternal in nature, He is 'Ananta'. As He perceives and enlightens the senses ('Go'), He is known as 'Govinda'.

By His divine power, He makes even illusion appear as truth and thus leads the world into delusion.

Lord Madhusudana, ever engaged in righteousness, possesses this nature. The mighty-armed Krishna, unwavering from His divine resolve, has come here to show His grace upon the Kauravas."

संजय उवाच

श्रुतं मे वासुदेवस्य नामनिर्वचनं शुभम्।
यावत् तत्राभिजानेऽहमप्रमेयो हि केशवः॥ २॥

संजयने कहा—राजन्! मैंने वसुदेवनन्दन श्रीकृष्णके नामोंकी मंगलमयी व्युत्पत्ति सुन रखी है, उसमें जितना मुझे स्मरण है, उतना बता रहा हूँ। वास्तवमें तो भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण समस्त प्राणियोंकी पहुँचसे परे हैं॥ २॥

वसनात् सर्वभूतानां वसुत्वाद् देवयोनितः।
वासुदेवस्ततो वेद्यो बृहत्वाद् विष्णुरुच्यते॥ ३॥

भगवान् समस्त प्राणियोंके निवासस्थान हैं तथा वे सब भूतोंमें वास करते हैं, इसलिये 'वसु' हैं एवं देवताओंकी उत्पत्तिके स्थान होनेसे और समस्त देवता उनमें वास करते हैं, इसलिये उन्हें 'देव' कहा जाता है। अतएव उनका नाम 'वासुदेव' है, ऐसा जानना चाहिये। बृहत् अर्थात् व्यापक होनेके कारण वे ही 'विष्णु' कहलाते हैं॥ ३॥

मौनाद् ध्यानाच्च योगाच्च विद्धि भारत माधवम्।
सर्वतत्त्वमयत्वाच्च मधुहा मधुसूदनः॥ ४॥

भारत! मौन, ध्यान और योगसे उनका बोध अथवा साक्षात्कार होता है; इसलिये आप उन्हें 'माधव' समझें। मधु शब्दसे प्रतिपादित पृथ्वी आदि सम्पूर्ण तत्त्वोंके उपादान एवं अधिष्ठान होनेके कारण मधुसूदन श्रीकृष्णको 'मधुहा' कहा गया है॥ ४॥

कृषिर्भूवाचकः शब्दो णश्च निर्वृतिवाचकः।
विष्णुस्तद्भावयोगाच्च कृष्णो भवति सात्वतः॥ ५॥

'कृष्' धातु सत्ता अर्थका वाचक है और 'ण' शब्द आनन्द अर्थका बोध कराता है, इन दोनों भावोंसे युक्त होनेके कारण यदुकुलमें अवतीर्ण हुए नित्य आनन्दस्वरूप श्रीविष्णु 'कृष्ण' कहलाते हैं॥ ५॥

पुण्डरीकं परं धाम नित्यमक्षयमव्ययम्।
तद्भावात् पुण्डरीकाक्षो दस्युत्रासाज्जनार्दनः॥ ६॥

नित्य, अक्षय, अविनाशी एवं परम भगवद्धामका नाम पुण्डरीक है। उसमें स्थित होकर जो अक्षतभावसे विराजते हैं, वे भगवान् 'पुण्डरीकाक्ष' कहलाते हैं। (अथवा पुण्डरीक—कमलके समान उनके अक्षि—नेत्र हैं, इसलिये उनका नाम पुण्डरीकाक्ष है)। दस्युजनोंको त्रास (अर्दन या पीड़ा) देनेके कारण उनको 'जनार्दन' कहते हैं॥

यतः सत्त्वान्न च्यवते यच्च सत्त्वान्न हीयते।
सत्त्वतः सात्वतस्तस्मादार्षभाद् वृषभेक्षणः॥ ७॥

वे सत्त्वसे कभी च्युत नहीं होते और न सत्त्वसे अलग ही होते हैं, इसलिये सद्भावके सम्बन्धसे उनका नाम 'सात्वत' है। आर्ष कहते हैं वेदको, उससे भासित होनेके कारण भगवान्‌का एक नाम 'आर्षभ' है। आर्षभके योगसे ही वे 'वृषभेक्षण' कहलाते हैं (वृषभका अर्थ है वेद, वही ईक्षण—नेत्रके समान उनका ज्ञापक है; इस व्युत्पत्तिके अनुसार वृषभेक्षण नामकी सिद्धि होती है)॥

न जायते जनित्रायमजस्तस्मादनीकजित्।
देवानां स्वप्रकाशत्वाद् दमाद् दामोदरो विभुः॥ ८॥

शत्रुसेनाओंपर विजय पानेवाले ये भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण किसी जन्मदाताके द्वारा जन्म ग्रहण नहीं करते हैं, इसलिये 'अज' कहलाते हैं। देवता स्वयंप्रकाशरूप होते हैं, अतः उत्कृष्ट रूपसे प्रकाशित होनेके कारण भगवान् श्रीकृष्णको 'उदर' कहा गया है और दम (इन्द्रियसंयम) नामक गुणसे सम्पन्न होनेके कारण उनका नाम 'दाम' है। इस प्रकार दाम और उदर—इन दोनों शब्दोंके संयोगसे वे 'दामोदर' कहलाते हैं॥ ८॥

हर्षात् सुखात् सुखैश्वर्याद्धृषीकेशत्वमश्नुते।
बाहुभ्यां रोदसी बिभ्रन्महाबाहुरिति स्मृतः॥ ९॥

वे हर्ष अर्थात् सुखसे युक्त होनेके कारण हृषीक हैं और सुख-ऐश्वर्यसे सम्पन्न होनेके कारण 'ईश' कहे गये हैं। इस प्रकार वे भगवान् 'हृषीकेश' नाम धारण करते हैं। अपनी दोनों बाहुओंद्वारा भगवान् इस पृथ्वी और आकाशको धारण करते हैं, इसलिये उनका नाम 'महाबाहु' है॥ ९॥

अधो न क्षीयते जातु यस्मात् तस्मादधोक्षजः।
नराणामयनाच्चापि ततो नारायणः स्मृतः॥ १०॥

श्रीकृष्ण कभी नीचे गिरकर क्षीण नहीं होते, अतः ('अधो न क्षीयते जातु'—इस व्युत्पत्तिके अनुसार) 'अधोक्षज' कहलाते हैं। वे नरों (जीवात्माओं)-के अयन (आश्रय) हैं, इसलिये उन्हें 'नारायण' भी कहते हैं॥ १०॥

पूरणात् सदनाच्चापि ततोऽसौ पुरुषोत्तमः ।
असतश्च सतश्चैव सर्वस्य प्रभवाप्ययात् ॥ ११ ॥

सर्वस्य च सदा ज्ञानात् सर्वमेतं प्रचक्षते ।

वे सर्वत्र परिपूर्ण हैं तथा सबके निवासस्थान हैं, इसलिये 'पुरुष' हैं और सब पुरुषोंमें उत्तम होनेके कारण उनकी 'पुरुषोत्तम' संज्ञा है। वे सत् और असत् सबकी उत्पत्ति और लयके स्थान हैं तथा सर्वदा उन सबका ज्ञान रखते हैं; इसलिये उन्हें 'सर्व' कहते हैं ॥ ११½ ॥

सत्ये प्रतिष्ठितः कृष्णः सत्यमत्र प्रतिष्ठितम् ॥ १२ ॥
सत्यात् सत्यं तु गोविन्दस्तस्मात् सत्योऽपि नामतः ।

श्रीकृष्ण सत्यमें प्रतिष्ठित हैं और सत्य उनमें प्रतिष्ठित है। वे भगवान् गोविन्द सत्यसे भी उत्कृष्ट सत्य हैं। अतः उनका एक नाम 'सत्य' भी है ॥ १२½ ॥

विष्णुर्विक्रमणाद् देवो जयनाज्जिष्णुरुच्यते ॥ १३ ॥
शाश्वतत्वादनन्तश्च गोविन्दो वेदनाद् गवाम् ।

विक्रमण (वामनावतारमें तीनों लोकोंको आक्रान्त) करनेके कारण वे भगवान् 'विष्णु' कहलाते हैं। वे सबपर विजय पानेसे 'जिष्णु', शाश्वत (नित्य) होनेसे 'अनन्त' तथा गौओं (इन्द्रियों)-के ज्ञाता और प्रकाशक होनेके कारण (गां विन्दति) इस व्युत्पत्तिके अनुसार 'गोविन्द' कहलाते हैं ॥ १३½ ॥

अतत्त्वं कुरुते तत्त्वं तेन मोहयते प्रजाः ॥ १४ ॥

वे अपनी सत्ता-स्फूर्ति देकर असत्यको भी सत्य-सा कर देते हैं और इस प्रकार सारी प्रजाको मोहमें डाल देते हैं ॥ १४ ॥

एवंविधो धर्मनित्यो भगवान् मधुसूदनः ।
आगन्ता हि महाबाहुरानृशंस्यार्थमच्युतः ॥ १५ ॥

निरन्तर धर्ममें तत्पर रहनेवाले उन भगवान् मधुसूदनका स्वरूप ऐसा ही है। अपनी मर्यादासे कभी च्युत न होनेवाले महाबाहु श्रीकृष्ण कौरवोंपर कृपा करनेके लिये यहाँ पधारनेवाले हैं ॥ १५ ॥

Allegations-

Lakshmi and Dattatreya

Purana obscurely states that Dattatreya had sex with Lakshmi,

Markandeya Purana 18.23-32 "Thus exhorted the gods then went to Dattatreya's hermitage, and they beheld the high-souled Muni, attended by Lakshmi, hymned by Gandharvas and engrossed in quaffing spirituous liquor…Daddatreya addressed the prostrate gods, 'What desire ye of me, that ye do me this obeisance…I am drinking strong drink, I have remnants of food in my mouth, nor I subdued my senses. How is it, O gods, ye seek for victory over your enemies even from me?' The gods spoke. Thou art sinless, O lord of the world; no stain hast thou, into whose heart, purified by the ablution of learning, has entered the light of knowledge. True is this, o gods! all learning have I, who am impartial in view: but by reason of association with this woman I am now impure after eating. For commerce with women when continually pursued tends to depravity. Thus addressed, the gods then spoke again. This woman, O sinless brahman! is the mother of the world; she is not depraved…"

Lakshmi was present there and then he tells the gods that he had copulation with this woman (i.e. Lakshmi), Padma Purana tells us that Dattatreya had sex with Lakshmi though it doesn't mention Lakshmi but the above verse attests to this statement,

Padma Purana II.103.110-113 "Atri's son Dattatreya, the high-souled brahmana, the great sage, with his eyes red due to (having drunk) spirituous liquor, was sporting with a woman. The virtuous one, intoxicated by wine, having seated a young, auspicious woman, best of all women, on his lap, sang, danced and heavily drank liquor…"

Refutation-

Here is Markandeya Purana Chapter 18 hindi translation + English translation by Hindi Sahitya Samelan (This Prakaran comes in chapter 17 in the Markandeya Purana Translated by Hindi sahitya Samelan) –

The episode in the Markandeya Purana (Chapter 17, Dattatreyopākhyāna) that is often misquoted does not describe any sexual act between Dattatreya and Lakshmi. In this passage, King Kārtavīrya Arjuna comes to serve Dattatreya. To test the king's devotion and wisdom, Dattatreya says:

> "Just as I told the gods before, I drink liquor and, with this woman beside me, I indulge in censured pleasures. Why then do you serve me? Go serve someone worthy."

This is only Dattatreya's own statement, not a narrative of an act. The king immediately replies:

> "O Lord, you are sinless, and this goddess is the mother of the world. These appearances are your māyā, they cannot delude me."

Pleased with this correct understanding, Dattatreya grants him boons, and the story continues with the king's rise to power.

At no point in the Purana is there a description of sexual relations or any physical act. This episode is a philosophical test: Dattatreya, an Avadhūta (one beyond worldly norms), uses shocking words and unconventional behavior to teach detachment and to see whether a seeker can see divinity beyond outer appearances.

पुत्र बोला- नरपति कार्त्तवीर्य ने गर्गऋषि के इस प्रकार वचन सुनकर दत्तात्रेय मुनि के आश्रम में जाकर भक्तिसहित उनकी पूजा की । १। चरणसंवाहन (पैरों का दाबना) इत्यादि करके अर्घ्य, फूल, माला सुगंधि, जल, फल और चन्दनादि उनके लिये लाने लगे। २। ऐसे ही अन्नादि भी लाते थे और उनका उच्छिष्ट स्वयं खाते थे । इस कारण मुनि ने संतुष्ट होकर उनसे इस प्रकार कहा । ३। जिस प्रकार पहले देवताओं से मद्यपान इत्यादि अपने निन्दित कर्म कहे थे, फिर बोले, देखो यह स्त्री जो मेरे निकटस्थित है, इससे मैं निन्दित रमण किया करता हूँ।४। हे राजन्! मैं इस प्रकार के समस्त निन्दनीय कार्यों में व्याप्त रहता हूँ, अत एव मेरे समान उपकार करने में असमर्थ पुरुष की सेवा करने से क्या होगा ? जो पुरुष समर्थ हो, उसकी आराधना करो ।५
पुत्र ने कहा-मुनि के इस प्रकार कहने पर गर्गमुनि के वह वचन स्मरण करके । ६। कार्त्तवीर्यार्जुन दत्तात्रेय जी को प्रणाम पूर्वक कहने लगे ।
अर्जुन ने कहा- हे देव ! आपने मुझको ऐसा मोहित क्यों किया है, आप अपनी माया के संग हुए हैं,
अर्थात् मुझ अज्ञानी को अपनी माया से किसलिये भुलावा देते हो । ७। अत एव आप पापरहित हैं, यह देवी सब संसार की अरणि' स्वरूप है, इस कारण यह भी निष्पाप है, राजा के इस प्रकार कहने पर मुनिवर अत्यन्त प्रसन्न होकर फिर बोले । ८। हे पृथ्वीमण्डल को वशीभूत करने वाले महावीर्यवान् कार्त्तवीर्यार्जुन ! वर माँगो, तुमने जो मेरे गुप्तनाम उच्चारण किये हैं।९। इससे मुझको अत्यन्त संतोष उत्पन्न हुआ है, हे राजन्! जो मनुष्य मेरा गंधमाल्यादि से पूजन करते हैं । १०। जो मद्यमांसरूप उपहार और घृतयुक्त मिष्ठान देकर लक्ष्मीसहित ब्राह्मण की पूजा के संग संगीत । १'१। तथा वीणा, वेणु और शंख इत्यादि मनोहर बाजे बजाते हैं, मैं पुत्र स्त्री से धनादि प्रदान करके उनको परमसंतुष्ट करता हूँ।१२। और जो अवधूत कहकर तिरस्कार करते हैं उनको मारता हूँ जो तुम्हारे मन में इच्छा हो, वह वर ांगो, तुम्हारा कल्याण हो । १३। तुमने जो मेरे गुप्त नामकीर्तन किये हैं, इस कारण

मैं तुमसे अत्यन्त प्रसन्न हुआ हूँ। कार्त्तवीर्य ने कहा- हे देव ! यदि आप प्रसन्न हुए हैं तो मुझको ऐसी उत्तम ऋद्धि प्रदान कीजिये ।१४। जिससे सहज में ही सब प्रजा का पालन कर सकूँ और पापभागी न हूँ और शत्रुओं के अनुसरण में ज्ञान की प्राप्ति हो तथा समर में कोई सन्मुख न ठहर सके । १५। लघुतागुणयुक्त सहस्रबाहु हो जाने की इच्छा करता हूँ। जल, आकाश, भूमि, पर्वत और पाताल इत्यादि सब स्थानों में ही असंगति और श्रेष्ठ मनुष्य के हाथ में मृत्यु यह सब लाभ करने की अभिलाषा करता हूँ। हे देव! मैं अमार्ग प्रवृत्त मनुष्यों को सन्मार्ग दिखाने वाला हूँ। १६-१७। अक्षय धन दान करने से श्लाघनीय अतिथिलाभ करूँ, राज्य में मेरा नाम उच्चारण करने से अनष्टद्रव्यता हो अर्थात् कोई धनहीन न रहे। और आपके चरणकमलों में मेरी भक्ति सदा अचल होकर वर्तमान रहे । १८
दत्तात्रेय जी बोले- हे वत्स ! तुमने जो जो कहा, वह सब होगा। १९। और मेरे प्रसाद से तुम चक्रवर्ती राजा होगे ।
पुत्र बोला-तब उन कार्त्तवीर्यार्जुन ने मुनिवर दत्तात्रेय जी को प्रणाम करके । २०। समस्त प्रजा को बुलाकर सम्यक् प्रकार से अभिषेक ग्रहण किया, उस समय समस्त गंधर्व, अप्सरागण ।२१। वसिष्ठ आदि ऋषिगण, सुमेरु इत्यादि पर्वत, गंगा इत्यादि सब नदियाँ, जलयुक्त सब समुद्र । २२। प्लंक्ष इत्यादि सब वृक्ष, इन्द्रादि सब देवता, वासुकी इत्यादि नाग । २३। गरुडादि पक्षी, तथा नगर और पुरवासी समस्त लोक मुनिवर दत्तात्रेय जी के प्रसाद से सब सामग्री सजा कर अभिषेक के लिये आये । २४। और ब्रह्मादि देवताओं ने अग्नि प्रज्ज्वलित की, फिर दत्तात्रेय स्वरूपी नारायण ने अभिषेक किया । २५। अनन्तर समुद्र, नदी और ऋषियों ने अभिषेक किया और "हैहय राज्य में स्थित हुए" यह घोषणा सर्वत्र हो गई। २६। मुनिवर दत्तात्रेय के प्रसाद से अतुल ऐश्वर्य को प्राप्त हो महाबल हैह्य ने राज्य में अवस्थान करके आज्ञा दी कि, जो अबसे मेरे अतिरिक्त अस्त्र ग्रहण करेगा । २७। वह परहिंसारत वा दस्यु मेरे हाथ से मारा जायगा । राजा के इस प्रकार आज्ञा करने पर उनके राज्य में उनके अतिरिक्त और कोई आयुधधारी मनुष्य वर्तमान नहीं रहा । २८। सब भूमि के एक राजा कार्त्तवीर्यार्जुन ही मनुष्यव्याघ्र और पराक्रमी हुए, तब वही ग्रामपालक, वही पशुपालक । २९। और वही क्षेत्ररक्षक थे, दूसरा नहीं । ब्राह्मणरक्षक, तपस्विरक्षक और वही अर्थपालक हुए। ३०। वह परवीरघातक राजा ही केवल मात्र चोर, सर्प, अग्नि, शस्त्र, शत्रु और भयंकर समुद्र वा अन्यान्य आपदा में निमग्न मनुष्यों की रक्षा करने वाले हुए । ३१। एक मात्र उनका नाम उच्चारण करके ही मनुष्यगण सब आपदाओं से उत्तीर्ण होने लगे, उन राजा ने जब राज्य शासन किया, तब राज्य में किसी का द्रव्य नष्ट नहीं हुआ । ३२। उन्होंने नाना प्रकार के यज्ञ यजन करके दक्षिणासहित समाप्त किये और महत् तपस्याचारी तथा संग्राम में बड़ी चेष्टावाले हुए । ३३। तब इनकी अत्यन्त समृद्धि और मान को देखकर अंगिरा मुनि ने कहा- "अन्य कोई राजा इनके समान नहीं हुआ । ३४। और न यज्ञ, दान, तपस्या व संग्राम चेष्टा किसी विषय में कार्त्तवीर्य के समान नहीं होगा, इसमें संदेह नहीं।" वह राजा जिस दिन दत्तात्रेय के निकट से अतुल ऐश्वर्य को प्राप्त हुए हैं। ३५। उन्होंने उसी दिन दत्तात्रेय का याग किया था और उनकी सब प्रजा ने भी भूपति की परम ऋद्धि देखकर सावधान चित्त से उसी दिन याग किया था, यही उन बुद्धिमान् दत्तात्रेय जी का माहात्म्य है । ३६-३७। उन चराचर गुरु, अन्तहीन, शार्ङ्गधन्वा, शंख, चक्र, गदाधारी अप्रमेय अनन्तदेव दत्तात्रेय रूपी विष्णु की उत्पत्ति सब पुराणों में नाना प्रकार से कही गई है, जो मनुष्य नारायण के इस परमरूप की चिन्ता करते हैं। ३८-३९। वही सुखी होते हैं और तत्काल संसारबंधन से छूट जाते हैं जो सदा कहते हैं कि, हे वैष्णवगण ! मैं भक्तिद्वारा सदा ही तुमको सुलभ हैं। पुत्र, पुष्प, फलोंद्वारा पूजित हुआ भी मैं मुक्ति देता हूँ,, ऐसी जिनकी प्रतिज्ञा है, फिर मनुष्य उनका आश्रय क्यों न करे । ४०-४१। वह अनादिनिधनदेव ही धर्माचरण के करने और अधर्म विनाश के निमित्त स्थिति और पालनादि करते हैं ।४२। हे पिता ! अब अलर्क नामक ब्राह्मण का वृत्तान्त आप से कहता हूँ कि, जिनसे दत्तात्रेय जी ने योगमार्ग का वर्णन किया है वह महात्मा अलर्कमहाराज जगत् में प्रसिद्ध राजर्षि और अपने पिता के भक्त थे ।४३ श्रीमार्कण्डेयपुराण में दत्तात्रेयोपाख्यान वर्णन नामक सत्रहवाँ अध्याय समाप्त । १७

The son said:

King Kartavirya, after hearing these words of Sage Garga, went to the hermitage of Sage Dattatreya and worshipped him with devotion. (1)
He began to serve him by massaging his feet, and by bringing offerings such as water for washing, flowers, garlands, fragrant substances, water, fruits, and sandalwood paste. (2)
In the same way, he also brought food, and ate the remnants (uchchhishta) of the sage's meals. Pleased by this, the sage said to him: (3)

"Just as earlier I had told the gods that I indulge in censured acts like drinking wine, so too I tell you: behold, this woman who stays near me, with her I indulge in censured pleasure. (4)
O King! I am constantly engaged in all such blameworthy actions; therefore, what will you gain by serving such a one as I, who am unfit to be of help? Worship instead a man who is competent." (5)

The son said:
When the sage thus spoke, Kartavirya Arjuna remembered the words of Sage Garga and, bowing before Dattatreya, he said: (6)

Arjuna said:
"O Lord! Why do you delude me like this? You are one with your own divine Māyā, that is, why do you confuse an ignorant man like me with your Māyā? (7)
Indeed, you are sinless, and this Goddess (Lakshmi) is the mother of the world; therefore she too is without sin."

When the king spoke thus, the great sage was extremely pleased and said again: (8)

"O mighty and valiant Kartavirya Arjuna, conqueror of the earth! Ask for a boon. The secret names of mine which you have uttered have pleased me greatly. (9)
O King! Those men who worship me with fragrances and garlands, who offer me gifts of wine, meat, and sweet dishes prepared with ghee, who worship me along with Lakshmi, and who play music, (10–11) such as with the vina, flute, conch, and other melodious instruments – I, being very pleased, bestow upon them sons, wives, wealth, and other prosperity. (12)
But those who despise me by calling me an Avadhuta (eccentric ascetic), I punish. Whatever desire you hold in your mind, ask for that boon, may you be blessed! (13)
Because you have sung my secret names, I am extremely pleased with you."

Kartavirya said:
"O Lord! If you are pleased with me, then grant me such excellent prosperity (ṛiddhi) (14)
by which I may easily protect all my subjects without falling into sin, gain knowledge to overcome my enemies, and so that in battle no enemy can stand before me. (15)
I wish to become endowed with a thousand arms, light of body, free to move unhindered in water, sky, earth, mountains, and the nether regions; and may death come to me only at the hands of one who is superior to me. I wish to guide men who have strayed from the right path. (16–17)
Through inexhaustible wealth and generosity, I wish to honor guests; let it be that by the mere mention of my name, there will be no poverty in my kingdom; and let my devotion to your lotus feet always remain firm." (18)

Dattatreya said:
"O dear child! All that you have said shall come to pass. (19)
By my grace you shall become a universal emperor (Chakravarti)."

The son said:
Then Kartavirya Arjuna bowed to the great sage Dattatreya. (20)
He summoned all his subjects and performed the consecration ceremony properly. At that time, all the Gandharvas and Apsaras, (21) sages such as Vasishtha, mountains like Sumeru, all the rivers such as the Ganga, and all the oceans filled with water, (22) all trees such as Plaksha, all the gods including Indra, serpents like Vasuki, (23) birds like Garuda, the people of cities and villages—all of them, through the grace of Sage Dattatreya, brought materials for the consecration ceremony. (24)
And the gods, headed by Brahma, lit the sacred fire; then Dattatreya, who is a form of Narayana, performed the anointing. (25)
Afterwards, the oceans, rivers, and sages anointed him, and there was a proclamation everywhere: "The Haihaya king has been enthroned!" (26)

By the grace of Sage Dattatreya, Kartavirya Arjuna obtained incomparable prosperity. Dwelling in his kingdom with great power, he declared: (27)
"From now on, except for me, whoever takes up arms—whether he be cruel or a thief—shall be killed by my hand." After the king gave this order, in his kingdom no one but him carried weapons. (28)
On the whole earth, Kartavirya Arjuna alone was the great and valiant ruler; he alone was the guardian of villages, protector of cattle, (29) and keeper of the fields. He alone was the protector of Brahmins and ascetics, and the keeper of wealth. (30)
This king, destroyer of hostile heroes, protected people from thieves, serpents, fire, weapons, enemies, and the perils of the sea and other calamities. (31)
By merely uttering his name, people crossed over all dangers. During his rule, no one's wealth was destroyed. (32)
He performed many kinds of sacrifices with proper offerings and was a great practitioner of austerities, and vigorous in battle. (33)
Seeing his immense prosperity and fame, Sage Angiras declared:
"No other king has ever been like him; (34) and in sacrifices, charity, austerities, and battle prowess, there will be no one equal to Kartavirya. There is no doubt in this."

On the very day when he obtained incomparable prosperity from Dattatreya, (35)
he worshiped Dattatreya and, seeing the king's supreme fortune, all his subjects also worshiped him that same day with full attention. This is the greatness of the wise Dattatreya. (36–37)

That Dattatreya, the guru of the entire universe, endless, bearer of the Sharnga bow, the wielder of the conch, discus, and mace, is the immeasurable, infinite Lord Vishnu himself. His origin is described in various ways in all the Puranas. (38–39)
Those who meditate on this supreme form of Narayana become happy and are immediately freed from the bonds of worldly life. He always declares:

“O devotees! Through devotion alone I am easily attainable. Even when worshiped only with sons, flowers, or fruits, I grant liberation. (40–41)
He, the beginningless and endless Lord, maintains the universe for the practice of dharma and the destruction of adharma.”

O Father! Now I will tell you about the noble Brahmin Alarka, from whom Sage Dattatreya taught the path of Yoga. That great soul, King Alarka, was famous in the world as a royal sage and a devoted son to his father. (43)

Thus ends the seventeenth chapter, called ‘The Story of Dattatreya’ (Dattatreyopakhyana), in the Markandeya Purana.

Coming on to allegations on Padma Purana II.103.110 that is Padma Purana Bhumi Khanda Chapter 103 slokas 110

Ashoke Chatterjee in his book Padma Purana A Study page number 71 /281 mentioned that chapter 26 – to the end in Bhumi khanda of Padma Purana (Including chapter 103) are later interpolations and were inserted later on in Padma Purana about 10th century AD . Thus this chapter 103 which he alleged is an interpolation

One can, therefore, casıly understand these two broad divisions of the Bhumi khanda vız, (t) the first twentyfive chaps and, (11) that from chap 26 to the end

- A penetrating search will show that the second portion has been added later as all evidences of a late period are discernible in this section The thirtysixth chap bears traces of the later phase of development of the Jaina Philo-sophy The distinct mention of the name Turuska (which undoubtedly points to the Mohammedans who invaded India about the 9th century AD) which is found in the seventy-eighth chap 10 also points to that conclusion A later idea of the origin of Sūta, which does not coincide with that as given in the Vayu-p, has been discussed in the twentyseventh chap 11 Moreover, undue importance has been given in that portion to the Tulası plant, which is unmistakably a mark of its later orıgın

Gitavidyādhara by Indra Thus it is obvious that either some coherent portions of this section have been lost or the whole of the Gitavidyādhara episode is a later fabrication Moreover, it is to be noted that the story of Prthu and Vena which commences independently from the beginning of the twentysixth chap and runs to the end has no link with the previous chaps One can, therefore, easily understand these two broad divisions of the Bhūmi khanda viz, (i) the first twentyfive chaps and, (ii) that from chap 26 to the end

Aniruddha the grandson of Krishna

Aniruddha the grandson of Krishna had fornicated with Uma the daughter of Bana, Srimad Bhagavatam 10.62.22 “When Usa beheld Him, the most beautiful of men, her face lit up with joy. She took the son of Pradyumna to her private quarters, which men were forbidden even to see, and there enjoyed with Him.”

Refutation-

This is Srimad Bhagvatam 10.62 English translation and its summary

Uṣā, the daughter of Bāṇa, saw Aniruddha, the grandson of Śrī Krishna, in a dream and was deeply drawn to him. With the help of her companion Citralekhā, who possessed yogic powers, she identified the man she had dreamt of and brought him to Śoṇitapura. Upon his arrival, she respectfully welcomed him into the private women’s quarters (antaḥpura), an area restricted to men and spent time with her love Aniruddha .

The Bhāgavatam (10.62.22 onwards) describes their meeting as a fated and affectionate union, without any indication of misconduct or impropriety. When the attendants discovered Aniruddha’s presence, Bāṇa confronted him, which led to Aniruddha’s capture and eventually to the famous battle between Krishna and Śiva.

After the conflict, their relationship was formally accepted, and Uṣā was acknowledged as Aniruddha’s lawful wife. The episode is portrayed as a divinely ordained union, not as an act of transgression .

CHAPTER SIXTY TWO2
Aniruddha taken captive by Bāṇāsura
The King Parikṣit submitted:
I. The best of Yadus (Aniruddha) married Usa, the daughter of Bāṇa. On this occasion a terrible and very great combat took place between Lord Hari and god Sankara. O great yogin! May you be pleased to describe to me in details this episode.1

Sri Suka narrated:

The glorious god Śiva, the Lord of all beings, worthy of seeking shelter, who is affectionate to his votaries, asked Bāṇa to seek any boon. Bāṇa begged of him to be the guardian deity of his capital.

Bāṇa was the eldest of the hundred sons of the great-souled Bali who donated in charity the whole of the earth to to Lord Hari who presented himself before him in the form of Vāmana (a dwarf, a Brāhmaṇa boy).

Bali's own son Bāṇa was always engaged in devotion to god Śiva. He was respectable, generous, intelligent, true of word and firm in observance of vows.

Formerly, he used to rule over his kingdom from the beautiful city of Sonitapura as its capital. By the grace of god Śiva even those celestials (the sworn enemies of Asuras) behaved with him as his servants. Endowed with a thousand arms as he was, he pleased god Śiva (the world-delighter) by playing upon musical instruments while god Śiva performed his Tandavas dance. On one occasion, Băṇa who was madly elated with his prowess, touched with his crown brilliant like the sun, the lotus-feet of god Śiva who (as the presiding deity of his capital) was near to him and said:

"I bow to you, O great God, the preceptor and the highest Ruler of the world, the Wish-yielding tree fulfilling the desires of persons whose longings are not satisfied.

The (boon of) thousand arms conferred by you have resulted into a burden to me; for I do not find an equal combatant (against me in the three worlds excepting you).

With my arms itching for a fight and being impelled by eagerness to combat, I marched against the elephants (supporting the world) at the end of cardinal points, crushing down the mountains on the way. But being terrified, the elephants hastily took to flight, O Ancient-most Person".

Hearing this (arrogant speech), the glorious god Śiva got enraged and told him, "When your flag-staff (with the peacock ensign) shall be broken down automatically, your combat with some one equal to me will take place and it will humiliate (break down) your pride, O stupid fellow".

Thus snubbed, the Asura with perverse mentality became delighted and repaired to his place. The crooked-minded fellow was waiting for the fulfilment of Siva's augery which indicated a crushing blow to his prowess.

He had a daughter called Uşā. Virgin as she was, in dream, she enjoyed sexual pleasure with Aniruddha, the son of Pradyumna as her beloved consort whom she had never seen or heard of.

Not finding him there near her (after opening her eyes), she got up in a bewildered state, exclaiming "Where are you my beloved lord?", in the midst of her girl-companions and was xceedingly abashed.

Bāṇa had minister called Kumbhānda. His daughter Citralekha was her bosom-friend. Out of great curiosity, she enquired her friend Uşā: a “Whom are you searching for, O friend with beauti-ful eyebrows? what is the nature of your desire? As far as I have observed, as yet there has been no suitor to your hand, O princess.” Uşā narrated:

He was respectfully received with excellent garments, wreaths of flowers, perfumes, sweet incense, lights, high seat, with drinks, foods and other eatables, with sweet conversations and personal service.

“In my dream I saw an unknown man of dark complexion, lotus-eyed, endowed with (knee-) long arms, wearing a yellow (silken) garment, captivating the hearts of women (capable of enjoying them).

I am seeking after him as my beloved Lord who having allowed me to drink the honey of his lips, has gone (to some unknown place) throwing me into the sea of misery even though I am still thirsty (after him).”
Citralekha said:

“I shall remove (the cause of) your grief. If he who captivated your heart exists somewhere in the three worlds, I shall bring that man. Please tell me who it is.”

Saying thus she drew graphic portraits (of elite youths) of gods, Gandharvas, Siddhas, Caraṇas, serpents, Daityas, Vidyādharas, Yaksas and human princes.

Out of human beings, she drew the portrait of Vrsni's: Ugrasena, Vasudeva, Balarāma, Krsṇa. When she saw Pradyumna's portrait, she felt shy.

Seeing the carefully painted portrait of Aniruddha she looked down in shyness and exclaimed smilingly, “It is he. It is he.” O Ruler of the earth.

Citralekhā who was endowed with yogic powers knew that he was the grand-son of Krsna and through the air, she went to Dvārakā under the protection of Krsna, O King.

Resorting to her yogic powers, she bore Aniruddha, the son of Pradyumna, who was sleeping on an excellent bed and brought him to Soṇitapura and presented her beloved to her friend, Uşā.

Beholding the most beautiful of beautiful persons, she was extremely rejoiced and in her private apartment which was inaccessible to the eyes of males, she enjoyed herself with the son of Pradyumna. Aniruddha who remained concealed in the princess's apartment, got his senses captivated by Uşā whose love for him was ever increasing and he did not know how many days rolled away.

As she was thus enjoyed by the Yadava hero and lost her virginity, the attendants observed through marks which could be hardly concealed, that she was enjoying specially joyous life.

The servants reported to Bāṇa, “O King, from the behaviour f your daughter, we mark that she is casting a stain on your family.

Though we were cautiously guarding her, we do not know how such pollution took place in the apartment of your virgin. daughter who was closely guarded and was beyond the reach of male eyes."

Thereupon Bāṇa who was sorely distressed to hear of his daughter's pollution, hastened immediately to the appartment of his daughter and saw there the best of the Yadus.

He saw Aniruddha who was the son of Kama (Pradyumna), the most beautiful person in the world, dark in complexion, wearing a yellow garment, of lotus eyes, long and mighty arms and with his countenance brightened with the lustre of his ear-rings and locks of hair and was beaming with smiling looks.

Bāṇa was shocked to see Aniruddha playing at dice with his beloved daughter who on her part adorned herself with festle ornaments and wearing between his arms a gar-land of Jasmine flowers, special to the season of spring, tinged with the saffron on her bosom during his contacts with her person seated in front of her.

Seeing Båṇa enter surrounded with fierce looking soldiers, Aniruddha, the descendent of Madhu, took up an iron bludgeon and took position like Yama, the wielder of the rod determined to finish with any body that may approach him.

Like a great boar that kicks away the attacking dogs, he struck them down who attacked him on all sides with the intention of arresting him. Beaten thus by him, they ran out of Usa's palace with their heads, thighs and arms broken.

The worshipful god Rudra surrounded by the Pramathas and accompanied by his son Skanda, rode his big bull and fought with Balarama and Krsna for the sake of Baṇa

The powerful son of Bali got angry with Aniruddha who was striking down his soldiers and he bound him down with Nāgapāśa (serpent-like cords).

Uşā was overwhelmed with grief and despondency to see him bound with the cords of Naga and wept loudly with tears flowing down her eyes.
CHAPTER SIXTYTHREE
Bāṇa Vanquished. Aniruddha brought to Duārakā
Sri Suka said:

And thus passed away the four months of the rainy season, while the relatives of Aniruddha, (being unable to trace him) missed him and were grieving for him (for his disappearance), O descendant of Bharata !

Learning from Nārada, the report of Aniruddha's valorous fight and his imprisonment, Vrsnis who looked upon Krsna as their presiding deity, speedily marched against Sonitapura, the capital of Bāṇa.
3-4. Pradyumna, Yuyudhāna, Gada, Samba and Sāraṇa, Nanda, Upananda, Bhadra and others-all loyal followers of Balarāma and Krsna-these prominent Såtvata heroes accom-panied with twelve akşauhinis of army, laid close siege to the city of Baṇa, on all sides.

Noticing that the parks of the city, fortifications, gates, balconies and towers were shattered down, Bāṇa was fired with rage and taking with him an equally strong army, sallied forth out of the city.

Allegations-

Muni Chuli

An Apsara named Somada served Muni Chuli, who satisfied with her service asked her wishes, she told him that she wishes for a son but that she is unmarried and doesn't wish to get married and requests the Muni to bestow a son, the Muni through his so called power of mind impregnated her,

Valmiki Ramayana, Bala Kanda 1, Sarga 33, verses 13-18 "Even she is obedient in his respect, and dedicating herself in ministering to him she stayed there righteously. After some time that sage Chuli has become satisfied with her service… Perceiving that the sage is contented that female celestial Somada who is aware of making good sentences is highly delighted and spoke with her melodious voice to that pedantic sage. I am unmarried and nobody's wife, safe you be, and as I took shelter under your kindness it will be apt of you to endow me a son with your faculty of asceticism.' So said Somada to sage Cuulii. That Brahma-sage Cuuli benignantly bestowed her with a unique and Brahma-like son who is renowned as Brahmadatta, as well as his own brainchild."

Refutation-

In Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 33, verses 13–18, there is no statement that Sage Cūlī (Cūlina) had any physical union with the Gandharva maiden Somadā. The text narrates that Somadā served the sage with devotion and, as a reward, requested a son who would be steadfast in meditation and devoted to the realization of the Absolute.

Verse 18 explicitly states:
तस्याः प्रसन्नो ब्रह्मर्षिर्ददौ ब्राह्ममनुत्तमम्।
ब्रह्मदत्त इति ख्यातं मानसं चूलिनः सुतम्॥ १८ ॥

Full of delight, the Brahmana sage Cūlina (a variant of Cüli) conferred on her a mind-born son, rich in askesis (in the form of meditation) directed towards the realization of Brahma, excelled by none and known by the name of 'Brahmadatta'.

This clearly shows that Brahmadatta was a mind-born gift (mānasa-putra), produced by the sage's spiritual power, not through physical intercourse.

(lit., one who has turned the flow of his generative fluid upwards and never allowed it to escape), Cūli by name, who was exceptionally glorious and given to virtuous conduct, actually embarked upon a course of austerities* (in the form of meditation) directed towards the realization of Brahma. (11)

तपस्यन्तमृषिं तत्र गन्धर्वी पर्युपासते।
सोमदा नाम भद्रं ते ऊर्मिलातनया तदा ॥ १२ ॥

At that very place, during the period of his askesis, may good betide you, a Gandharva girl, Somadā by name, daughter of Ūrmilā, waited upon the Ṛṣi in the hope of securing his goodwill, while he was busy practising his austerities. (12)

Bending low before him and devoted to his service, that most pious girl waited upon him at the right time whenever her presence was needed by him. The venerable sage got pleased with her. (13)

स च तां कालयोगेन प्रोवाच रघुनन्दन।
परितुष्टोऽस्मि भद्रं ते किं करोमि तव प्रियम् ॥ १४ ॥

And when the propitious hour came, the sage, O scion of Raghu, said to the girl, 'I am highly pleased with your innocent services, may all be well with you! What service can I do to you?' (14)

परितुष्टं मुनिं ज्ञात्वा गन्धर्वी मधुरस्वरम्।

Supremely delighted to know the sage much gratified, the eloquent Gandharva girl spoke as follows in a sweet voice to the seer, who was a master of speech: (15)

लक्ष्म्या समुदितो ब्राह्म्या ब्रह्मभूतो महातपाः।
ब्राह्मेण तपसा युक्तं पुत्रमिच्छामि धार्मिकम् ॥ १६ ॥

"A great ascetic illumined with Brahmic (spiritual) splendour, you have become one with the Infinite. Hence I seek from you a pious son, rich in askesis (in the form of meditation) directed towards the realization of Brahma, the Absolute. (16)

अपतिश्चास्मि भद्रं ते भार्या चास्मि न कस्यचित्।
ब्राह्मेणोपगतायाश्च दातुमर्हसि मे सुतम् ॥ १७ ॥

युधिष्ठिर ने कहा- हे कृष्ण महान् फल प्रदान करने वाली विजया एकादशी का माहत्य मैने सुना । फाल्गुन मास के शुक्ल पक्ष की एकादशी का जो नाम है, उसे आप मुझे बतलायें ॥१॥ भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण ने कहा- हे महाभाग धर्मपुत्र आप सुने मैं बतला रहा हूँ। मान्धाता के द्वारा पूछे जाने पर उसको महर्षि वसिष्ठ ने बतलाया था ॥२॥ हे राजन्। फाल्गुन मास की आमलकी एकादशी विशेष रूप से आमलकी कही गयी है। यह पवित्र तथा भगवान् विष्णु के लोक को प्रदान करने वाली है ॥३॥ आंवला के पेड़ के नीचे जाकर वहीं जागरण करना चाहिए। रात्रि जागरण करने से एक हजार गोदान करने का फल होता है ।।४।। मान्याता ने कहा- हे द्विजश्रेष्ठ । आमलकी एकादशी कब उत्पन्न हुयी। यह मुझको अत्यन्त कौतूहल है। अतएव इन सारी बातों को आप मुझे बतलायें ॥५॥ किस कारण से यह पवित्र तथा पाप विनाशक है ? और जागरण करने से यह हजार गोदान का फल प्रदान करती हैं ?॥६॥ महर्षि वसिष्ठ ने कहा- हे महाभाग। यह पृथिवी पर कैसे हुयी इस बात को मैं आपको बतलाता है। आँवला का वृक्ष सभी पापों को विनष्ट करने वाला है ।।७।। जब एकार्णव (महाप्रलय) हो गया था सभी स्थावर जङ्गम विनष्ट हो गये थे। देवता, असुर, उरग तथा राक्षस विनष्ट हो गये थे ॥८॥ उस समय देवेश श्रीभगवान् अपने अव्यय धाम में चले गये ॥९॥ उसके बाद जब भगवान् जगे उस समय परंब्रह्म के मुख से चन्द्र के समान थूक निकला और वह पृथिवी पर गिरा ॥१०॥ उस बिन्दु से धात्री नग (ऑवले का वृक्ष) उत्पन्न हुआ। उसकी अनेक शाखा प्रशाखायें थी और वह फल के भार से झुक गया था ।॥११॥ उसको सभी वृक्षों का प्रथम प्रोह कहा गया है। उसके पश्चात् ब्रह्माजी ने इन प्रजाओं की सृष्टि की ॥१२॥ श्रीभगवान् ने देव, दानव, गन्धर्व, यक्ष, राक्षस तथा पत्रग (सर्पो) की सृष्टि की। उन्होंने निर्मल महर्षियों की सृष्टि की ॥१३॥ वे भी देवता आये जहाँ पर श्रीहरि को प्रिय धात्री (आँवला) थी। हे महाभाग उस आँवला को देखकर वे अत्यन्त आश्चर्यित हुए ॥१४॥ वे सोच रहे थे कि इस वृक्ष का क्या नाम है, हमलोग इसको नहीं जानते हैं। जब वे सोच रहे थे उसी समय आकाशवाणी हुयी ॥१५॥ यह आँवले का वृक्ष है और भगवान् विष्णु को यह अत्यन्त प्रिय हैं। इसका स्मरण करने मात्र से गोदान का फल होता है ॥१६॥ स्पर्श करने से दो गुना और इसको खाने से तीन गुना फल होता है। अतएव धात्री का सेवन अवश्य करना चाहिए ॥१७॥ यह वैष्णवी है, सभी पापों को दूर करने वाली है। धात्री के मूल में भगवान् विष्णु का निवास होता है। और उसके ऊपर ब्रह्माजी का निवास होता है ॥१८॥ इसकी स्कन्धों में भगवान् शिव का निवास है। शाखाओं में सभी मुनिगण रहते है और प्रशाखाओं में देवताओं का निवास होता है ।।१९।। इसके पत्तों में देवता रहते हैं और पुष्प में मरुत देवता का निवास होता है। इसके फलों में प्रजापतिगण रहते है ॥२०॥ जिस धात्री आँवला का मैने वर्णन किया है, वह सर्व देवमयी है। अतएव यह भगवान् विष्णु के भक्तों के लिए पूज्यतमा है ।॥२१॥ ऋषियों ने कहा- आप कौन हैं ? आपको हमलोग नहीं जानते हैं आप किसके कारण हुए हैं। आप देवता है या कोई दूसरे हैं? आप ठीक-ठीक बतलायें ॥२२॥ आकाशवाणी ने कहा- जो सभी भूतों तथा भुवनों की सृष्टि करते हैं, जिनका साक्षात्कार विद्वान् भी नहीं कर पाते हैं मैं वही सनातन विष्णु हूँ ।॥२३॥ देवा साध्य श्रीभगवान का वह वचन सुनकर ब्रह्माजी के पुत्रों ने उनकी स्तुति की ॥२४।। सभी भूतों की आत्मा स्वरूप आप को नमस्कार है। आत्मा स्वरूप, परमात्मा स्वरूप, अच्युत आपको नमस्कार है। नित्य तथा अनन्त आपको नमस्कार है ।॥२५॥ दामोदर, कवि तथा यज्ञेश आपको नमस्कार है ॥२६॥ ऋषियों के द्वारा इस प्रकार से स्तुति किए जाने पर श्रीहरि सन्तुष्ट हो गये। उन्होंने महर्षियों से कहा आपलोगों को मैं कौन सी अभीष्ट वस्तु प्रदान करूं ।॥२७॥ ऋषियों ने कहा- हे भगवन्! यदि आप हमलोगों का कल्याण करने के लिए संतुष्ट हैं तो आप हमलोगों को वह उत्तम व्रत बतलाइये जिसके करने में आयास तो अल्प हो और उसका फल बहुत हो । हे देवेश जिसके करने से जीवों को विष्णु लोक की प्राप्ति हो ॥२८-२९॥ विष्णु भगवान् ने कहा- फाल्गुन मास के शुक्ल क्ष की द्वादशी तिथि को यदि पुष्य नक्षत्र का योग हो तो वह एकादशी

महापुण्यप्रद तथा महापापों का विनाश करने वाली होती है ॥३०॥ उस तिथि को आँवला के नीचे जागरण करें, यह उसकी विधि है ॥३१॥ ऐसा करने वाला सभी पापों से मुक्त होकर हजार गोदान का फल प्राप्त करता है। हे वित्रों मैंने आपलोगों को सवर्वोत्तम व्रत बतलाया है। उस एकादशी को भगवान् विष्णु की अर्चना करने वाला मनुष्य सदा विष्णु लोक में रहता है ॥३२॥ ऋषियों ने कहा-आप इस व्रत की विधि बतलाएँ जिससे कि यह व्रत परिपूर्ण हो। इसके मन्त्र और नमस्कार कौन हैं?

Yudhiṣṭhira said:
"O Kṛṣṇa, I have heard the glory of the Vijaya Ekādaśī, which grants great merit. Please tell me the name of the Ekādaśī that falls in the bright fortnight (Śukla Pakṣa) of the month of Phālguna." (1)

Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa said:
"O greatly fortunate son of Dharma, listen as I tell you. When King Māndhātā had asked about it, Sage Vasiṣṭha narrated it to him." (2)
"O King, the Ekādaśī of the bright fortnight of Phālguna is especially called Āmalakī Ekādaśī. It is pure and grants one the realm of Bhagavān Viṣṇu." (3)
"One should go beneath an āmalakī (Indian gooseberry) tree and perform vigil there. By keeping vigil at night, one obtains the merit of gifting a thousand cows." (4)

Māndhātā said:
"O best of twice-born, when did the Āmalakī Ekādaśī come into being? I am extremely curious, so please tell me everything." (5)
"For what reason is it holy and sin-destroying, and why does vigil on this day yield the merit of a thousand cow donations?" (6)

Sage Vasiṣṭha said:
"O greatly fortunate one, I will tell you how it came into existence on earth. The āmalakī tree destroys all sins." (7)
"When the great dissolution (ekārṇava mahā-pralaya) took place, all moving and unmoving beings were destroyed. The gods, demons, serpents, and rākṣasas were all destroyed." (8)
"At that time, the Lord of the gods, Śrī Bhagavān, withdrew into His imperishable abode." (9)
"Later, when Bhagavān awoke, from the mouth of the Supreme Brahman came saliva like the moon, which fell upon the earth." (10)
"From that drop arose the dhātrī tree (āmalakī). It had many branches and sub-branches, and was bent down by the weight of its fruits." (11)
"It is said to be the first sprout among all trees. After that, Brahmā created the creatures of the world." (12)
"Śrī Bhagavān created the gods, demons, gandharvas, yakṣas, rākṣasas, and serpents. He also created the pure sages." (13)
"Those gods then came to where the dhātrī dear to Śrī Hari was. O greatly fortunate one, seeing that āmalakī tree, they were full of wonder." (14)
"They were thinking, 'What is the name of this tree? We do not know it.' While they were pondering, a voice from the sky was heard." (15)
"'This is the āmalakī tree, extremely dear to Bhagavān Viṣṇu. Merely remembering it grants the merit of gifting a cow.'" (16)
Touching it grants double that merit, and eating it yields triple. Therefore, one should certainly partake of the dhātrī.'" (17)

"'It is Vaiṣṇavī in nature, destroying all sins. At its root resides Bhagavān Viṣṇu, and above it resides Brahmā.'" (18)
"'In its trunk resides Bhagavān Śiva; in its branches dwell the sages; in its sub-branches dwell the gods.'" (19)
"'In its leaves dwell the gods; in its flowers dwell the Maruts; in its fruits dwell the Prajāpatis.'" (20)
"The dhātrī I have described is pervaded by all the gods, and hence it is most worthy of worship for devotees of Bhagavān Viṣṇu." (21)

The sages said:
"Who are you? We do not know you. Whose manifestation are you? Are you a god or someone else? Please tell us clearly." (22)

The heavenly voice said:
"I am that eternal Viṣṇu who creates all beings and worlds, whom even the learned cannot directly perceive." (23)

Hearing these words of Śrī Bhagavān, the mind-born sons of Brahmā praised Him. (24)
"Obeisance to You, who are the Self of all beings, the Supreme Self, the Imperishable. Salutations to You, eternal and infinite." (25)
"Salutations to Dāmodara, the wise one, the Lord of sacrifice." (26)

Pleased by the praises of the sages, Śrī Hari said to them:
"Tell Me what cherished boon you desire, and I shall grant it." (27)

The sages said:
"O Lord, if You are pleased for the welfare of us all, please tell us that supreme vow which requires little effort but yields great fruit, by which beings may attain the realm of Viṣṇu." (28–29)

Bhagavān Viṣṇu said:
"In the bright fortnight of the month of Phālguna, if the Dvādaśī tithi coincides with Puṣya nakṣatra, that Ekādaśī grants great merit and destroys even great sins." (30)
"On that day, one should keep vigil beneath an āmalakī tree — this is its proper observance." (31)
"One who does so is freed from all sins and obtains the merit of donating a thousand cows. O sages, I have told you the supreme vow. One who worships Bhagavān Viṣṇu on that Ekādaśī always resides in Viṣṇu's realm." (32)

The sages said:
"Please tell us the procedure of this vow so that it may be perfectly performed. What are its mantras and salutations?"

Allegations-

Gautama

The sage Gautama who cursed Indra for ravishing his wife had too ejaculated on seeing Saradvati after having sex with her,

Shiva Purana, UmaSamhita 5, chapter 4, verses 32-33 "The sage Gautama had his mind deluded by Siva's Maya. On seeing Saradvati in the nude he was excited and he indulged in sexual intercourse with her. He collected the semen emitted in a wooden bowl."

Refutation-

According to R.C. Hazra, the Uma Saṁhitā of the Shiva Purāṇa is a very late addition. He notes that it draws heavily from the Jñāna Saṁhitā, which itself is dated to around 950 CE. Based on this, it can be reasonably inferred that the Uma Saṁhitā was incorporated into the Shiva Purāṇa sometime after the 10th century CE.

IV. The Bhasmasamhitā,[89] also called Aura/Umāsaṁhitā, is represented in the class II editions only. The text introduces Kṛṣṇa on a visit to Kailāsa and performing penance there to Śiva, in order to obtain a son. He meets Upamanyu, and requests him to tell him about the greatness of Śiva. Upamanyu complies, and praises Śiva and his trident; he extols Śiva's power to save his devotees from hell. This discussion leads into several chapters on different types of sins, and on the description of hell and the suffering in it. Ways to avoid this suffering include gifts of food, performing penance, listening to the purāṇas, etc. The saṃhitā subsequently describes the seven dvīpas of the earth, and other component parts of the universe. It ends with discourses on a variety of topics, such as the development of man, from the foetus, through childhood, youth, marriage, old age, etc.; creation and manvantaras, etc. In Hazra's opinion the text borrows most of its chapters from the Jñānasaṁhitā.

XIII. The Jñānasaṃhitā[89] has already been referred to on several occasions in this description of the Śiva°, because, in Hazra's opinion, other saṃhitās borrowed verses and even chapters from it. The text recognizes the Vedas as the highest authority, but it was Śiva, as ... who communicated them to Viṣṇu. Śiva shall be worshiped with Vedic mantras, even though the saṃhitā does not, therefore, reject the authority of the Tantras and eventual Śiva worship with Āgamic rather than Vedic mantras. The nirguṇa Śiva is identical with the parabrahma; in his saguṇa form he manifests himself as Rudra. Prakṛti was born from Śiva's wish, and, from her, were born the other gods including Brahmā and Viṣṇu. This saṃhitā, like some of those discussed earlier, strongly encourages liṅga worship as the ideal way to worship Śiva himself. It urges worship under the guidance of a competent teacher; worship will lead to bhakti, then to jñāna, and, ultimately, to vijñāna, i.e. the realization that the only real thing is Śiva. Hazra points out that the text was influenced by the Kumārasaṃbhava, Raghuvaṃśa, and Kirātārjunīya. He surmises that it may have been composed in Banaras, by someone who was also familiar with the banks of the Narmadā, not before A.D. 950.

The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript (Including Uma Samhita) are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Uma Saṁhitā.

saṃhitās, with different titles and different arrangements; two of their saṃhitās are not even listed in the Śiva° passages.[90] The following is a comparative survey of the saṃhitās, in the two passages of the Śiva° itself, and in the two sets of editions – which from now on I will refer to as class A and class B editions.

Śiva°	Class A Bombay 1884 Venkat. 1895–96 Vaṅga		Class B Venkat. 1906, 1965 Paṇḍitapustakālaya Tr. AITM
I. Vidyeśvara	XIII. Jñāna	ch. 78	Vidyeśvara	ch. 25
II. Raudra	Vidyeśvara	25	Vighneśa
III. Vaināyaka	(Vaṅga 16)		Rudra	197
IV. Bhauma/Auma	Kailāsa	12	Śatarudra	42
V. Mātṛ(purāṇa)	XIV. Sanatkumāra	59	Koṭirudra	43
VI. Rudraikādaśa	Vāyu/Vāyavīya		Umā/Auma	51
VII. Kailāsa	pūrvabhāga	30	Kailāsa	23
VIII. Śatarudra	uttarabhāga	30	Vāyavīya
IX. Koṭirudra	Dharma	65	pūrvabhāga	35
X. Sahasrakoṭirudra			uttarabhāga	41
XI. Vāyavīya
XII. Dharma(purāṇa)

It is clear from all this that the Śiva° is one of the more composite and unwieldy purāṇas, sections of which "were written by different hands in different climes

[90] Hazra Śiva° 1963: 51–52. Cf. Haraprasad Shastri 1928a: 277, no. 3346.

and ages;" it is also evident that "there were different traditions regarding the text of the Śiva-purāṇa."[91] Hazra, who did not include the Śiva° in his volume on the mahāpurāṇas, later published an extensive and comparative study of the various saṃhitās, which is repeatedly referred to in these pages. He came to the conclusion that the saṃhitās contained in the class A editions were generally the older ones, and that all other sections, manuscripts of which are rare, and the contents of which largely depend on the earlier saṃhitās as well as on other purāṇas, are more recent. In view of the great disparity between the two sets of editions, I will follow the order of the saṃhitās as set forth in the purāṇa itself.

पूर्वकालमें गौतम नामवाले एक ब्राह्मण थे, जिनका स्वभाव बड़ा कोमल था। वे मनको वशमें रखनेवाले और जितेन्द्रिय थे। उन व्रतधारी मुनिने विशाल वनमें एक हाथीके बच्चेको अपने माताके बिना बड़ा कष्ट पाते देखकर उसे कृपापूर्वक जिलाया। दीर्घकालके पश्चात् वह हाथी बढ़कर अत्यंत बलवान् हो गया ।।

"In ancient times, there was a Brāhmaṇa named Gautama, whose nature was very gentle. He was self-controlled in mind and had mastered his senses. Refutation of ” Hinduism and Lust ” Article by Vedkabhed

Written by Rohan Saini in Uncategorized

This is the Fourth Section of the Article

Allegations-

krishna stole the garments of Gopis just to enjoy watching their naked bodies and later gave a lame excuse,

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.22.16-17 “The Supreme Personality of Godhead said: If you girls are actually My maidservants, and if you will really do what I say, then come here with your innocent smiles and let each girl pick out her clothes. If you don’t do what I say, I won’t give them back to you. And even if the king becomes angry, what can he do? Then, shivering from the painful cold, all the young girls rose up out of the water, covering their pubic area with their hands.”

All these things happen because nobody bothers to read Context The unmarried gipikas of age group of 5 to 8 of Vrindaban were attracted by the irresistible beauty of Shri Krishna and the beautiful melodies of his flute. They would wake up early in the morning to take a bath in the river Yamuna, lovingly singing the names of Shri Krishna. They did not care about what others thought of them. They made a sand-idol of Goddess Katyayani Devi and started worshiping Her with an earnest desire to obtain Lord Shri Krishna as their eternal beloved. The gopis were bathing in the river without any clothes covering their bodies. Bathing in the open without covering oneself is a sin as per our scriptures. Lord Krishna made them realize their error and chastised them for the same.

अर्थात् हेगन्त ऋतु के प्रथम महीने मार्गशीर्ष में नन्द ब्रज की रहने वाली कुमारिकाएं – लगभग पाँच छः वर्ष की आयु वाली कन्याएं हविष्य अन्न को खाकर कात्यायनी देवी का व्रत किया करती थीं । एक दिन वे नित्य की तरह यमुना के किनारे सब वस्त्र उतारकर नंगी नहाने लगीं और भगवान् कृष्ण के गीत गाने लगीं। योगेश्वर कृष्ण उनका सत्र अभिप्राय जानकर उस व्रत की पूर्ति के लिए गोपों-ग्वालों सहित वहाँ आये और उनके वस्त्र उठाकर झटपट कदम्ब पर चढ़ गए । (कन्याओं के वस्त्र मांगने पर भगवान् ने कहा कि–) हे अवलाओ ! यहाँ आकर अपने २ वस्त्र ले लीजिए। (परन्तु वे कन्याएं तथैव) कण्ठपयंम्त ठण्डे जल में डूबी हुई तथा कांपती हुई कहने लगीं कि हे भगवान्, हम आपको ब्रज में श्लाघनीय जानती हैं अतः इस तरह कांपती हुई हम अचलाओं के वस्त्र दे दीजिए। (भगवान् ने उनकी बाल्यभाव सुलभ 'नग्निका' अवस्था की परीक्षा के लिए कहा कि-) हे पवित्र मुस्कान वाली कन्याओ ! यहाँ आकर अपने २ वस्त्र ले लीजिए । तब शीत से कांपती हुई वे कन्यायें दोनों हाथों से अपने अङ्गों को ढांपकर तत्काल जल से निकल आई। भगवान् उनके इस विशुद्ध भाव को देख कर अतीत्र प्रसन्न हुवे और कहने लगे कि- हे देवियो ! तुमने कात्यायनी व्रत धारण करते हुवे भी जो नग्न होकर स्नान किया है इससे वरुण देव का अपमान हुआ है, अतः पहिले इस पाप के प्रायश्चित्तार्थ तुम्हें मस्तक पर अंजलि बांधकर नमस्कार करना चाहिए ।
पाठक दोनों स्वरूपों का मनन करके परिणाम निकालें कि वेद भगवान् किस प्रकार खुले बन्दों नग्न स्नान का निषेध कर रहे हैं।

खासकर व्रतनिष्ठ स्त्रियों के लिये तो उपर्युक्त आज्ञा का पालन करना कितना आवश्यक है- यह बात भी पूर्वोक्त वेदमन्त्रों में सुस्पष्ट प्रकट कर दी गई है। किसी प्रकार का आक्षेप करने से पूर्व इस लीला के नीचे लिखे भावों को समझ लेना आवश्यक है।
(१) स्नान करने वाली सब ५ से ८ वर्ष तक की आयु वाली क्वांरी कन्यायें थीं, क्योंकि कात्यायनी व्रत का विधान ऐसी कन्याओं के लिये ही शास्त्रसम्मत है। अतएव पौराणिक-स्वरूप में उन्हें 'कुमारिका' और 'दारिका' शब्द से याद किया है।
(२) ये सब भगवान् की शरणागत होकर यह व्रत कर रही थीं अतएव उनके लिये 'हविष्यं भुञ्जानाः' 'कृष्णं-गायन्त्यः, ऐसा लिखा है। इससे भगवान् को उनकी देख रेख करना आवश्यक था ।
(३) भगवान् की आयु भी इस समय छः साल और तीन महीने की थी क्योंकि गोवर्द्धन उठाने के समय – 'क्व सप्तहायनो बालः' (श्री० भा० १० । २६ १४) आदि शब्दों में भगवान् को सात वर्ष का लिखा है, चीरहरण लोला इससे ठीक ११ मास पूर्व घटी थी श्रतः उतनी छोटी अवस्था के बालक बालिकाओं में किसी प्रकार के कुप्रभाव की सम्भावना नहीं हो सकती ।
(४) यह स्नान प्रायः पौ फटते होता है जबकि एक दूसरे का मुंह भी नहीं ताक सकता । अब भी प्रायः कार्तिक स्नान जो गुर्जर महाराष्ट्र में मार्गशीर्षस्नान कहा जाता है उसी समय किया जाता है।
(५) भगवान् एकले नहीं थे बल्कि – 'वयस्यैरावृतः' के अनुसार अपनी बराबर आयु वाले ग्वालों के झुण्ड सहित थे । कुवसाना वाले व्यक्ति तो दूसरे को कानों कान भी ऐसी बात नहीं पहुंचाना चाहा करते इससे भी भगवान् का विशुद्ध भाव स्पष्ट है।

(६) ये कन्याएं नित्य ही नग्न स्नान किया करती थीं जैसा कि-'तीरे निश्क्षिप्य पूर्ववत्' शब्दों से विदित होता है। इससे यह भी अनुमान किया जा सकता है कि शायद पहिले भी उन्हें एक दो बार नग्न स्नान करने से जबानी हटाया जा चुका हो, परन्तु नहटने पर अन्त में वस्त्र उठाकर शर्मिन्दा करने की नौवत आई हो क्योंकि पिछले दिनों गङ्गा-स्नान के समय नंगी नहाने वाली औरतों को हजार बार समझाने र भी जब यह कुप्रथा न ही तो महावीर दल के नेताओं ने इसी तरह शभिन्दा करने

की ठान ली थी, अतः भगवान् का यह वस्त्रों पर छापा मारना एक कुप्रथा को जड़ से मिटा देना ही हो सकता है।
(७) भगवान् वस्त्र उठाते ही झटपट कदम्ब वृक्ष की सघन पत्तियों में मुंह छिपाकर बैठ गये जैसा कि 'नीपमारुह्य सत्वरः' आदि शब्दों द्वारा प्रकट किया गया है। क्या इससे नग्न-स्नाताओं को न देखने की अभिरुचि ध्वनित नहीं होती ?
(८) भगवान् ने जब लज्जित करने के लिये बाहर आने की बात कही तो वे कन्याएं 'आकण्ठमग्नाः' ही बनी रहीं।
(६) अन्त में- नग्न स्नान से किन कन्याओं का व्रत भङ्ग हुआ है यह जांचने के लिये जब दूसरी बार फिर बाहर आने का आग्रह किया गया तो वे सब आ गई। इसका तात्पर्य है- शास्त्रों में और लोक में भी उसी व्यक्ति को अपराधी ठहराया जाता है जो कि अमुक कार्य को बुरा भला समझने लायक मस्तिष्क रखता हो यह एक नियम है। अबोध बालक या सदसदू-विवेक-हीन पागल द्वारा इत्तिफाकिया पिस्तौल का घोड़ा दब जाने पर किसी व्यक्ति की मृत्यु हो सकती है, परन्तु ऐसी हालत में अज्ञानी होने के कारण उन्हें प्राणदण्ड नहीं दिया जा सकता यह कानून है। ठीक इसी तरह भगवान् भी जानना चाहते थे कि ये कन्याएं सभी धबोध हैं किंवा इनमें से किसी को वस्त्र ढाँपने की

आवश्यकता का भी यौवन-सुलभ परिज्ञान है। इस परीक्षा का साधन उन्हें एकमात्र नंगी दशा में जल से बाहर आ जाने को विवश करना ही हो सकता था। कदाचित् उनमें यदि एक भी सुवारु'न या मुटियार होती तो वह सारे संसार के भी हजार बार चिल्लाने पर भग्न दशा में बाहर आने को तैयार न होती और इस पड़दे के बोध के कारण वह वरुणदेव के अपमान की भी पापभागिनी सिद्ध होती। परन्तु हगारे घरों में अबोध बालिकायें एक समय तक अंग ढांपने की परवाह नहीं करतीं क्योंकि अभी तक उन्हें स्त्री पुरुष की विशेषता का भान ही नहीं होता, अतः शास्त्र में उन्हें 'नग्निका' नाम से याद किया है और पड़दे का बोध हो जाने वाली कन्याओं को 'अग्निका' कहा गया है। सो भगवान् भी यह बात जानना चाहते थे कि ये सब की सब नग्निकायें हैं किंवा इना में कोई अनग्निका भी है। सो परीक्षा करने पर विदित हुआ कि सभी नग्निका हैं, अतः भगवान् ने वरुणदेव को नमस्कार मात्र कर देने से नग्न स्नान का प्रायश्चित्त करवा दिया क्योंकि जो अभी अबोध हैं वरुणदेव भी उन्हें सापराध नहीं मान सकते। कदाचित् कोई अनग्निका होकर भी नग्न स्नान करती तो वह जानबूझ कर पाप करने वाली होने के कारण अधिक प्रायश्चित्त की भागिनी होती ।

During the first month of Hemanta season, known as Margashirsha, the young girls of Nanda's village in Braj, around five to six years old, observed the Katyayani vrata while consuming simple sacrificial food (Havishya).

One day, as part of their daily ritual, they bathed nude in the Yamuna River, singing devotional songs dedicated to Lord Krishna. Understanding their deep faith and commitment, Yogeshwara Krishna, accompanied by cowherd boys, arrived at the scene. Playfully, he took their clothes and swiftly climbed onto a Kadamba tree.

When the girls, shivering in cold water, humbly requested their clothes back, Lord Krishna teasingly asked them to approach him and reclaim them. They pleaded with him, acknowledging his greatness in Braj, and requested that he kindly return their garments while they stood trembling in the water.

Testing their innocence and sincerity, Krishna repeated his request, urging them to step forward and take their clothes. Overcome by the cold, the young girls covered themselves with their hands and stepped out of the water, displaying pure-hearted devotion. Seeing their genuine humility and unwavering faith, Lord Krishna was greatly pleased.

He then advised them that, although they had observed Katyayani vrata, their act of bathing without clothing disrespected Varuna Deva, the deity of water. Therefore, as a symbolic penance, he asked them to bow down with folded hands and seek forgiveness.

The importance of following the above-mentioned command, especially for devout women observing vows, has been clearly expressed in the earlier Vedic mantras. Before making any interpretations, it is crucial to understand the following aspects of this divine Leela:

1. Young Girls Observing Katyayani Vrata: The girls who bathed were all unmarried virgins aged between five to eight years, as per the scriptural guidelines of Katyayani Vrata. Thus, in the Puranic context, they are referred to as "Kumarika" and "Darika."
2. Their Absolute Devotion to Lord Krishna: These girls were sincerely devoted to the Lord, undertaking the vrata while consuming simple food (Havishya). The scriptures describe them as "Havishyam Bhunjanaah" (consuming sacred food) and "Krishnam Gayantyah" (singing Krishna's praises). Hence, it became Lord Krishna's duty to watch over them.
3. Lord Krishna's Age During the Incident: At that time, Lord Krishna was six years and three months old. According to texts describing the Govardhan lifting, he is stated to be seven years old, meaning this incident took place eleven months earlier. Given such a young age, there is no possibility of any inappropriate or negative implications.
4. The Early Morning Bathing Tradition: This ritual bath typically occurred before dawn, when visibility was extremely low. Even today, Kartika Snana (observed in Gujarat and Maharashtra, also known as Margashirsha Snana) is performed at the same time.
5. Lord Krishna Was Not Alone: As per the scriptures ("Vayasyairavritah"), Lord Krishna was surrounded by his peers, the cowherd boys of similar age. People with impure thoughts would not even attempt to convey such incidents to others, reinforcing Krishna's pure-hearted intentions.
6. The young girls would bathe nude daily, as indicated by the phrase "Teere Nishkshipya Purvavat" (placing their clothes on the shore as usual). This suggests that they might have been verbally instructed earlier to stop this practice. However, since they did not discontinue it, eventually, Lord Krishna had to take their clothes away to make them feel ashamed. A similar approach was once taken by leaders of Mahavir Dal when women continued to bathe nude in the Ganges despite repeated warnings. Thus, Lord Krishna's act of seizing their garments could be understood as an attempt to eradicate an improper custom.
7. As soon as Lord Krishna took their clothes, he quickly climbed up a Kadamba tree and hid himself behind its dense leaves, as indicated by "Neepam Aaruhya Satvarah" (swiftly ascending the tree). This suggests that he had no intention to view them in their exposed state.

8. When Krishna asked them to come out to reclaim their garments and thus feel embarrassed, the girls remained "Aakanthamagnaah" (submerged up to their necks), refusing to expose themselves further.
9. Finally, to ascertain which girls had broken their vow by bathing nude, Krishna insisted once again that they step out. The fact that they eventually did so proves a significant principle: only those capable of discerning right from wrong can be held accountable for their actions.
10. Just as in legal cases, where a child or a mentally unstable person is not punished for accidental wrongdoing, Krishna wished to determine if any of the girls possessed the maturity to recognize modesty and the need for covering themselves. The only way to conduct this test was by compelling them to exit the water in their current state.
11. Had there been even a single suvaruni or mutiyari (mature girl), she would have resisted coming out, even if thousands insisted. This innate sense of modesty would indicate an offense against Varuna Deva, the god of water. However, young children often do not instinctively cover their bodies, as they have no awareness of gender distinctions. In the Shastras, such innocent children are referred to as "Nagnika" (ignorant of modesty), whereas those aware of bodily decorum are termed "Agnika" (conscious of propriety).
12. Krishna's intention was to distinguish whether all the girls were Nagnikas or if any were Agnikas. Upon conducting the test, he confirmed that they were all still innocent children. Therefore, he allowed them to atone for the act merely by bowing to Varuna Deva, as the god of water would not hold them guilty. However, had any of them been Agnika (aware of modesty) yet still bathed nude, they would have been deliberately sinful and required greater penance.

अर्थात्—हेमन्त ऋतु के प्रथम महीने = मार्गशीर्ष में नन्द ब्रज की रहने वाली कुमारिकाएं—लगभग पांच छः वर्ष की आयु वाली कन्याएं हविष्य अन्न को खाकर कात्यायनी देवी का व्रत किया करती थीं। एक दिन वे नित्य की तरह यमुना के किनारे सब वस्त्र उतारकर नदी नहाने लगीं और भगवान् कृष्ण के गीत गाने लगीं। योगेश्वर कृष्ण उनका यह अभिप्राय जानकर उस व्रत की पूर्ति के लिए गोपों-ग्वालों सहित वहां आये और उनके वस्त्र उठाकर झटपट कदम्ब पर चढ़ गए। (कन्याओं के वस्त्र मांगने पर भगवान् ने कहा कि—) हे अबलाओ! यहां आकर अपने २ वस्त्र ले लीजिए। (परन्तु वे कन्याएं तबैव) कण्ठपर्यन्त ठण्डे जल में डूबी हुई तथा कांपती हुई कहने लगीं कि हे भगवान्, हम आपको ब्रज में श्लाघनीय जानती हैं अतः इस तरह कांपती हुई हम बालाओं के वस्त्र दे दीजिए। (भगवान् ने उनकी बाल्यभाव सुलभ 'नग्निका' अवस्था की परीक्षा के लिए कहा कि—) हे पवित्र मुस्कान वाली बालाओ! यहां आकर अपने २ वस्त्र ले लीजिए। तब शीत से कांपती हुई वे कन्यायें दोनों हाथों से अपने अङ्गों को ढांपकर तत्काल जल से निकल आईं। भगवान् उनके इस विशुद्ध भाव को देख कर अतीव प्रसन्न हुवे और कहने लगे कि—हे देवियो! तुमने कात्यायनी व्रत धारण करते हुवे भी जो नग्न होकर स्नान किया है इससे वरुण देव का अपमान हुआ है, अतः पहिले इस पाप के प्रायश्चित्तार्थ तुम्हें मस्तक पर अंजलि बांधकर नमस्कार करना चाहिए।

पाठक दोनों स्वरूपों का मनन करके परिणाम निकालें कि वेद भगवान् किस प्रकार खुले शब्दों नग्न स्नान का निषेध कर रहे हैं।

खासकर अशिक्षित स्त्रियों के लिये तो उपर्युक्त आज्ञा का पालन करना कितना आवश्यक है—यह बात भी पूर्वोक्त वेदमन्त्रों में सुस्पष्ट प्रकट कर दी गई है। किसी प्रकार का आक्षेप करने से पूर्व इस लीला के नीचे लिखे भावों को समझ लेना आवश्यक है।

(१) स्नान करने वाली सब ५ से ८ वर्ष तक की आयु वाली क्वांरी कन्यायें थीं, क्योंकि कात्यायनी व्रत का विधान ऐसी कन्याओं के लिये ही शास्त्रसम्मत है। अतएव पौराणिक-लेखक ने उन्हें 'कुमारिका'—और 'बालिका' शब्द से याद किया है।

(२) वे सब भगवान् की शरणागत होकर यह व्रत कर रही थीं अतएव उनके लिये 'हरिमय युक्तकला:' 'कृष्ण-मानसा:', ऐसा लिखा है। इससे भगवान् को उनकी देख रेख करना आवश्यक था।

(३) भगवान् की आयु भी इस समय छः साल और तीन महीने की थी क्योंकि गोवर्द्धन उठाने के समय—'सप्तहायनो बाल:' (श्री० भा० १० । २६ १४) आदि शब्दों से भगवान् को सात वर्ष का लिखा है, चीरहरण लीला इससे ठीक ११ मास पूर्व घटी थी अतः उतनी छोटी अवस्था के बालक बालिकाओं में किसी प्रकार के कुभाव की सम्भावना नहीं हो सकती।

(४) यह स्नान प्रातः पौ फटते होता है ज्योंकि एक दूसरे का मुंह भी नहीं ताक सकता। अब भी प्रायः कार्तिक स्नान जो गुर्जर महाराष्ट्र में मार्गशीर्षस्नान कहा जाता है उसी समय किया जाता है।

(५) भगवान् एकले नहीं थे बल्कि—'वयस्यैरावृत:' के अनुसार अपनी बराबर आयु वाले ग्वालों के झुण्ड सहित थे। कुभावना वाले व्यक्ति तो दूसरे को कानों कान भी ऐसी बात नहीं पहुंचाना चाहा करते इससे भी भगवान् का विशुद्ध भाव स्पष्ट है।

(६) वे कन्याएं नित्य ही नग्न स्नान किया करती थीं जैसा कि—'तीरे निक्षिप्य पूर्ववद्' शब्दों से विदित होता है। इससे यह भी अनुमान किया जा सकता है कि शायद पहिले भी उन्हें एक दो बार नग्न स्नान करने से जबानी हटाया जा चुका हो, परन्तु न हटने पर अन्त में वस्त्र उठाकर शर्मिन्दा करने की नौबत आई हो; क्योंकि पिछले दिनों गङ्गा-स्नान के समय नंगी नहाने वाली औरतों को हजार बार समझाने पर भी जब यह कुप्रथा न छूटी तो महावीर दल के सेवकों ने इसी तरह शर्मिन्दा करने की ठान ली थी, अत: भगवान् का यह वस्त्रों पर छापा मारना एक कुप्रथा को जड़ से मिटा देना ही हो सकता है।

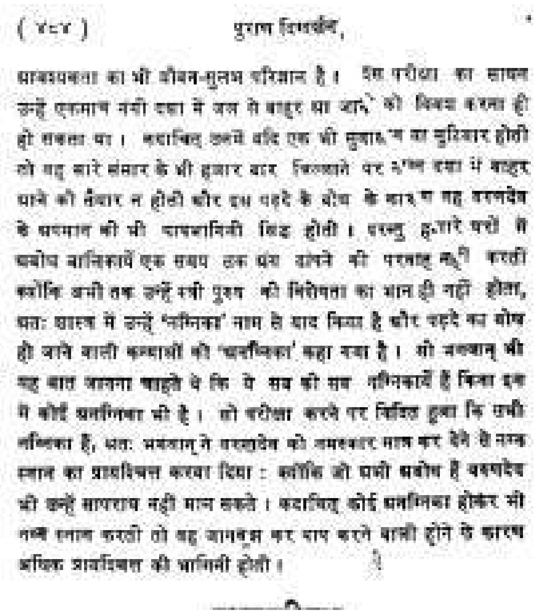
(८) भगवान् ने जब लज्जित करने के लिये बाहर आने की बात कही तो वे कन्याएं 'आकण्ठमग्नाः' ही बनी रहीं।

(९) अन्त में—नग्न स्नान से जिन कन्याओं का व्रत भङ्ग हुआ है यह जांचने के लिये जब दूसरी बार फिर बाहर आने का आग्रह किया गया तो वे सब आ गईं। इसका तात्पर्य है—शास्त्रों में और लोक में भी उसी व्यक्ति को अपराधी ठहराया जाता है जो कि अमुक कार्य को बुरा भला समझने लायक मस्तिष्क रखता हो—यह एक नियम है। अबोध बालक या सदसद्-विवेक-हीन पागल द्वारा अकस्मात् पिस्तौल का घोड़ा दब जाने पर किसी व्यक्ति की मृत्यु हो सकती है, परन्तु ऐसी हालत में अज्ञानी होने के कारण उन्हें प्राणदण्ड नहीं दिया जा सकता यह कानून है। ठीक इसी तरह भगवान् भी जानना चाहते थे कि ये कन्याएं अभी अबोध हैं किंवा इनमें से किसी को वस्त्र छीनने की



(४८४) पुराण दिग्दर्शन,

आवश्यकता का भी जीवन-सुलभ परिज्ञान है। इस परीक्षा का साधन उन्हें एकमात्र नग्न दशा में जल से बाहर आ जाने को विवश करना ही हो सकता था। कदाचित् उनमें यदि एक भी सुहागन का अधिकार होती तो वह सारे संसार के भी हजार बार चिल्लाने पर नग्न दशा में बाहर आने को तैयार न होती और इस पहले के बोध के कारण वह वरुणदेव के अपमान की भी भागिनी सिद्ध होती। परन्तु हमारे घरों में अबोध बालिकायें एक समय तक पर्दा रखने की परवाह नहीं करती क्योंकि अभी तक उन्हें स्त्री पुरुष की विशेषता का भान ही नहीं होता, अतः शास्त्र में उन्हें 'नग्निका' नाम से याद किया है और पहले का बोध हो जाने वाली कन्याओं को 'अनग्निका' कहा गया है। श्री भगवान् भी यह बात जानना चाहते थे कि ये सब की सब नग्निकायें हैं किंवा इन में कोई अनग्निका भी है। तो परीक्षा करने पर निश्चित हुआ कि सभी नग्निका हैं, अतः भगवान् ने वरुणदेव को नमस्कार मात्र कर देने से नग्न स्नान का प्रायश्चित्त करवा दिया : क्योंकि जो सभी अबोध हैं वरुणदेव भी उन्हें सापराध नहीं मान सकते। कदाचित् कोई अनग्निका होकर भी नग्न स्नान करती तो वह जानबूझ कर पाप करने वाली होने के कारण अधिक प्रायश्चित्त की भागिनी होती।

Allegations-

Krishna had done a similar act to his aunt Radha in front of all the Gopis, Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 28.117-132 … Hari snatched away the cloth of Radha and thus denuded her. Then he tore her wreath and loosened her chignon…Hari embraced the naked Radha, sank into the water and after having played therein got up again along with her. Then Krishna after having displayed the abashed, naked Radha to the cowherdesses threw her again at a distance into the water….Then Radha dragged Hari and gave him a push whereupon the Lord of the universe was immersed in deep water at a distance. But shortly afterwards he emerged from the liquid with a smile, kissed and embraced the naked Radha, again and again… After the play was over, the naked Lord and Radha both came to the coast and demanded their clothes from one another….”

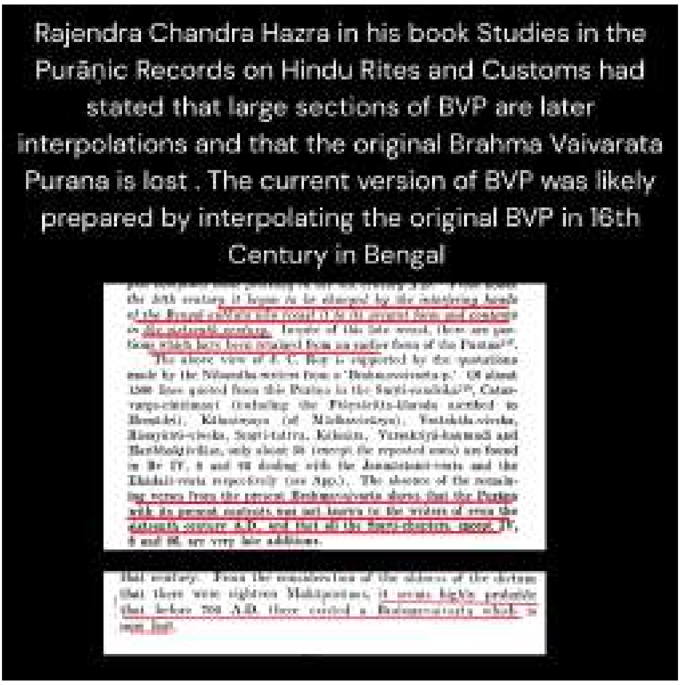
Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata Purana Volume 1 and 2 translated by Ram Sharma Acharya QR code provided here

Allegations-

For fun, Indra blew the garments of girls taking bath,

Matysa Purana 27.3-5 "…Accepting the request of the Devas, the Maghavan, along with them, set out on his mission and, in the way, he came across a group of women in the forest. He saw those damsels bathing and enjoying themselves, as they do in they do in the pleasure-garden of Kuvera. Then Indra, in the form of a gust of wind, blew away and mixed up their garments. At that, all the maidens, hastily coming out of water, dressed themselves with the clothes as they found them."

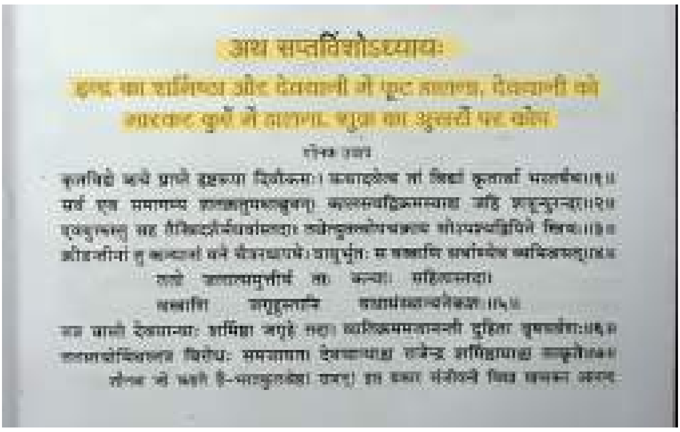
Refutation-

Matsya Purana 27.3-5 does not say that Indra blew the garments of bathing girls for his fun but it says Indra blew and mixed the cloths of Devayani and Sharmistha to cause a fight between them .

In the Matsya Purana, Indra's act of blowing away and mixing up the garments of the bathing maidens was a deliberate strategy, not a mere prank. After Kacha returned with the knowledge of Sanjivani, the Devas were eager to weaken their Asura enemies. When Indra and the other Devas came across the Daitya maidens bathing in the forest, Indra used a gust of wind to scatter and mix up their clothes, knowing that this would lead to confusion and quarrels. This incident caused Sarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of the Daitya king Vṛṣaparvan, to accidentally put on the clothes of Devayānī, the daughter of Śukra, the preceptor of the Asuras. The mix-up quickly escalated into a heated dispute, leading Sarmiṣṭhā to insult and push Devayānī into a well. This act sowed discord between the two most important houses of the Asuras—the king and their guru—thereby fulfilling Indra's aim of weakening the unity of the Daityas through internal conflict.

इन्द्र का शर्मिष्ठा और देवयानी में फूट डालना, देवयानी को मारकर कुएँ में डालना, शुक्र का असरों पर कोप

Indra caused a rift between Sharmishtha and Devayani, killed Devayani and threw her into a well, and Shukra became angry with the demons.



अथ सप्तविंशोऽध्यायः

Matsya Purana 27.3-5 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications

पूर्वक आये हुए कच से देवतागण अतिशय हर्ष के साथ उक्त विद्या को प्राप्तकर कृतार्थ हो गये और सभी एकत्र होकर इन्द्र के पास जाकर बोले-'पुरन्दर! आज आप के ऐश्वर्य एवं पराक्रम के दिखाने का अच्छा समय आ गया है, चलिए और शत्रुओं का संहार कीजिये।' देवताओं के इस प्रकार कहने पर इन्द्र ने 'अच्छा ऐसा ही होगा'- यह कहकर युद्ध का उपक्रम प्रारम्भ किया। इसी प्रसंग में इन्द्र ने एक वन में कुछ कन्याओं को देखा, जो चैत्ररथ के समान उस सुन्दर वन में जलविहार कर रही थीं। वहाँ वायु रूप धारण कर इन्द्र ने उन सभी कन्याओं का वस्त्र उड़ाकर परस्पर मिला दिया। स्नान के उपरान्त वे कन्याएँ जल से बाहर निकलीं, तब अनेक स्थलों में उड़कर एकत्र हुए उन वस्त्रों में अपना-अपना पहचान कर धारण करने लगी, उसी समय वृषपर्वा की पुत्री शर्मिष्ठा ने भूल से अपना वस्त्र समझ कर देवयानी का वस्त्र पहन लिया। राजेन्द्र ! जिससे उन दोनों में परस्पर विरोध उत्पन्न हो गया।।१-७।।

Having earlier returned with Kacha, the gods, overjoyed at ˙ aving obtained that great knowledge, felt accomplished.

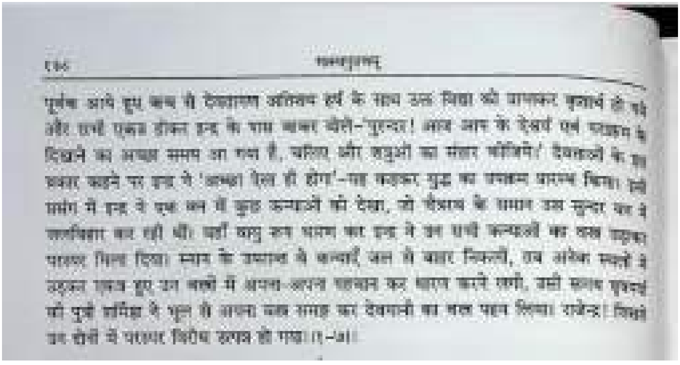
All of them together went to Indra and said, “O Purandara! Today is a fine time to display your majesty and prowess — come, let us destroy the enemies.”

When the gods spoke thus, Indra replied, “Very well, so it shall be,” and began preparations for battle.

At that time, Indra happened to see some maidens in a forest, as beautiful as the celestial Chaitraratha grove, enjoying water-sports there. Assuming the form of the wind, Indra blew away the garments of all those maidens, causing them to become mixed together.

When, after bathing, the maidens came out of the water, they began to identify and put on their own clothes from among the many that had flown and become intermingled. At that moment, Sharmishtha, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā, by mistake put on the garment of Devayānī, thinking it to be her own.

O King, from this incident arose mutual hostility between the two. (Verses 1–7)



Fight between Sharmistha and Devayani that eventually weakened the unity of the Daityas through internal conflict.

शर्मिष्ठा जी कहती हैं-भिक्षुकि ! आसन पर बैठे हुए, पलँग पर सोये हुए, मेरे पिता के सामने प्रतिदिन सर्वदा तुम्हारा पिता नीचे खड़ा होकर विनीतों की भाँति प्रार्थना करता है, आज्ञा प्राप्त करता है। तुम एक याचक, प्रार्थी और दान लेने वाले निर्धन ब्राह्मण की कन्या हो। मैं एक दाता की कन्या हूँ, जिसकी प्रतिदिन तुम्हारा पिता प्रार्थना करता है। तुम्हारी तरह मैं दान लेने वाले की पुत्री नहीं हूँ। तुम स्वयं निरायुध (विना किसी शक्ति की अर्थात् अशक्त) होकर सायुध (अनेक प्रकार की शक्तियों से युक्त) मुझे क्यों अपना क्रोध दिखा रही हो। किसी झगड़ालू से यदि तुम्हारी भेंट हो जायेगी तो उचित फल पा जाओगी, मैं तुम्हें कुछ नहीं गिनती ।।९-११।। शौनक जी कहते हैं-राजन् ! देवयानी के इस प्रकार विनीत प्रार्थना करने पर राजा ययाति ने उसे एक ब्राह्मणी-विशेषकर स्त्री-समझ कर दाहिना हाथ पकड़ कर शीघ्रता पूर्वक कूप से बाहर निकाला। इस प्रकार कूप से बाहर निकालने के पश्चात् राजा ने उस सुन्दरी से कुछ बातें कर अपने पुर की ओर प्रस्थान किया। नहुष पुत्र राजा ययाति के अपने पुर की ओर प्रस्थान करने के उपरान्त देवयानी की दूती वहाँ पहुँची। उसे देखकर शर्मिष्ठा द्वारा अपमानित देवयानी ने अति शोकाकुल होकर सब बातें सुनाकर उससे कहीं ।। २२-२४।। देवयानी जी कहती हैं-दूति ! तुम यहाँ से तुरन्त ही जाकर मेरे पूज्य पिताजी को यह सब वृत्तान्त सुनाओ, मैं तो अब वृषपर्वा के नगर में अपना पैर नहीं रखूंगी।। २५।। शौनक जी कहते हैं-राजन् ! दूती तुरन्त ही असुरराज वृषपर्वा के पुर को गई और वहाँ शुक्र जी से अतिशय व्याकुल एवं विचेत सी होकर काँपते हुए बोली-'महाराज ! महाभाग्य ! महाभाग्यशालिनी ापकी पुत्री देवयानी को राक्षसराज वृषपर्वा की पुत्री शर्मिष्ठा ने वन-प्रदेश में मार

डाला (?) अपनी कन्या देवयानी को शर्मिष्ठा द्वारा मारी गई सुन, भार्गव शुक्र अतिशय दुःखी हो गये और तुरन्त ही उसे ढूंढ़ते हुए वन-प्रदेश की ओर दौड़ पड़े। वहाँ तपोवन में कन्या देवयानी को इस दशा में देख शुक्र जी अतिशय दुःखी हुए और उसे अपनी भुजाओं में पकड़कर बोले-'बेटी! सभी मनुष्य अपने दोषों तथा गुणों द्वारा ही दुःख अथवा सुख की प्राप्ति करते हैं, मैं समझता हूँ कि तुमने भी कोई अनुचित कार्य किया था, उसी से निस्तार पाने के लिए तुम्हें यह फल भोगना पड़ा है।। २६-३०।। देवयानी जी कहती हैं-तात ! निस्तार हो वा न हो, वृषपर्वा की कन्या शर्मिष्ठा ने मुझे जो बातें कहीं हैं, उन्हें सावधान होकर सुनिये। मैं सच-सच कह रही हूँ, उसने मुझे ऐसी बातें कही हैं कि "मैं दैत्वों की गायिका (गा-गाकर जीविका उपार्जन करने वाली) हूँ। वृषपर्वा की पुत्री शर्मिष्ठा ने इसी प्रकार के अपमान जनकं शब्दों में क्रोध से अपने नेत्रों को लाल किये हुए, अतिशय कठोर शब्दों में आगे भी कहा है कि "तुम प्रार्थना करने वाले, याचक दान आदि लेने वाले एक ब्राह्मण की कन्या हो, मैं एक दान देने वाले राजा की पुत्री हूँ, जिसकी सब लोग स्तुति करते हैं। मेरा पिता किसी से कभी कुछ भी दान नहीं लेता।" पिताजी! मैं सच-सच कह रही हूँ। वृषपर्वा की पुत्री शर्मिष्ठा ने अत्यन्त क्रोध से दोनों नेत्रों को लाल किये हुए अतिशय गर्व में भरकर मुझको इतनी अपमान पूर्ण बातें कही हैं। यदि मैं प्रार्थना करने वाले, याचक तथा दान आदि लेने वाले एक निर्धन की पुत्री हूँ तो शर्मिष्ठा को अपनी सेवा से प्रसन्न करूँगी-ऐसा मैंने भी उससे कहा है।।३१-३५।।

Devayānī said:
"O daughter of the Asura! Being my disciple, why have you worn my garment? You, who do not know proper decorum — your welfare will not be!" (8)

Śarmiṣṭhā said:
"O beggar-girl! While seated on a seat or lying upon a couch before my father, your father always stands humbly with folded hands, prays, and seeks permission. You are the daughter of a poor Brāhmaṇa who begs, petitions, and receives charity, whereas I am the daughter of a donor, the one to whom your father prays daily. I am not the daughter of one who receives alms like you. Being without any weapons or power yourself, why do you show your anger toward me, who am armed with many strengths? If you come across a quarrelsome person, you will get your proper reward — I do not consider you worth anything." (9–11)

Śaunaka said:
"O King! When Devayānī had made this humble request, King Yayāti, considering her a Brāhmaṇa woman — and above all, a woman — quickly took her right hand and lifted her out of the well. Having brought her out of the well, the king spoke a few words with that beautiful maiden and then departed toward his city.

After King Yayāti, the son of Nahusha, departed toward his city, Devayānī's maid arrived there. Seeing her, Devayānī — deeply distressed and humiliated by Śarmiṣṭhā — recounted the entire matter to her in great sorrow and said: (22–24)

Devayānī said:
"O maid! Go from here at once and tell my revered father this entire incident. As for me, I will never again set foot in the city of Vṛṣaparvā." (25)

Śaunaka said:
"O King! The maid immediately went to the city of the Asura-king Vṛṣaparvā, and there, trembling and greatly agitated as if senseless, she spoke to Śukra: 'O lord! O most fortunate ne! Your greatly blessed daughter Devayānī has been struck down in the forest by Śarmiṣṭhā, daughter of the demon-king Vṛṣaparvā.'

Hearing that his daughter had been struck by Śarmiṣṭhā, the Bhṛgu sage Śukra became extremely sorrowful and at once ran toward the forest to search for her. There, in the hermitage, seeing his daughter Devayānī in such a state, Śukra became very distressed. Holding her in his arms, he said:

'My child, all people attain sorrow or happiness through their own faults or virtues. I understand that you too must have done something improper, and to be freed from that, you are now experiencing this result.'" (26–30)

Devayānī said:
"Father! Whether I am freed or not, listen carefully to the words that the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā, Śarmiṣṭhā, spoke to me. I speak the truth — she spoke words such as: 'I am the singer of the Daityas (one who earns her living by singing).' The daughter of Vṛṣaparvā spoke such insulting words to me, reddening her eyes with anger and speaking with extreme harshness, saying further: 'You are the daughter of a poor Brāhmaṇa who prays, begs, and accepts gifts; I am the daughter of a donor-king, one whom all praise. My father never takes charity from anyone.'

Father, I tell you truly, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā, her eyes reddened with rage and filled with excessive pride, spoke to me with the utmost insult. If I am truly the daughter of a poor man who prays and receives charity, then I will serve Śarmiṣṭhā to please her — so I, too, said to her." (31–35)

Mahabharata 1.72.1-9 “Kanwa continued, ‘And Sakra, thus addressed by her, then commanded him who could approach every place (viz., the god of the wind) to be present with Menaka at the time she would be before the Rishi. And the timid and beautiful Menaka then entered the retreat and saw there Viswamitra who had burnt, by his penances, all his sins, and was engaged still in ascetic penances. And saluting the Rishi, she then began to sport before him. And just at that time Marut robbed her of her garments that were white as the Moon. And she thereupon ran, as if in great bashfulness, to catch hold of her attire, and as if she was exceedingly annoyed with Marut. And she did all this before the very eyes of Viswamitra who was endued with energy like that of fire. And Viswamitra saw her in that attitude. And beholding her divested of her robes, he saw that she was of faultless feature. And that best of Munis saw that she was exceedingly handsome, with no marks of age on her person. And beholding her beauty and accomplishments that bull amongst Rishis was possessed with lust and made a sign that he desired her companionship. And he invited her accordingly, and she also of faultless features expressed her acceptance of the invitation. And they then passed a long time there in each other’s company. And sporting with each other, just as they pleased, for a long time as if it were only a single day, the Rishi begat on Menaka a daughter named Sakuntala.”

Refutation-

Here is Mahabharata Adi Parva Adhaya 72 Geeta Press Gorakhpur

Indra did not make Vāyu blow away Menakā's garment out of lust or for any random mischief. According to the story, Viśvāmitra's intense penance was becoming so powerful that Indra feared it would shake the balance of heaven. To break his meditation, Indra sent the apsarā Menakā with Vāyu's help so that her beauty would distract the sage. Vāyu's act of blowing away her garment was only a planned tactic to disturb Viśvāmitra's concentration. This episode is therefore about the Devas trying to protect their position by breaking a sage's tapas, not about any personal pleasure of Vayu or Indra .

(शकुन्तला दुष्यन्तसे कहती है-) महर्षि कण्वने (पूर्वोक्त ऋषिसे शेष वृत्तान्त इस प्रकार) कहा- मेनकाके ऐसा कहनेपर इन्द्रदेवने वायुको उसके साथ जानेका आदेश दिया। तब मेनका वायुदेवके साथ समयानुसार वहाँसे प्रस्थित हुई ।। १ ।।

(Śakuntalā says to Duṣyanta:)
Sage Kaṇva narrated the remaining part of the story to me as follows:

When Menakā spoke in this way, Lord Indra commanded the Wind-god to accompany her. Then Menakā, together with Vāyu (the Wind-god), set off at the appointed time. (1)

Reaching the forest, the timid and beautiful Menakā saw the sage Viśvāmitra absorbed in penance in an āśrama. Through his austerities, he had already burned away all his sins. (2)

At that time, after saluting the great sage, that celestial nymph began to perform various playful acts close to where he was. Then, Vāyu, following Indra's order, suddenly blew away the bright, moon-like garment from Menakā's body. (3)

Seeing this, the beautiful Menakā, both bashful and smiling, scolded the Wind-god, and hurried in confusion toward the place where the garment had fallen, wishing to retrieve it at once. (4)

This incident happened before the very eyes of the great sage Viśvāmitra, blazing like fire. The matchless beauty Menakā, caught in this awkward situation, ran frantically to recover her garment. Her beauty was indescribable, and her youth extraordinary. The sage Viśvāmitra beheld that divine apsarā standing naked before him. (5-6)

The moment he saw her beauty and qualities, the noble sage Viśvāmitra fell prey to desire. Because of her proximity, affection arose in his heart toward Menakā. (7)

He invited Menakā to come near him. Menakā, the matchless beauty, had come for this very purpose and readily agreed to be with him. Thereafter, both of them stayed there for a long time, roaming and enjoying each other as they pleased. That long span of time seemed like a single day to them. Being unable to conquer passion and anger, that otherwise patient sage destroyed the merit he had gained through long penance. When his penance was lost, delusion clouded the sage's mind. Then Menakā, under the sway of passion and attachment, remained with the sage.

O Brāhman! From the union of the sage and Menakā, on the beautiful peaks of the Himalayas, on the bank of the river Mālinī, a daughter named Śakuntalā was born. Menakā's task was accomplished; she left that newborn infant on the bank of the Mālinī and immediately returned to Indra's heaven. In that lonely forest, full of lions and tigers, seeing the baby girl lying asleep, a flock of birds covered her all around with their wings so that flesh-eating vultures and wild animals would not harm the child. (8–12)

Dancing Girls

Below are some verses from Srimad Bhagavatam about Krishna dancing with Gopis.

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.33.2 "There on the Yamuna's banks Lord Govinda then began the pastime of the rasa dance in the company of those jewels among women, the faithful gopis, who joyfully linked their arms together. [7-8] As the gopis sang in praise of Krishna, their feet danced, their hands gestured, and their eyebrows moved with playful smiles. With their braids and belts tied tight, their waists bending, their faces perspiring, the garments on their breasts moving this way and that, and their earrings swinging on their cheeks, Lord Krishna's young consorts shone like streaks of lightning in a mass of clouds. Eager to enjoy conjugal love, their throats colored with various pigments, the gopis sang loudly and danced. They were overjoyed by Krishna's touch, and they sang songs that filled the entire universe. [10-12] When one gopi grew tired from the rasa dance, She turned to Krishna, standing at Her side holding a baton, and grasped His shoulder with Her arm. The dancing had loosened Her bracelets and the flowers in Her hair. Upon the shoulder of one gopi Krishna placed His arm, whose natural blue-lotus fragrance was mixed with that of the sandalwood pulp anointing it. As the gopi relished that fragrance, her bodily hair stood on end in jubilation, and she kissed His arm. Next to Krishna's cheek one gopi put her own, beautified by the effulgence of her earrings, which glittered as she danced. Krishna then carefully gave her the betel nut He was chewing. [17-18] Their senses overwhelmed by the joy of having His physical association, the gopis could not prevent their hair, their dresses and the cloths covering their breasts from becoming disheveled.

अर्थात्—(क) [ब्रह्मा जी ने देवताओं के प्रति कहा कि—] साक्षात् परम पुरुष भगवान् वसुदेव जी के घर में अवतार लेंगे। इस लिये हे देववृन्द! आप और आपकी स्त्रियों को भी उनके सहयोग के लिये ब्रजभूमि में अपने २ अंशों से अवतीर्ण होना चाहिये। (ख) वो सब गोपाल लोग ग्वाल वेश में छुपे हुये देवता ही थे। (ग) भगवान् कृष्ण ने सात वर्ष की छोटी सी आयु में गोवर्द्धन पर्वत को एक हाथ में उठा लिया जैसा कि कमल के फूल को मस्त हाथी उठा लिया करता है। [उसके अगले वर्ष में रासलीला हुई थी जब कि भगवान् की आयु आठ वर्ष की थी] (घ) भगवान् ने शरद् ऋतु की विकसित मल्लिका वाली रात्रियों को जानकर अपनी योगमाया के आश्रय से क्रीड़ा करने का विचार किया ॥१॥ स्त्रियों के मन को लुभाने वाली कलविलासिनी

पीड़ा को दूर करने के लिये अवतीर्ण हुये हो ? हे आर्तबन्धो ! इसलिये अपने हस्तकमल हम किङ्करियों के स्तनों और सिरों पर रखिए ॥४१॥ योगेश्वर भगवान् को इस तरह उन गोपियों का करुणक्रन्दन सुनकर दया आ गई और अपने आप में ही रमण करते हुये भी वे हँसकर गोपियों को रमण कराने लगे ॥४३॥ बाहु फैलाना, लिपटना, गले लगाना, हाथ, अलक, जंघा, नीवी (कमर के कपड़े की गांठ) और स्तनों को छूना, हँसी मसखरी, नखच्छेद देना, क्रीड़ा, कटाक्ष और मन्द मुस्कान आदि से कामोद्दीपन करते हुये भगवान् गोपियों को रमण कराने लगे ॥४६॥ इस प्रकार महात्मा कृष्ण जी से मान पाकर वे गोपियें अपने आपको भूमण्डल में सर्वाधिक सुन्दरी समझने लगीं ॥४७॥ भगवान् इनके इस सौभाग्य मद और मान को नष्ट करके कृपाभाव दिखाने के लिये तत्काल वहीं अन्तर्धान हो गये ॥ ४८ ॥ (ड) [तब विरहकातर गोपियें रो रो कर कहने लगीं कि—] हे भगवान् ! आप निश्चित ही किसी गोपी के पुत्र नहीं हैं बल्कि समस्त प्राणियों के अन्तरात्मा हैं । हे प्यारे कृष्ण ! आप तो ब्रह्मा जी की प्रार्थना से इस विश्व की रक्षा के लिये सात्वत कुल में अवतीर्ण हुए हो ॥ ४६ ॥ हे भगवन् ! आपके—शरणागत प्राणियों के पापों को दूर करने वाले लक्ष्मी के घर होते हुये भी भक्तिवश गौओं के पीछे भागने वाले और विषधर कालीय सर्प के क्रूर फणों पर नृत्य करने वाले जो चरण कमल हैं उन्हें हमारी कुचाओं पर रखकर कामदेव को विनष्ट कर डालिये ॥७॥ (च) इस तरह गोपियें गाती हुईं और अनेक प्रकार के प्रलाप करती हुईं भगवान् के दर्शनों की इच्छा से ऊँची आवाज में रोने लगीं ॥१॥ तब उन सब के बीच में मन्द २ मुस्काते हुये साक्षात् कामदेव को भी लजाने वाले भगवान् आविर्भूत हुये । जो पीताम्बर पहिने और गले में माला धारण किये हुये थे ॥ २ ॥ (छ) तब वहाँ भगवान् ने अपनी परम भक्त सुप्रसन्न गोपियों के हाथों में हाथ डालकर रासक्रीड़ा

वास्तविक भाव

हमने उक्त लीला पर बार बार मनन करने पर जो अभिप्राय समझा है, पाठकों के जानार्थ हम उसे भी प्रकट कर देते हैं । हम यह बात पीछे प्रमाणपूर्वक सिद्ध कर चुके हैं कि व्रज के समस्त गोप और

गोपियें देवताओं के आंशिक अवतार थे, परन्तु मानव-स्थूल-शरीर की उपाधि से वे अपने देवत्व को भूले हुये थे । सो भगवान् ने जिस समय रासक्रीड़ा का अभिनय करना चाहा तो वंशी में कामबीज 'क्लीं' मन्त्र का निनाद किया जिससे स्त्रीभावापन्न दिव्य आत्माएं जग उठीं और वे भगवान् के निकट आ पहुंचीं । यह रहस्य श्रीमद्भा० (१०।२६।३) के—

'वंशी 'कलं' वामदृशां मनोहरम्'—

—पद में व्यक्त किया है। उक्त पद में—'कलं'-'क्लीं'=कामबीज का निदर्शक है और 'वामदृशां मनोहरम्' का अभिप्राय—स्त्रीभावापन्न दिव्य आत्माओं पर ही उसका प्रभाव पड़ सकता था—यह बताने के लिए प्रयुक्त हुआ है। इसीलिये वंशी का शब्द सुनकर गोपियें ही भगवान् के निकट आई थीं !

भगवान् ने यह जानने के लिये कि—'उक्त दिव्यात्माओं को अपने देवत्व का कुछ स्मरण है—या स्थूल शरीर की उपाधि से वह सर्वथा विस्मृत हो गया उनको वापिस लौट जाने का उपदेश दिया। जिसके उत्तर में गोपियों ने स्पष्ट शब्दों में बतला दिया कि 'हम तो समस्त विषयों को छोड़ कर शरणागत भक्त हैं और मोक्ष की इच्छा से यहां आई हैं' आप भी आदिपुरुष और सबके अन्तरात्मा हो...(यह भाव १०। २९। ३१-३२) में 'संत्यज्य सर्वविषयान्'—'भक्ता—आदिपुरुष' और 'मुमुक्षून्' आदि शब्दों द्वारा अभिव्यक्त किया गया है। जब गोपियों की उक्तियों से भगवान् ने अच्छी तरह जान लिया कि ये सब आत्माएं मेरी वंशी के निनाद से प्रबुद्ध हो गई हैं और इनको अब देवत्व का पूरा ज्ञान है तब भगवान् ने उनका विशुद्ध प्रेम और रासक्रीड़ा की अभिलाषा जानकर अपनी योगमाया के प्रभाव से उनके दो दो स्वरूप बनाए। उनमें से पहिले जो कि पाञ्चभौतिक स्थूल शरीरावच्छिन्न स्वरूप थे उन्हें वापिस उन उन के घर में पहुंचा दिया, जिससे गोप

ग्वालों में अपनी २ माता, पत्नी आदि को घर में न देखकर किसी प्रकार की बेचैनी न हो ? और दूसरे योगमायानिर्मित दिव्यात्मासम्पन्न स्वरूपों को घर में ही रहने दिया। इसके बाद जो भी लीला हुई है वह योग-मायानिर्मित भगवान् के अपने ही स्वरूपों के साथ हुई है। व्यास जी ने उक्त रहस्य का संकेत करने के लिये मूलग्रन्थ में ही निम्नलिखित पदों का उल्लेख किया है- यथा—

(क) मन्यमानाः स्वपार्श्वस्थान् स्वान्स्वान्दारान्व्रजौकसः।
(श्री० भा० १०। ३३। ३८)

(ख) यथार्भकः स्वप्रतिबिम्बविभ्रमः।
(श्री० भा० १०। ३३। १७)

(ग) कृत्वा तावन्तमात्मानं यावतीर्व्रजयोषितः।
(श्री० भा० १०। ३३। २०)

(घ) पुंस्यः शक्तिभिर्यथा। (श्री० भा०। १०। ३२। १०)

अर्थात्—(क) व्रजनिवासियों ने अपनी कुटुम्बिनियों को अपने २ पास माना [अर्थात्—भगवान् की माया से पाञ्चभौतिक स्थूल शरीरा-वच्छिन्न गोपियें नित्य की तरह विद्यमान रहीं।] (ख) जैसे बालक अपनी परछाईं से खेल करता है [इसी तरह भगवान् ने अपनी योगमाया से निर्माण की हुई दिव्यात्मसम्पन्न गोपियों से रासक्रीड़ा की।] (ग) भगवान् ने अपने उतने ही रूप बना लिये जितनी कि गोपियें थीं। (घ) ब्रह्म जिस तरह अपनी माया शक्तियों से विनोद किया करता है उसी तरह भगवान् ने गोपियों से रासक्रीड़ा की।

उपर्युक्त प्रमाणों से यह प्रतीत होता है कि जिस तरह ब्रह्मा जी द्वारा वत्स और गोप चुराए जाने पर भगवान् ने अपनी योगमाया से उतने और वैसे ही ग्वाले तथा बछड़े बनाकर वर्षभर काम जारी रखा था,

किसी को कानों कान भी यह रहस्य विदित न हो सका था इसी तरह रासलीला के समय भी भगवान् ने देवात्मा-सम्पन्न एवं दिव्यशरीरावच्छिन्न गोपियों को तो मुक्त कर देने के लिये अपनी रासलीला में बुला लिया और इस रहस्य को गुप्त रखने के लिये नकली गोपियों को वापिस व्रज में भेज दिया।

प्रायः देखा गया है कि जब किस अंशावतार का कार्य समाप्त हो जाया करता है तो भगवान् किसी बहाने से उसकी उस दिव्य शक्ति को छीन लिया करते हैं, जैसे रामावतार में शिवधनुर्भङ्ग हो जाने के पश्चात् श्रीपरशुराम जी की अवतारी शक्ति भगवान् रामचन्द्र जी में समा गई थी, तथा भगवान् कृष्ण जी के लीलासंवरण के पश्चात् वीरशिरोमणि अर्जुन साधारण निहत्थे ग्वालों से पराजित हो गया था अर्थात्—नारायणावतार श्रीकृष्ण के विदा होते ही नरावतार अर्जुन भी अपनी उस अपूर्व शक्ति से हीन हो गया था। तो इसी तरह सब देवता भी श्री ब्रह्मा जी की आज्ञानुसार केवल भगवान् कृष्ण की प्रसन्नता के लिये ही अपने २ अंशों से व्रजभूमि में अवतीर्ण हुए थे। जब भगवान् गोकुल वृन्दावन का कार्य प्रायः समाप्त कर चुके और दस दिन के बाद कंस विध्वंसादि का अवसर सामने दिखने लगा तो भगवान् को उन देवांशभूत गोप और गोपियों का व्रज में रहना अनावश्यक जान पड़ा अतः भगवान् ने अपने बालसखा गोपों को तो 'ब्रह्मवत्सहरण' लीला के बहाने वापिस ब्रह्मलोक को भेज दिया था और नकली गोप घर में रख दिये थे अर्थात् सब देवता तो इस तरह अपना कार्य समाप्त हो जाने पर पुनः अपने असली पद पर प्रतिष्ठित हो चुके थे और व्रज में नकली ग्वाले रह गये थे। शेष रही थीं—गोपीभूत देवाङ्गनायें—सो उन्हें भी भगवान् ने 'रासलीला' के बहाने वंशी के इशारे से सब कुछ समझा कर अपने पास बुला लिया और उनके स्थान में नकली गोपियाँ

को घर भेज दिया। इस तरह अपनी बाल लीला की समाप्ति के साथ भगवान् ने देवांशभूत गोपियों के अवतार काल का उपसंहार कर डाला था।

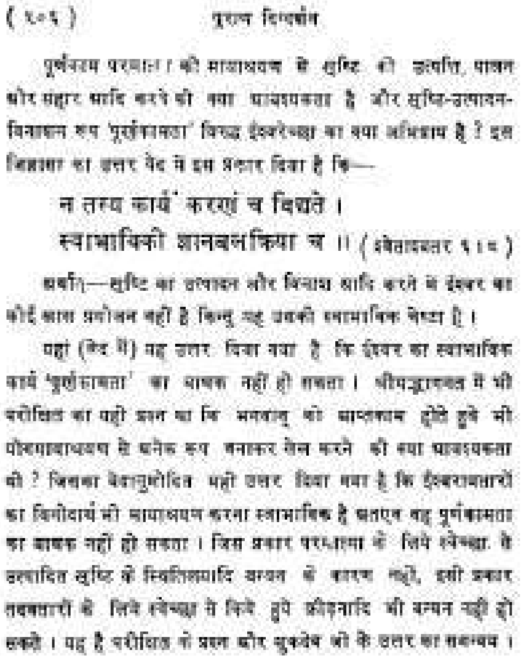
उपर्युक्त रीति से जब यह निश्चित हो गया कि भगवान् ने रासलीला में किसी परस्त्री का स्पर्श नहीं किया बल्कि अपनी योगमाया द्वारा उद्भावित देवात्मा-सम्पन्न अपने ही रूपों से क्रीड़न किया है, तब स्वभावतः यह जिज्ञासा उत्पन्न होती है कि ऐसी दशा में परीक्षित के पूर्वोक्त प्रश्न का क्या समन्वय होगा ? अस्तु, इसका भी विवेचन किया जाता है।

परीक्षित पूछते हैं कि—भगवान् का अवतार धर्मसंस्थापन और अधर्मनाश के लिये हुआ है परन्तु रासक्रीड़ा का धर्मसंस्थापन और अधर्मनाशरूप अवतार कार्य से कोई सम्बन्ध नहीं है अर्थात्—वह तो केवल बालक्रीड़ा = विनोद मात्र है। तो आप्तकाम = 'पूर्णकाम' परमात्मा को अपने अनेक रूप बनाकर खेल करने की क्या आवश्यकता थी ?—विनोद मात्र के लिये भगवान् का 'परदाराभिमर्शन' = (—(परस्य परमात्मनो दारारूपिण्यो या मायाशक्तयस्तासामभिमर्शनं बलादाकर्षणमिति 'बृहद्भगवत्तोषिणी' टीकाकारः) आप्तकामता के 'प्रतीप'—प्रतिकूल है—इसका क्या अभिप्राय है ? परीक्षित के प्रश्न का सार यह है कि रासलीला भगवान् का बालविनोद है परन्तु 'आप्तकाम' को विनोदार्थ मायाश्रयण की क्या आवश्यकता थी ? यदि धर्मसंस्थापना और अधर्मनाशन के लिये मायाश्रयण किया जाता तो वह अवतार-धर्म के अनुरूप होता परन्तु खेल कूद के लिये अपने अनेक रूप बनाने का क्या अभिप्राय ? इस प्रश्न के उत्तर में शुकदेव जी ने समझाया कि—भगवान् का विनोदमात्र के लिये योगमायाश्रयण करना, धर्मस्थापन और अधर्मनाशरूप अवतार-धर्म का व्यतिक्रम अवश्य है परन्तु ईश्वरावतारों का केवल क्रीड़ार्थ भी ऐसा करना देखा गया है, जो दोषास्पद नहीं।



(१०६) पुराण दिग्दर्शन

पूर्णकाम परमात्मा की मायाश्रयण से सृष्टि की उत्पत्ति, पालन और संहार आदि करने की क्या आवश्यकता है और सृष्टि-उत्पादन-विनाशन रूप 'पूर्णकामता' विरुद्ध ईश्वरेच्छा का क्या अभिप्राय है ? इस जिज्ञासा का उत्तर वेद में इस प्रकार दिया है कि—

न तस्य कार्यं करणं च विद्यते ।
स्वाभाविकी ज्ञानबलक्रिया च ।। (श्वेताश्वतर ६।८)

अर्थात्—सृष्टि का उत्पादन और विनाश आदि करने में ईश्वर का कोई खास प्रयोजन नहीं है किन्तु यह उसकी स्वाभाविक चेष्टा है ।

यहां (वेद में) यह उत्तर दिया गया है कि ईश्वर का स्वाभाविक कार्य 'पूर्णकामता' का बाधक नहीं हो सकता । श्रीमद्भागवत में भी परीक्षित का यही प्रश्न था कि भगवान् को आप्तकाम होते हुये भी योगमायाश्रयण से अनेक रूप बनाकर खेल करने की क्या आवश्यकता थी ? जिसका वेदानुमोदित यही उत्तर दिया गया है कि ईश्वरावतारों का विनोदार्थ भी मायाश्रयण करना स्वाभाविक है अतएव वह पूर्णकामता का बाधक नहीं हो सकता । जिस प्रकार परमात्मा के लिये स्वेच्छा से उत्पादित सृष्टि के स्थितिलयादि बन्धन के कारण नहीं, इसी प्रकार अवतारों के लिये स्वेच्छा से किये हुये क्रीडनादि भी बन्धन नहीं हो सकते । यह है परीक्षित के प्रश्न और शुकदेव जी के उत्तर का समन्वय ।

(d) Knowing that the nights of the autumn season were full of blooming jasmine, the Lord thought of playing with the shelter of his Yogamaya. ॥1॥ He played the Kaninadini flute which attracts the hearts of women. ॥3॥ (On hearing this, the women of Braja) All the enchanted Gopis whose souls had been stolen by Krishna did move away even after being stopped by their husbands, fathers, brothers and relatives. The Gopis who were confined in their houses who did not get time to go out due to their love for the Lord, immediately left their virtuous bodies and became free. ॥6॥11॥ The eloquent Lord, knowing that the women of Braj had come to Him, said in heart-pleasing words, ॥17॥ O Braj beauties! It is a dark night and many dreadful creatures live in this forest, therefore all of you should return to Braj. No woman should stay here. ॥16॥ Because serving the husband with pure feelings is the ultimate duty of women. ॥24॥ And the kind of love and devotion that is generated in me by listening, watching, meditating and singing, does not happen by staying close. Therefore, return to your homes immediately.

Therefore, return to your homes immediately. ॥27॥ (Hearing these words of the Lord, the Gopis said that) O Lord! You are not being served in this way. It is not appropriate to speak harsh words to us We are your devotees who have left all the worldly pleasures and have come to your feet for shelter, so do not rebuke us. Rather, just as the Supreme Soul, the Supreme Being, keeps the seekers of liberation under His protection, similarly, you also take us under your protection. ॥31॥ You are certainly the loving soul pervading all the embodied beings. ॥32॥ The fire of lust that is burning in our hearts by seeing you and hearing the sound of your loving flute, please quench it by watering it with the flow of your love. Otherwise, dear Krishna! We all, burnt by the flames of this fire of separation, will merge (die) here at your feet while meditating on you. ॥ 35॥ You are undoubtedly the protector of the gods, the Supreme Being, and you have incarnated to remove the pain of the people of Braj. Oh dear ones! Therefore, please place Your lotus hands on the breasts and heads of us Kikri girls.॥ 41॥ Hearing the pitiful cries of the Gopis, the Lord Yogeshwara felt pity and while He was engaged in His own pleasure, smilingly, He began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. ॥43॥ Stretching His arms, embracing them, touching their hands, hair, thighs, Nivi (knot of the waist cloth) and breasts, laughing, joking, pinching their nails, caressing, taunting and smiling, etc., arousing them with such grace and sensuality, the Lord began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. 46. Having thus gained respect from the great soul Krishna, the Gopis began to consider themselves the most beautiful women on earth. ॥47॥ To destroy their pride and arrogance of good fortune and to show His mercy, the Lord immediately disappeared from there. 48.न खलु गोषिकानन्दनो भवा-,नखिलदेहिनामन्तरात्मदृक् ।। विखनसाथितो विश्वगुप्तये, सख ! उदेयिवान्सात्वतां कुले ।। ४ ।। प्रणतदेहिनां पापकर्शनं, तृणचरानुगं श्रीनिकेतनम् ।।फणिफणार्पितं ते पदाम्बुजं, कृरणु कुचेषु नः कृन्धि हृच्छयम् ।।७।।(श्रीमद्भागवत १० । ३१।४)

Then the lovelorn Gopis started weeping and saying, O Lord! You are definitely not the son of any Gopi but the conscience of all living beings. O dear Krishna! You have incarnated n on the prayers of Lord Brahma to protect this world. 46. O Lord! You are the lotus feet which remove the sins of those who surrender to you, who despite being the husband of Lakshmi run after cows due to devotion and dance on the cruel hoods of the poisonous Kaliya serpent, place them on our shoulders and destroy Kamadev. 7.

In this manner the Gopis started singing and blabbering in various ways and started crying loudly with the desire to see the Lord. Then the Lord who could put even Kaamdev to shame appeared in the midst of them smiling softly. He was wearing yellow clothes and had a garland around his neck.

(छ) तत्रारभत गोविन्दो रासक्रीड़ामनुवृतैः । स्त्रीरत्नैरन्वितः प्रीतैरन्योन्याबद्धबाहुभिः ।।२।।कृत्वा तावन्तमात्मानं यावतीव्रजयोषितः । रेमे स भगवांस्ताभिरात्मारामोऽपि लीलया ॥२०॥रेमे रमेशो ब्रजसुन्दरीभि-र्यथार्भकः, स्वप्रतिविम्बविभ्रमः ।।१७।।

Then there the Lord held the hands of His most devoted and pleased Gopis and performed Raas Leela. Dances tarted 2. Creating as many forms as there were Braj women, the Atmaraman Lord started enjoying with those gopis through play. Just like a child plays with his reflection seen in glass or other clean substances like water, similarly Lord Lakshmipati lso started enjoying with those Braj beauties. 17. The gopas, bewildered by Maya, considered their women to be very close to them, so they could not blame the Lord's character in any way.

(d) Knowing that the nights of the autumn season were full of blooming jasmine, the Lord thought of playing with the shelter of his Yogamaya. ॥1॥ He played the Kaninadini flute which attracts the hearts of women. ॥3॥ (On hearing this, the women of Braja) All the enchanted Gopis whose souls had been stolen by Krishna did move away even after being stopped by their husbands, fathers, brothers and relatives. The Gopis who were confined in their houses who did not get time to go out due to their love for the Lord, immediately left their virtuous bodies and became free. ॥6॥11॥ The eloquent Lord, knowing that the women of Braj had come to Him, said in heart-pleasing words, ॥17॥ O Braj beauties! It is a dark night and many dreadful creatures live in this forest, therefore all of you should return to Braj. No woman should stay here. ॥16॥ Because serving the husband with pure feelings is the ultimate duty of women. ॥24॥ And the kind of love and devotion that is generated in me by listening, watching, meditating and singing, does not happen by staying close. Therefore, return to your homes immediately.

॥27॥ (Hearing these words of the Lord, the Gopis said that) O Lord! You are not being served in this way. It is not appropriate to speak harsh words to us We are your devotees who have left all the worldly pleasures and have come to your feet for shelter, so do not rebuke us. Rather, just as the Supreme Soul, the Supreme Being, keeps the seekers of liberation under His protection, similarly, you also take us under your protection. ॥31॥ You are certainly the loving soul pervading all the embodied beings. ॥32॥ The fire of lust that is burning in our hearts by seeing you and hearing the sound of your loving flute, please quench it by watering it with the flow of your love. Otherwise, dear Krishna! We all, burnt by the flames of this fire of separation, will merge (die) here at your feet while meditating on you. ॥35॥ You are undoubtedly the protector of the gods, the Supreme Being, and you have incarnated to remove the pain of the people of Braj. Oh dear ones! Therefore, please place Your lotus hands on the breasts and heads of us Kikri girls.

॥41॥ Hearing the pitiful cries of the Gopis, the Lord Yogeshwara felt pity and while He was engaged in His own pleasure, smilingly, He began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. ॥43॥ Stretching His arms, embracing them, touching their hands, hair, thighs, Nivi (knot of the waist cloth) and breasts, laughing, joking, pinching their nails, caressing, taunting and smiling, etc., arousing them with such grace and sensuality, the Lord began to make the Gopis enjoy His pleasure. 46. Having thus gained respect from the great soul Krishna, the Gopis began to consider themselves the most beautiful women on earth. ॥ 47॥ To destroy their pride and arrogance of good fortune and to show His mercy, the Lord immediately disappeared from there. 48.

न खलु गोपिकानन्दनो भवा-,नखिलदेहिनामन्तरात्मदृक् ।। विखनसार्थितो विश्वगुप्तये, सख ! उदेयिवान्सात्वतां कुले ।। ४ ।। प्रणतदेहिनां पापकर्शनं, तृणचरानुगं श्रीनिकेतनम् ।।फणिफणार्पितं ते पदाम्बुजं, कृणु कुचेषु नः कृन्धि हृच्छयम् ।।७।।(श्रीमद्भागवत १० । ३१।४)

Then the lovelorn Gopis started weeping and saying, O Lord! You are definitely not the son of any Gopi but the conscience of all living beings. O dear Krishna! You have incarnated n on the prayers of Lord Brahma to protect this world. 46. O Lord! You are the lotus feet which remove the sins of those who surrender to you, who despite being the husband of Lakshmi run after cows due to devotion and dance on the cruel hoods of the poisonous Kaliya serpent, place them on our shoulders and destroy Kamadev. 7.

In this manner the Gopis started singing and blabbering in various ways and started crying loudly with the desire to see the Lord. Then the Lord who could put even Kaamdev to shame appeared in the midst of them smiling softly. He was wearing yellow clothes and had a garland around his neck.

(छ) तत्रारभत गोविन्दो रासक्रीडामनुव्रतैः । स्त्रीरत्नैरन्वितः प्रीतैरन्योन्याबद्धबाहुभिः ॥ २॥कृत्वा तावन्तमात्मानं यावतीर्व्रजयोषितः । रेमे स भगवांस्ताभिरात्मारामोऽपि लीलया ॥२०॥रेमे रमेशो व्रजसुन्दरीभि-र्यथार्भकः, स्वप्रतिबिम्बविभ्रमः ॥१७॥ नासूयन् खलु कृष्णाय मोहितास्तस्य मायया । मन्यमानाः स्वपार्श्वस्थान्स्वान्स्वान्दारान्व्रजौकसः ॥ ३८ ॥ (श्रीमद्भागवत १० । ३३ । २-३८)

Then there the Lord held the hands of His most devoted and pleased Gopis and performed Raas Leela. Dances tarted 2. Creating as many forms as there were Braj women, the Atmaraman Lord started enjoying with those gopis through play. Just like a child plays with his reflection seen in glass or other clean substances like water, similarly Lord Lakshmipati also started enjoying with those Braj beauties. 17. The gopas, bewildered by Maya, considered their women to be very close to them, so they could not blame the Lord's character in any way.

The most important part and understanding the real meaning of Rasleela

वास्तविक भाव

For the benefit of the readers, we are revealing the meaning of the above mentioned Leela as we have understood it after reciting it repeatedly. We have already proved with evidence that all the gopas and the hermits of Braj were were partial incarnations of the Devas , but they had forgotten their divinity due to the status of human-physical bodies. So when the Lord wanted to perform the Raas Leela, he played the Kaambeej mantra 'Kleem' on the flute, due to which the divine souls with feminine feelings awoke and came near the Lord. This secret is given in Shrimadbhaga (10.26.3) – 'जगौ 'कलं' वामदृशां मनोहरम्' –

It is expressed in a verse. In the said verse 'Kalam' indicates the seed of love and 'Vaamdrisham Manoharam' means that it could have its effect only on the divine souls having feminine feelings. That is why only the gopis came near the Lord on hearing the sound of the flute.

In order to know whether the above mentioned divine souls remember their divinity or have forgotten it completely due to the status of the gross body, Krishna advised them to return. In reply to which the gopis clearly told that 'we are surrendered devotees leaving all worldly pleasures and have come here with the desire of salvation' You are also the original person and the inner soul of all… (This Bhaav 10.26.31-32) has been expressed by the words like 'Santyajya Sarvavishiyan' – 'Bhakt – Original person' and 'Mumukshu' etc. When Krishna understood well from the words of the gopis that all these souls have been enlightened by the sound of my flute and now they have full knowledge of divinity, then knowing their pure love and desire for Raas Leela, Krishna created two forms of them with the effect of his Yogamaya. The first ones who were of the five elements were sent back to their respective homes so that the cowherds may not feel uneasy seeing their mother, wife etc. not at home.

And the other divine soul-like forms created by Yogamaya were allowed to stay at home. After this, whatever Leela happened, it happened with the God's own forms created by Yogamaya. Vyas has mentioned the following words in the original text itself to indicate the above mentioned secret – as – (क) मन्यमानाः स्वपार्श्वस्थान् स्वान्स्वान्दरान्ब्रजौकसः । (थी० भा० १० । ३३।३८) – a) The residents of Braj considered their family members to be with them [meaning – due to the illusion of Krishna the gopis who were of the five elements and had physical bodies remained present as usual . (ख) यथार्भकः स्वप्रतिविम्वविभ्रमः ।

Just like Brahm plays with his magical powers, in the same way Krishna played Raas Leela with the Gopis.

From the above mentioned evidences, it can be seen that just as when Brahma Ji stole the calves and cowherds, Krishna created the same number of cowherds and calves through his Yogmaya and continued the same work. This secret could not be known to anyone even by hearsay. Similarly, during the Raasleela also, the Lord called the divine soul-endowed and divine body-bound Gopis to his Raasleela in order to free them and give them salvation and sent the fake Gopis back to Braj to keep this secret hidden.It is often seen that when the work of an incarnation is over, Shri Hari snatches away his divine power on some pretext, like in Rama avatar, after Shiva's Dhanush was broken, the incarnational power of Shri Parashuram ji was absorbed in Lord Ramchandra ji, and after the Leelasamvaran of Lord Krishna ji, Veershiro-Mani Arjun was defeated by ordinary unarmed cowherds, that is – after the departure of Narayan avatar Shri Krishna, Naravatar Arjun also became devoid of his unique power.

So in the same way, all the Devas also incarnated in Braj Bhoomi with their parts only for the happiness of Lord Krishna as per the order of Shri Brahma ji. When Krishna had almost finished the work of Gokul Vrindavan and after ten days the opportunity of destruction of Kansa was visible, then krishna felt that the stay of those gopas and gopis who were the incarnations of Devas in Braj was unnecessary. So Krishna sent his childhood friend gopas back to Brahmaloka on the pretext of 'Brahmavatsahan' leela and kept fake gopas at home, that is, all the Devas were reinstated in their real positions after their work was over and fake cowherds were left in Vraj. What remained were the gopi-based celestial maidens – so Krishna called them to himself on the pretext of 'Raasleela' by explaining everything with the esture of the flute and in their place fake gopis were kept .

He sent them home. In this way, with the end of his childhood leela, Krishna had concluded the period of the incarnation of the gopis who were the incarnations of the deities.

परीक्षित के प्रश्न का समन्वय

When it was confirmed in the above manner that Krishna did not touch any other woman in Raasleela but played with his own divine forms created by his Yogmaya, then naturally the curiosity arises that in such a situation what will be the relevance of the above question of Parikshit? So, this is also discussed. Parikshit asks that – Krishna has incarnated for the establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, but Raasleela has no connection with the work of establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, i.e. – this is only Babkrida = mere entertainment. So, what is the need to play with the Aptakama 'Purnakama' God by making His many forms? – 'Pardarabhimarshan' of God just for the sake of fun (- (Parasya Paramatmano Dararupinyo or Maya Shaktyasta Sambhimarshanam Baladashrayanmiti 'Brihadbhaktatoshini' Commentator:) 'Pratip' of Aptakamata – is unfavorable – what is the meaning of this? The essence of Parikshit's question is this. Rasleela is Krishna's childhood entertainment, but what was the need of Mayashrayan for the sake of fun?

If Maya-shrayan was done for establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, then it would have been in accordance with the Dharma of incarnation, but what is the meaning of creating many forms for fun? In answer to this question, Shukdev Ji explained that Brahm taking shelter of Yog-Maya only for destruction is definitely a violation of the Dharma of incarnation in the form of establishment of Dharma and destruction of Adharma, but it has been seen that the incarnations of God do this only for fun, which is not faulty. What is the need for the Paramatma to take shelter of Maya and create, maintain and destroy the universe, etc. and what is the meaning of God's will against 'full-favour' in the form of creation-destruction of the universe? The answer to this question has been given in the Vedas in this way that– न तस्य कार्य करणं च विद्यते । स्वाभाविकी ज्ञानबलक्रिया च ।। (श्वेताश्वतर ६।८) – That is, God has no specific purpose in creating and destroying the universe, but this is his natural effort.

Here (in the Vedas) it is answered that God's natural work cannot be an obstacle to 'purna-kamata'. In Shrimad Bhagwat also, Parikshit had the same question that despite being completely आप्तकाम, what was the need for God to take shelter of Yog-maya and play by taking many forms? To which the Veda-approved answer is given that it is natural for God's incarnations to take shelter of Maya for fun, and hence it cannot be an obstacle to 'purna-kamata'. Just as for God, the existence of the universe created by his own will cannot be a bondage, similarly, for the incarnations of God, the games done by his own cannot be a bondage. This is the coordination of Parikshit's question and Shukdev's answer.

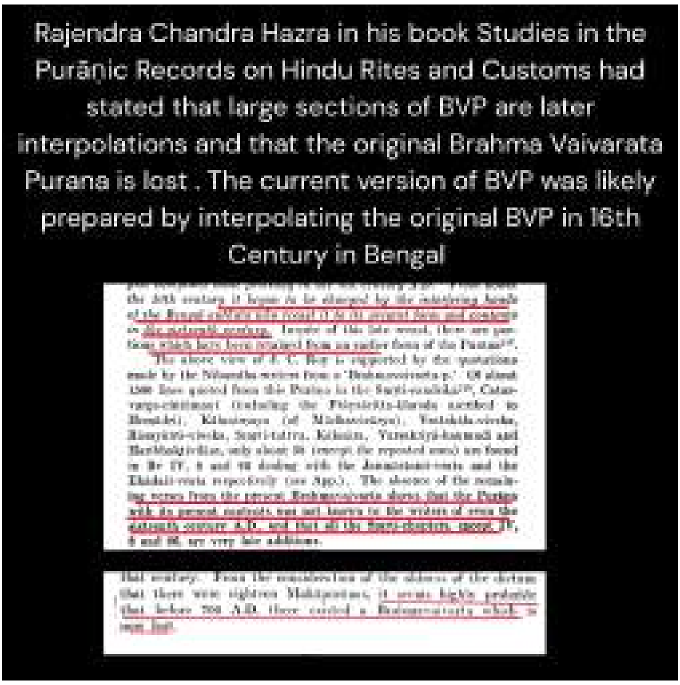
Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. Other gods also enjoyed dance of women and nymphs,

Skanda Purana V.iii.172.1-2 "Sri Markandeya said: Then all the sages and Devas with Indra at their head came to the meritorious hermitage of Mandavya on the banks of Narmada. The courtesans began to dance to the tunes of the songs of the celestial damsels. Lights shone and conchs and Dundubhi drums were sounded."

Brahmanda Purana 2.3.31.22-23 "There he saw Brahma of unmeasured prowess, seated on a beautiful throne set with gems and jewels. He was adorned with ornaments set with gems and jewels. He was surrounded by leading Siddhas and sages engaged in meditation. He was gaily and smilingly watching the dance of Vidyadhara damsels."

Skanda Purana I.iii (P).12.81-83 "Surrounded and ccompanied by sages and Devas and in accompaniment to the songs of the music party of Tumbura interspersed with the continuous dances of the celestial damsels, the Bull-emblemed Lord was seen there seated on his bull. Siva, the receptacle of sympathy, the enemy of the god of Love and great on account of his fortitude, gracefully approached Siva who was standing with the head bent low. Dispelling her bashfulness he placed her on his lap and became delighted. Accompanied by Lalita, his beloved, and surrounded by the assembly of Suras and leading sages, he witnessed the graceful dances of the celestial damsels to the accompaniment of music He repeatedly witnessed this with great eagerness."

Skanda Purana III.i.28.72-76 "Once, accompanied by all the immortal ones, the Slayer of Bala and Vrtra (i.e. Indra) was engaged in witnessing the dance of the celestial damsels in his court. King Puruavas too had come then to the court of Devas in order to witness the dance of the womenfol of Suras, the heaven-dwellers…"

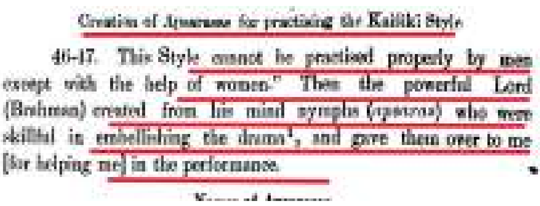
Skanda Purana III.iii.2.98a "Rambha, Ghrtaci, Menaa, Purvacittti, Tilottama, Urvasi and other celestial damsels dance before Sambhu."

Refutation-

The Puranic references describe divine gatherings where Apsaras performed Saṅgīta Kāla and Nṛtya Kāla , and these were sacred, classical presentations, not lustful entertainment. As stated in Nāṭya Śāstra 1.46–47, Brahmā created Apsaras from his mind to practise the Kaiśikī style, a refined dramatic and dance form meant to promote Saṅgīta Kāla and Nṛtya Kāla in their pure Vedic tradition. These arts—comparable to Bharatanatyam or other classical dances—were expressions of devotion, grace, and storytelling, not sensual display. The Puranic scenes describe open assemblies (sabhās) attended by sages, Devas, and Gandharvas, with music, conches, and drums—features of ritual or festive occasions. The verses contain no erotic terms like rati or kāma-vikāra, but instead use words associated with rhythm, beauty, and performance. Reading such passages through a modern lens of Bollywood-style "item dances" is a distortion; in their authentic context, they depict divine appreciation of sacred performance arts created by Brahmā for dharmic purposes, not moral transgression.

Natya Shastra 1.46-47

Creation of Apsarasas for practising the Kaiśiki Style
46-47. This Style cannot be practised properly by men except with the help of women." Then the powerful Lord (Brahman) created from his mind nymphs (apsaras) who were skillful in embellishing the drama[1], and gave them over to me [for helping me] in the performance.



Creation of Apsarasas for practising the Kaiśiki Style
46-47. This Style cannot be practised properly by men except with the help of women." Then the powerful Lord (Brahman) created from his mind nymphs (apsaras) who were skillful in embellishing the drama[1], and gave them over to me [for helping me] in the performance.

These images showcase the sacred Nṛtya Kāla and Saṅgīta Kāla performed by Apsaras, as described in the Nāṭya Śāstra (1.46–47) and Puranas. These classical Vedic dances, akin to Bharatanatyam, are profound expressions of devotion, grace, and divine storytelling, enacted in celestial assemblies to honor the cosmic order. Far from lustful entertainment, they reflect spiritual artistry created by Brahmā for dharmic purposes, and only a misinformed perspective would misinterpret their sacred beauty.

Allegations-

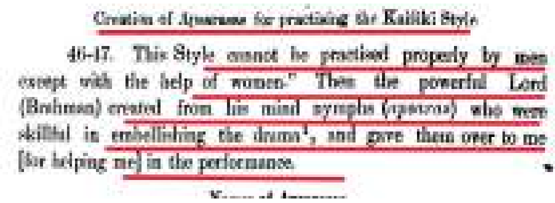
As per Ramayana of Valmiki, Uttarakhanda 7, Sarga 42, Verses 18-23 Rama the so called Maryada Purshottom (ideal man) is said to have made his wife Sita drink wine and then enjoyed the dance of women

Refutation-

While the authenticity of the Uttara Kāṇḍa is disputed—many scholars consider it a later addition to the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa due to linguistic differences and contradictions with other Kāṇḍas—even if we accept the passage in Sarga 42 (verses 18–23) as genuine, the allegation that Śrī Rāma acted in a morally questionable manner is based on a misreading of the cultural and textual context.

The text states that Rāma gave Sītā a “pavitra peyam madhu” (sacred honey drink), comparable to Indra offering nectar to Śacī. This “madhu” was a ceremonial beverage, not intoxicating liquor, often used in royal and ritual contexts. Following this, celestial maidens—Apsarās, Nāga-kanyās, and Kinnarīs—skilled in saṅgīta-kalā (music) and nṛtya-kalā (dance) performed before the royal couple. The language contains no erotic terms like rati or kāma-vikāra, but uses words linked to grace, skill, and performance.

According to Nāṭya Śāstra 1.46–47, Brahmā himself created Apsarās to practise the Kaiśikī style—a refined, devotional dramatic-dance form intended to promote saṅgīta and nṛtya in their pure Vedic tradition. Such performances, as reflected across Purāṇic descriptions, were part of sacred or festive gatherings (sabhās) attended by sages, Devas, and Gandharvas, with music, conches, and drums. They were comparable to modern classical dance forms like Bharatanāṭyam—storytelling through movement, grace, and devotion—not sensual entertainment.



Creation of Apsarases for practising the Kaiśiki Style

46-47. This Style cannot be practised properly by men except with the help of women.” Then the powerful Lord (Brahman) created from his mind nymphs (apsaras) who were skillful in embellishing the drama[1], and gave them over to me [for helping me] in the performance.

Interpreting these scenes through a modern “item dance” or Bollywood lens imposes a false anachronism. In their authentic dhārmic setting, they depict the divine appreciation of sacred performance arts created by Brahmā for upholding dharma, not any breach of morality by Śrī Rāma.

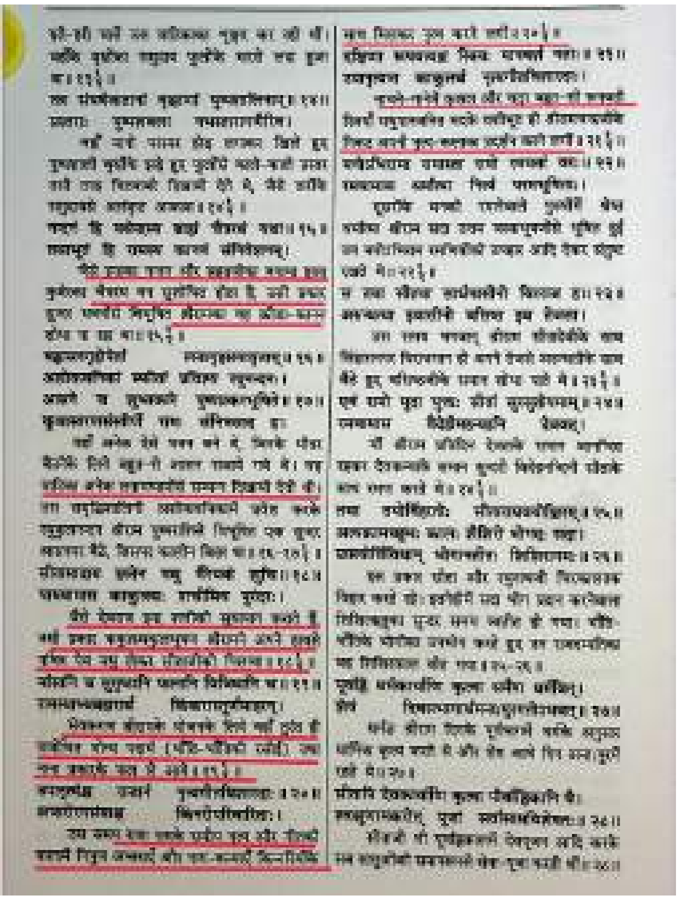
Just as Lord Indra offers nectar to Śacī, in the same way, the jewel of the Kakutstha dynasty, Śrī Rāma, took the sacred drink of honey in His own hand and gave it to Sītājī to drink. (183)
The attendants immediately brought for Śrī Rāma’s meal royal delicacies (varieties of exquisite cooked dishes) as well as many kinds of fruits. (19)
At that time, celestial nymphs skilled in dance and song, along with Nāga maidens and Kinnarīs, began to dance before King Rāma. (203)
Many beautiful women, clever and adept in dancing and singing, overcome by the exhilaration produced by drinking honey, began to display their dance skills near Śrī Rāmacandra. (213)



Srimad Bhagavatam 9/10/55-56 – Śrī Rāma, the epitome of maryādā and ekapatnī-vrata, lived as a royal sage whose pure life with chaste Sītā stands as an eternal model of dharma.

Srimad Bhagavtam 9/10/55-56

Strict in the observance of the vow of having only one wife throughout his life, leading a pious life of a royal sage, and of pure character, he himself performed strictly his duties as a householder, teaching thereby (a model life) to the world.

By her deep love, obedience, pious character, disciplined modesty, intelligence and bashfulness, the chaste queen Sītā who understood the mind of her Lord, captivated Rāma's heart.

Sex Life

Many gods especially Krishna's sex life is highly praised in the Hindu scripture. Here is how they had sex with their wives,

Krishna

Krishna with his Wives

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.90.10-11 Under the drenched clothing of the queens, their thighs and breasts would become visible. The flowers tied in their large braids would scatter as they sprayed water on their consort, and on the plea of trying to take away His syringe, they would embrace Him. By His touch their lusty feelings would increase, causing their faces to beam with smiles. Thus Lord Kṛṣṇa's queens shone with resplendent beauty. Lord Kṛṣṇa's flower garland would become smeared with kuṅkuma from their breasts, and His abundant locks of hair would become disheveled as a result of His absorption in the game. As the Lord repeatedly sprayed His young consorts and they sprayed Him in turn, He enjoyed Himself like the king of elephants enjoying in the company of his bevy of she-elephants.

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 112.34-46 "O Narada, later on, Lord Krisna in due order by turns committed sexual intercourse on the auspicious day prescribed by the Vedas with seven women, viz., Kalindi, Satyabhama, Satya, NagnaJiti, sati, Jambavati and Laksmana. In course of time, each of these seven women bore ten sons and one daughter…"

Refutation-

He accused from Shrimad Bhagavatam 10.90.10-11

9. Śrī Krsna was being drenched with jets of waters discharged through syringes by his consorts who were laugh-ing all the while. He, in return, profusely sprinkled water on them and thus he sported with his spouses like Kubera, King of Yaksas, playing with Yaksa women.

10. Their thighs and breasts became prominent to view through their wet Saris (garments). While they were sprink-ling water on Krsna, they advanced to him on the pretext of snatching away the syringe from him and embraced him. Due to a thrill of passionate desire (at the touch of Krsna's person) their countenances beamed with great pleasure and they appeared brilliant and beautiful.
11. Śrī Kṛṣṇa got his garland (Vanamālā) tinged with saffron from the breasts of his consorts (while they embraced him). The knot of his locks of hair was loosened (during that amorous sport). Sprinkling and being sprinkled with water by his youthful wives, he sported with them like a king-elephant surrounded by she-elephants (spouting jets of water on him).

Whats the problem in this ? If Shree Krishna is spending time with his queens sporting and playing games together whats any problem here . Srimad Bhagvatam 10.61.4 says Shree Krishna lived amongst his queens without any sign of Lust

4. On the contrary, those sixteen thousand wives of Krsna failed to agitate his mind with those shafts of the god of love, and other enticements conveying erotic messages by the movement of their eye-brows charming with the sentiment ex-pressed by their smiles and stealthy side-glances.

As per Garga Samhita 6.17.34 all the 16000 queens of Shree Krishna were forms of Mahalakshmi the eternal consort of Lord Vishnu himself
Whenever in the past I incarnated in the world the goddess of fortune would also incarnate as My queen. This time she will incarnate as My sixteen-thousand queens.

Srimad Bhagvatam 10.59.43 – All the 16000 Queens of Bhagwan Shree Krishna were Amsa of Maha-Lakshmi herself

43. In their mansions which surpassed all comparisons and were endowed with super-abundant affluence, the imperi-shable Lord of incomprehensible activities remained present (all the while simultaneously). Though he was perfectly satis-fied with his own bliss, he sported with those amsas (rays) of goddess Laksmi (viz. those newly wedded 16000 damsels) and like other house-holders attended to his house-hold duties

Shiva

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 46.30-44 "At that time, Parvati (who is the direct emblem of energy) and the powerful Sankara were not in the least exhausted by the above act…At that time they slept on a bed covered with flowers and with their heart animated with joy and with their bodies thrilling with raptures, they were pierced with the darts of Cupid, fainted and thus passed their days. Both of them who were expert in sexual science were rendered stark-naked through excess of pleasure; and their bodies were marked with the injuries inflicted by teeth and nails. The sandal-paste, aloe-paste and musk of their bodies and the vermillion on the forehead of Parvati disappeared; the garland of both were torn and the chignon of Gauri was relaxed. O fair one, at the time of intercourse her anklet, bracelet, anklet and earrings continued to resound…The earth being overloaded with the energy of Siva, the supporter of the world, was about to be rent asunder and quaked along with mountains, forests and oceans…" Tr. Rajendra Nath Sen

Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhitra 2, Sati Khanda 2, 21.19-24 "Sometimes Siva would become invisible through his Maya and suddenly embrace her when she would become terrified and agitated. Sometime with musk he would make marks like bees on her breasts that resembled the buds of a golden lotus. Sometimes he would take the necklace off her breasts and press them with his hands…Even as she was looking on, sometimes he would come to her lofty breasts saying with laughter, this dark spot "Kalika" on your breasts is your companion of the same colour as it contains the same letter as are found in your name 'Kalika'."

Srimad Bhagavatam 6.17.7 "Lord Śiva, whose hair is matted on his head, has certainly undergone great austerities and penances. Indeed, he is the president in the assembly of strict followers of Vedic principles. Nonetheless, he is seated with his wife on his lap in the midst of saintly persons and is embracing her as if he were a shameless, ordinary human being."

Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Kumara Khanda 4, 1.24 "For a thousand years according to the calculation of the gods, Siva the Yogin has been engaged in sexual dalliance. He does not desist from it."

Skanda Purana I.iii(P).13.11-12"On hearing these words of the Goddess, Sambhu, the Lord of Sonacala, the bestower of boons, granted everything desired by her as a boon. He was desirous of having sexual intercourse with her. Out of eagerness Siva asked her to applied the fascinated musk (to herself)."

Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Yudha Khanda 5, 51.35-43 "Then being glanced at by Kama who was not vanquished, the crescent-crested lord Siva highly indulgent in sports spoke to Nandin. Go and quickly from this forest and tell the dark complexioned Parvati everything and bring her here from Kailasa after she has bedecked herself… O excellent sage, then, at his importunity, Parvati, devoted to her husband, began to bedeck herself ardently…Siva who was extremely agitated told Nandin again. "Dear, go again and fetch Parvati from there". "Yes, sir", said he. He went to Parvati of sweet appearance and said: "Your lord wishes to see you beautifully and gorgeously dressed. O goddess, Siva is eagerly waiting for various sports. O daughter of the mountain, please go since the lord is distressed with passion."[61-62] Then the goddess Parvati bedecked herself zealously and went to Siva. She then sported with him. O sage, at the end of the dalliance Lord Siva vanished from the place accompanied by his wife, the Ganas and the gods."

Refutation-

This type of blunders occurs when one compares Maheshwar Shiva to Mortal Human beings

Shastras itself describe about the body of Maheshwar Shiva as the cosmic universe itself not a human like body – Srimad Bhagvatam 8/7/27-30

The sky represents your navel; the wind, your breath, the sun, your eyes, water, (your semen; the support of all jīvas (individual souls) elevated (like that of god Brahmā) and ordinary (like ordinary (like those of sub-human beings), is your ego; Soma or the Moon-god, your mind, and the heavens, your head.
28. The seas symbolize your abdomen, the mountains your bones; all plants and herbs your hair; the Vedic metres seven humours in your body; the dharma as enunciated in the Vedas your heart, Oh embodiment of the three Vedas.

Likewise, numerous references in the shastras describe Bhagavan and Bhagavati as chidrupa, highlighting their oneness. Those with intellect will recognize that associating human activities with them is nonsensical. Let us now explore the deeper meaning of their union.
There's a reason why Bhagavan Shiva is also referred to as Manthana – महादेवः । यथा, महाभारते । १३ । १७ ।१२८ । "मन्थानो बहुलो वायुः सकलः सर्व्वलोचनः। (कल्पद्रुम) Because he churns Jagadyoni for the manifestation of creation – भैरवे मथनासक्ते जगद्योनिः सदोदिता । त्रैलोक्यसृष्टिहेत्वर्थं मन्थानस्थो भवेत्तद । This activity itself is his love sport – क्रीडाविनोदैरतिलालसस्थं कुलामृतानन्दविधौ प्रवृत्तम् । (कुब्जिकामततन्त्रम् । तृतीय पटलः)

Even Tattvadipika commentary elaborated that that this love sport was divine and not human-like – देवस्य क्रीडतः । भावलक्षणे षष्ठी । दिव्यम् अमानुषम् ।।

Instead its mentioned here that Narayana spent some time with Ganga and roamed with Ganga . The english translators generally mistranslate the Rati-Raman word as intercourse . However that is not its primary meaning unless until explicitly stated so . Pandit Madhavacharya Shastri had given a similar explanation on Meaning of Reme and Rati as roaming . keeping in Mind that Lord Narayana does not have a material body and hence he cannot experience sexual intercourse here Rati-Raman should be interpreted as Roaming and spending time together

MANSAROVAR A HONEYMOON SPOT IN ANCIENT INDIA

Indian government spends crores of rupees for Hindu pilgrims as a subsidy to travel to Mansarovar. But this pilgrimage site namely Mansarovar was more like a honeymoon spot used by Hindu gods and sages, Srimad Bhagavatam 3.23.39-40 "In that aerial mansion he traveled to the pleasure valleys of Mount Meru, which were rendered all the more beautiful by cool, gentle, fragrant breezes that stimulated passion. In these valleys, the treasurer of the gods, Kuvera, surrounded by beautiful women and praised by the Siddhas, generally enjoys pleasure. Kardama Muni also, surrounded by the beautiful damsels and his wife, went there and enjoyed for many, many years. Satisfied by his wife, he enjoyed in that aerial mansion not only on Mount Meru but in different gardens known as Vaiśrambhaka, Surasana, Nandana, Puṣpabhadraka and Caitrarathya, and by the Mānasa-sarovara Lake."

Here is Mahabharata 3.97.14-15 that is Mahabharta Vana Parva Adhaya 97 Geeta Press Gorakhpur .

When Sage Agastya found Vidarbha's princess Lopamudra mature enough for household life, he approached the king for her hand. Though reluctant, the king agreed after Lopamudra herself consented. After marriage, Lopamudra gave up royal luxuries and adopted the simple ascetic life, serving her husband devotedly. Years later after following Strict Celibacy , when Agastya wished for union to beget children, Lopamudra modestly expressed her love but requested that their union take place in a setting like her father's palace—with ornaments, fine clothing, and comfort—rather than in ascetic simplicity. She urged him to fulfill this without compromising his penance, reminding him of his power to gather wealth without losing his virtue.

लोमशजी कहते हैं- युधिष्ठिर ! जब मुनिवर अगस्त्यजीको यह मालूम हो गया कि विदर्भराजकुमारी मेरी गृहस्थी चलानेके योग्य हो गयी है, तब वे विदर्भ-नरेशके पास जाकर बोले- ।। १ ।।

'राजन् ! पुत्रोत्पत्तिके लिये मेरा विवाह करनेका विचार है। अतः महीपाल ! मैं आपकी कन्याका वरण करता हूँ। आप लोपामुद्राको मुझे दे दीजिये' ।। २ ।।

तब विदर्भनरेश अपनी पत्नीके पास जाकर बोले- 'प्रिये ! ये महर्षि अगस्त्य बड़े शक्तिशाली हैं। यदि कुपित हों तो हमें शापकी अग्निसे भस्म कर सकते हैं' ।। ४ ।।

रानीसहित महाराजको इस प्रकार दुःखी देख लोपामुद्रा उनके पास गयी और समयके अनुसार इस प्रकार बोली- ।। ५

'राजन्! आपको मेरे लिये दुःख नहीं मानना चाहिये। पिताजी ! आप मुझे अगस्त्यजीकी सेवामें दे दें और मेरे द्वारा अपनी रक्षा करें' ।। ६ ।।

युधिष्ठिर ! पुत्रीकी यह बात सुनकर राजाने महात्मा अगस्त्यमुनिको विधिपूर्वक अपनी कन्या लोपामुद्रा ब्याह दी ।। ७ ।।

तब कदलीके समान जाँघ तथा विशाल नेत्रोंवाली लोपामुद्राने अपने बहुमूल्य, महीन एवं दर्शनीय वस्त्र उतार दिये और फटे-पुराने वस्त्र तथा वल्कल और मृगचर्म धारण कर लिये। वह विशालनयनी बाला पतिके समान ही व्रत और आचारका पालन करनेवाली हो गयी ।। ९-१० ।।

तदनन्तर मुनिश्रेष्ठ भगवान् अगस्त्य अपनी अनुकूल पत्नीके साथ गंगाद्वार (हरिद्वार)-में आकर घोर तपस्यामें संलग्न हो गये ।। ११ ।।

लोपामुद्रा बड़ी ही प्रसन्नता और विशेष आदरके साथ पतिदेवकी सेवा करने लगी। शक्तिशाली महर्षि अगस्त्यजी भी अपनी पत्नीपर बड़ा प्रेम रखते थे ।। १२ ।।

राजन्! जब इसी प्रकार बहुत समय व्यतीत हो गया, तब एक दिन भगवान् अगस्त्यमुनिने ऋतुस्नानसे निवृत्त हुई पत्नी लोपामुद्राको देखा। वह तपस्याके तेजसे प्रकाशित हो रही थी। महर्षिने अपनी पत्नीकी सेवा, पवित्रता, इन्द्रियसंयम, शोभा तथा रूप-सौन्दर्यसे प्रसन्न होकर उसे मैथुनके लिये पास बुलाया ।। १३-१४ ।।

तब अनुरागिणी लोपामुद्रा कुछ लज्जित-सी हो हाथ जोड़कर बड़े प्रेमसे भगवान् अगस्त्यसे बोली- ।। १५ ।।

'महर्षे! इसमें संदेह नहीं कि पतिदेवने अपनी इस पत्नीको संतानके लिये ही ग्रहण किया है, परंतु आपके प्रति मेरे हृदयमें जो प्रीति है, वह भी आपको सफल करनी चाहिये ।। १६ ।।

'ब्रह्मन् ! मैं अपने पिताके घर उनके महलमें जैसी शय्यापर सोया करती थी, वैसी ही शय्यापर आप मेरे साथ समागम करें ।। १७ ।।

'मैं चाहती हूँ कि आप सुन्दर हार और आभूषणोंसे विभूषित हों और मैं भी दिव्य अलंकारोंसे अलंकृत हो इच्छानुसार आपके साथ समागम-सुखका अनुभव करूँ ।। १८ ।।

अन्यथा मैं यह जीर्ण-शीर्ण काषाय-वस्त्र पहनकर आपके साथ समागम नहीं करूँगी। ब्रह्मर्षे ! तपस्वीजनोंका यह पवित्र आभूषण किसी प्रकार सम्भोग आदिके द्वारा अपवित्र नहीं होना चाहिये' ।। १९ ।।

अगस्त्यजीने कहा-सुन्दर कटिप्रदेशवाली कल्याणी लोपामुद्रे ! तुम्हारे पिताके घरमें जैसे धन-वैभव हैं, वे न तो तुम्हारे पास हैं और न मेरे ही पास (फिर ऐसा कैसे हो सकता है?) ।। २० ।।

लोपामुद्रा बोली- तपोधन! इस जीव-जगत्में जो कुछ भी धन है, वह सब क्षणभरमें ाप अपनी तपस्याके प्रभावसे जुटा लेनेमें समर्थ हैं ।। २१ ।।

लोपामुद्रा बोली- तपोधन! मेरे ऋतुकालका थोड़ा ही समय शेष रह गया है। मैं जैसा बता चुकी हूँ, उसके सिवा और किसी तरह आपसे समागम नहीं करना चाहती ।। २३ ।।

साथ ही मेरी यह भी इच्छा नहीं है कि किसी प्रकार आपके धर्मका लोप हो। इस प्रकार अपने तप एवं धर्मकी रक्षा करते हुए जिस तरह सम्भव हो उसी तरह आप मेरी इच्छा पूर्ण करें ।। २४ ।।

Lomasha said –
"O Yudhishthira! When the sage Agastya came to know that the princess of Vidarbha was now of an age suitable for managing a household, he went to the king of Vidarbha and said:

1-2.
'O King! I wish to marry for the sake of begetting children. Therefore, O ruler of men! I ask for your daughter. Please give Lopamudra to me in marriage.'

3.
Hearing these words of Sage Agastya, the king of Vidarbha was shocked and disturbed. He could neither refuse the request nor did he really desire to give his daughter.

4.
Then the king went to his queen and said:
'Dear one! This great sage Agastya is extremely powerful. If he becomes angry, he could burn us to ashes with the fire of his curse.'

5-6.
Seeing her father and mother so troubled, Lopamudra came to them and, at the proper time, said:
'Father! You should not feel sad on my account. Please give me in service to Sage Agastya, and through me protect yourselves.'

7.
O Yudhishthira! Hearing his daughter's words, the king duly gave his daughter Lopamudra in marriage to the great-souled Sage Agastya.

8.
Having obtained Lopamudra as his wife, the sage said to her:
'These garments and ornaments of yours are very precious. Remove them.'

9-10.
Then Lopamudra, with thighs like plantain stems and broad eyes, removed her fine, delicate and beautiful clothes. She put on torn, worn-out robes, bark garments and deer-skin. That wide-eyed maiden adopted the same vows and way of life as her husband.

11.
After this, the revered Sage Agastya, along with his devoted wife, came to Gangadvara (Haridwar) and engaged in intense penance.

12.
Lopamudra joyfully and with great respect began to serve her husband. The powerful Sage Agastya also cherished great affection for his wife.

13-14.
O King! After much time had passed in this way, one day Sage Agastya saw his wife Lopamudra after she had bathed at the end of her menstrual period. She was glowing with the radiance born of austerity. Pleased with her service, purity, restraint, dignity, and beauty, the sage called her near for union.

15.
Then the affectionate Lopamudra, slightly shy, with folded hands and deep love, spoke to Sage Agastya:

16.
'O Sage! There is no doubt that my husband married me for the sake of progeny. But along with that, the love that I hold in my heart for you should also be fulfilled.

17.
O holy one! I wish that you unite with me on a bed such as I used to have in my father's palace.

18.
I desire that you be adorned with beautiful garlands and ornaments, and I too be decorated with divine jewels, so that we may enjoy the bliss of union as per our desire.

19.
Otherwise, wearing these worn-out ascetic clothes, I will not unite with you. O Brahmarshi! These sacred robes of ascetics should not be defiled in any way by acts such as sexual union.'

20.
Agastya said:
'O blessed Lopamudra with a graceful waist! The wealth and luxury that existed in your father's house are neither with you nor with me. How can this be arranged?'

21.
Lopamudra replied:
'O ascetic sage! Whatever wealth there is in this world, you are capable of gathering it in a moment by the power of your penance.'

22.
Agastya said:
'Beloved! What you say is true. But by doing so, my austerity will be diminished. Tell me a way by which my penance will not be harmed.'

23.
Lopamudra said:
'O sage! Only a little time of my fertile period remains. Apart from what I have said, I do not wish to unite with you in any other way.

24.
At the same time, I do not wish that your righteousness

(dharma) be lost. Therefore, while preserving your penance and dharma, fulfill my wish in whatever way is possible.'

सप्तनवतितमोऽध्यायः

महर्षि अगस्त्यका लोपामुद्रासे विवाह, गंगाद्वारमें तपस्या एवं पत्नीकी इच्छासे धनसंग्रहके लिये प्रस्थान

लोमश उवाच

यदा त्वमन्यतागस्त्यो गार्हस्थ्ये तां क्षमामिति ।
तदाभिगम्य प्रोवाच वैदर्भं पृथिवीपतिम् ॥ १ ॥

लोमशजी कहते हैं—युधिष्ठिर! जब मुनिवर अगस्त्यजीको यह मालूम हो गया कि विदर्भराजकुमारी मेरी गृहस्थी चलानेके योग्य हो गयी है, तब वे विदर्भ-नरेशके पास जाकर बोले— ॥ १ ॥

राजन् निवेशो बुद्धिर्मे वर्तते पुत्रकारणात् ।
वरये त्वां महीपाल लोपामुद्रां प्रयच्छ मे ॥ २ ॥

'राजन्! पुत्रोत्पत्तिके लिये मेरा विवाह करनेका विचार है। अतः महीपाल! मैं आपकी कन्याका वरण करता हूँ। आप लोपामुद्राको मुझे दे दीजिये' ॥ २ ॥

एवमुक्तः स मुनिना महीपालो विचेतनः ।
प्रत्याख्यानाय चाशक्तः प्रदातुं चैव नैच्छत ॥ ३ ॥

मुनिवर अगस्त्यके ऐसा कहनेपर विदर्भराजके होश उड़ गये। वे न तो अस्वीकार कर सके और न उन्होंने अपनी कन्या देनेकी इच्छा ही की ॥ ३ ॥

ततः स भार्यामभ्येत्य प्रोवाच पृथिवीपतिः ।
महर्षिर्वीर्यवानेष क्रुद्धः शापाग्निना दहेत् ॥ ४ ॥

तब विदर्भनरेश अपनी पत्नीके पास जाकर बोले—'प्रिये! ये महर्षि अगस्त्य बड़े शक्तिशाली हैं। यदि कुपित हों तो हमें शापकी अग्निसे भस्म कर सकते हैं' ॥ ४ ॥

तं तथा दुःखितं दृष्ट्वा सभार्यं पृथिवीपतिम् ।
लोपामुद्राभिगम्येदं काले वचनमब्रवीत् ॥ ५ ॥

रानीसहित महाराजको इस प्रकार दुःखी देख लोपामुद्रा उनके पास गयी और समयके अनुसार इस प्रकार बोली— ॥ ५ ॥

न मत्कृते महीपाल पीडामभ्येतुमर्हसि ।
प्रयच्छ मामगस्त्याय त्राह्यात्मानं मया पितः ॥ ६ ॥

'राजन्! आपको मेरे लिये दुःख नहीं मानना चाहिये। पिताजी! आप मुझे अगस्त्यजीकी सेवामें दे दें और मेरे द्वारा अपनी रक्षा करें' ॥ ६ ॥

दुहितुर्वचनाद् राजा सोऽगस्त्याय महात्मने ।
लोपामुद्रां ततः प्रादाद् विधिपूर्वं विशाम्पते ॥ ७ ॥

युधिष्ठिर! पुत्रीकी यह बात सुनकर राजाने महात्मा अगस्त्यमुनिको विधिपूर्वक अपनी कन्या लोपामुद्रा ब्याह दी ॥ ७ ॥

प्राप्य भार्यामगस्त्यस्तु लोपामुद्रामभाषत ।
महार्हाण्युत्सृजैतानि वासांस्याभरणानि च ॥ ८ ॥

लोपामुद्राको पत्नीरूपमें पाकर महर्षि अगस्त्यने उससे कहा—'ये तुम्हारे वस्त्र और आभूषण बहुमूल्य हैं। इन्हें उतार दो' ॥ ८ ॥

ततः सा दर्शनीयानि महार्हाणि तनूनि च ।
समुत्ससर्ज रम्भोरुर्वसनान्यायतेक्षणा ॥ ९ ॥
ततश्चीराणि जग्राह वल्कलान्यजिनानि च ।
समानव्रतचर्या च बभूवायतलोचना ॥ १० ॥

तब कदलीके समान जाँघ तथा विशाल नेत्रोंवाली लोपामुद्राने अपने बहुमूल्य, महीन एवं दर्शनीय वस्त्र उतार दिये और फटे-पुराने वस्त्र तथा वल्कल और मृगचर्म धारण कर लिये। वह विशालनयनी बाला पतिके समान ही व्रत और आचारका पालन करनेवाली हो गयी ॥ ९-१० ॥

गङ्गाद्वारमथागम्य भगवानृषिसत्तमः ।
उग्रमातिष्ठत तपः सह पत्न्यानुकूलया ॥ ११ ॥

तदनन्तर मुनिश्रेष्ठ भगवान् अगस्त्य अपनी अनुकूल पत्नीके साथ गंगाद्वार (हरिद्वार)-में आकर घोर तपस्यामें संलग्न हो गये ॥ ११ ॥

सा प्रीत्या बहुमानाच्च पतिं पर्यचरत् तदा ।
अगस्त्यश्च परां प्रीतिं भार्यायामकरोत् प्रभुः ॥ १२ ॥

लोपामुद्रा बड़ी ही प्रसन्नता और विशेष आदरके साथ पतिदेवकी सेवा करने लगी। शक्तिशाली महर्षि अगस्त्यजी भी अपनी पत्नीपर बड़ा प्रेम रखते थे ॥ १२ ॥

ततो बहुतिथे काले लोपामुद्रां विशाम्पते ।
तपसा द्योतितां स्नातां ददर्श भगवानृषिः ॥ १३ ॥
स तस्याः परिचारेण शौचेन च दमेन च ।
श्रिया रूपेण च प्रीतो मैथुनायाजुहाव ताम् ॥ १४ ॥

राजन्! जब इसी प्रकार बहुत समय व्यतीत हो गया, तब एक दिन भगवान् अगस्त्यमुनिने ऋतुस्नानसे निवृत्त हुई पत्नी लोपामुद्राको देखा। वह तपस्याके तेजसे प्रकाशित हो रही थी। महर्षिने अपनी पत्नीकी सेवा, पवित्रता, इन्द्रियसंयम, शोभा तथा रूप-सौन्दर्यसे प्रसन्न होकर उसे मैथुनके लिये पास बुलाया ॥ १३-१४ ॥

तब अनुरागिणी लोपामुद्रा कुछ लज्जित-सी हो हाथ जोड़कर बड़े प्रेमसे भगवान् अगस्त्यसे बोली— ॥ १५ ॥

असंशयं प्रजाहेतोर्भार्यां पतिरविन्दत ।
या तु त्वयि मम प्रीतिस्तामृषे कर्तुमर्हसि ॥ १६ ॥

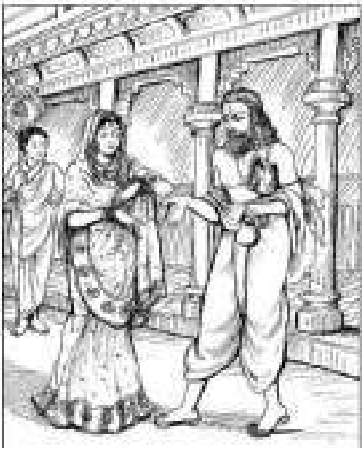
'महर्षे! इसमें संदेह नहीं कि पतिदेवने अपनी इस पत्नीको संतानके लिये ही ग्रहण किया है, परंतु आपके प्रति मेरे हृदयमें जो प्रीति है, वह भी आपको सफल करनी चाहिये ॥ १६ ॥

यथा पितुर्गृहे विप्र प्रासादे शयनं मम ।
तथाविधे त्वं शयने मामुपैतुमिहार्हसि ॥ १७ ॥

'ब्रह्मन्! मैं अपने पिताके घर उनके महलमें जैसी शय्यापर सोया करती थी, वैसी ही शय्यापर आप मेरे साथ समागम करें ॥ १७ ॥

इच्छामि त्वां स्रग्विणं च भूषणैश्च विभूषितम् ।
उपसर्तुं यथाकामं दिव्याभरणभूषिता ॥ १८ ॥

'मैं चाहती हूँ कि आप सुन्दर हार और आभूषणोंसे विभूषित हों और मैं भी दिव्य अलंकारोंसे अलंकृत हो इच्छानुसार आपके साथ समागम-सुखका अनुभव करूँ ॥ १८ ॥



अन्यथा नोपतिष्ठेयं चीरकाषायवासिनी ।
नैवापवित्रो विप्रर्षे भूषणोऽयं कथंचन ॥ १९ ॥

'अन्यथा मैं यह जीर्ण-शीर्ण काषाय-वस्त्र पहनकर आपके साथ समागम नहीं करूँगी। ब्रह्मर्षे! तपस्वीजनोंका यह पवित्र आभूषण किसी प्रकार सम्भोग आदिके द्वारा अपवित्र नहीं होना चाहिये' ॥ १९ ॥

अगस्त्य उवाच

न वै धनानि विद्यन्ते लोपामुद्रे तथा मम ।
यथाविधानि कल्याणि पितुस्तव सुमध्यमे ॥ २० ॥

अगस्त्यजीने कहा—सुन्दर कटिप्रदेशवाली कल्याणी लोपामुद्रे! तुम्हारे पिताके घरमें जैसे धन-वैभव हैं, वे न तो तुम्हारे पास हैं और न मेरे ही पास (फिर ऐसा कैसे हो सकता है?) ॥ २० ॥

लोपामुद्रोवाच

ईशोऽसि तपसा सर्वं समाहर्तुं तपोधन ।
क्षणेन जीवलोके यद् वसु किंचन विद्यते ॥ २१ ॥

लोपामुद्रा बोली—तपोधन! इस जीव-जगत्‌में जो कुछ भी धन है, वह सब क्षणभरमें आप अपनी तपस्याके प्रभावसे जुटा लेनेमें समर्थ हैं ॥ २१ ॥

अगस्त्य उवाच

एवमेतद् यथाऽऽत्थ त्वं तपोव्ययकरं तु तत् ।
यथा तु मे न नश्येत तपस्तन्मां प्रचोदय ॥ २२ ॥

अगस्त्यजीने कहा—प्रिये! तुम्हारा कथन ठीक है। परंतु ऐसा करनेसे तपस्याका क्षय होगा। मुझे ऐसा कोई उपाय बताओ, जिससे मेरी तपस्या क्षीण न हो ॥ २२ ॥

लोपामुद्रोवाच

अल्पावशिष्टः कालोऽयमृतौ मम तपोधन ।
न चान्यथाहमिच्छामि त्वामुपैतुं कथंचन ॥ २३ ॥

लोपामुद्रा बोली—तपोधन! मेरे ऋतुकालका थोड़ा ही समय शेष रह गया है। मैं जैसा बता चुकी हूँ, उसके सिवा और किसी तरह आपसे समागम नहीं करना चाहती ॥ २३ ॥

न चापि धर्ममिच्छामि विलोप्तुं ते कथंचन ।
एवं तु मे यथाकामं सम्पादयितुमर्हसि ॥ २४ ॥

साथ ही मेरी यह भी इच्छा नहीं है कि किसी प्रकार आपके धर्मका लोप हो। इस प्रकार अपने तप एवं धर्मकी रक्षा करते हुए जिस तरह सम्भव हो उसी तरह आप मेरी इच्छा पूर्ण करें ॥ २४ ॥

In response to his false allegations regarding Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 3.23.39–40, here is the Hindi translation from Gita Press, Gorakhpur. It clearly states that Sage Kardama and his wife Devahuti spent their time together, joyfully visiting the celestial gardens of Vaishrambhaka, Surasana, Nandana, Pushpabhadra, Chaitraratha, and also the sacred Manasa lake. Nowhere does the text explicitly describe any act of sexual intercourse. Is there anything wrong if a legally married husband and wife spend time together with love and affection? This is all that the verses describe—companionship, not anything immoral.

शत्रुविजयी विदुर ! जब कर्दमजीने देखा कि देवहूतिका शरीर स्नान करनेसे अत्यन्त निर्मल हो गया है, और विवाहकालसे पूर्व उसका जैसा रूप था, उसी रूपको पाकर वह अपूर्व शोभासे सम्पन्न हो गयी है। उसका सुन्दर वक्षःस्थल चोलीसे ढका हुआ है, हजारों विद्याधरियाँ उसकी सेवामें लगी हुई हैं तथा उसके शरीरपर बढ़िया-बढ़िया वस्त्र शोभा पा रहे हैं, तब उन्होंने बड़े प्रेमसे उसे विमानपर चढ़ाया ।।३६-३७।।
उस समय अपनी प्रियाके प्रति अनुरक्त होनेपर भी कर्दमजीकी महिमा (मन और इन्द्रियोंपर प्रभुता) कम नहीं हुई। विद्याधरियाँ उनके शरीरकी सेवा कर रही थीं। खिले हुए कुमुदके फूलोंसे शृंगार करके अत्यन्त सुन्दर बने हुए वे विमानपर इस प्रकार शोभा पा रहे थे, मानो आकाशमें तारागणसे घिरे हुए चन्द्रदेव विराजमान हों ।। ३८।। उस विमानपर निवासकर उन्होंने दीर्घकालतक कुबेरजीके समान मेरुपर्वतकी घाटियोंमें विहार किया। ये घाटियाँ आठों लोकपालोंकी विहारभूमि हैं; इनमें कामदेवको बढ़ानेवाली शीतल, मन्द, सुगन्ध वायु चलकर इनकी कमनीय शोभाका विस्तार करती है तथा श्रीगंगाजीके स्वर्गलोकसे गिरनेकी मंगलमय ध्वनि निरन्तर गूँजती रहती है। उस समय भी दिव्य विद्याधरियोंका समुदाय उनकी सेवामें उपस्थित था और सिद्धगण वन्दना किया करते थे ।।३९।।

O Vidura, conqueror of enemies!
When Sage Kardama saw that after bathing, Devahuti's body had become exceedingly pure, and that she had regained the same beauty and radiance she had before her marriage, he beheld her adorned with rare charm. Her lovely bosom was covered with a blouse, thousands of celestial maidens (Vidyādharīs) were attending on her, and her body was graced with fine garments. Filled with great love, he seated her upon the aerial chariot. (36–37)

At that time, even though he was deeply affectionate towards his beloved wife, Kardama's greatness – his mastery over mind and senses – did not diminish. Celestial maidens served him as well. Adorned with blooming white water lilies, and made exceedingly beautiful, that aerial chariot shone in the sky as if the Moon himself were surrounded by countless stars. (38)

Dwelling in that chariot, Kardama, like Kubera, wandered for a long time through the valleys of Mount Meru. These valleys are the playgrounds of the eight guardian deities of the directions; there, cool, gentle, and fragrant breezes stir the spirit of love, and the auspicious sound of the holy Ganga descending from heaven continually reverberates. Even then, hosts of celestial maidens remained in their service, and the Siddhas offered them their reverence. (39)

In this way, with his beloved Devahuti, he sported with love in many divine pleasure gardens such as Vaishrambhaka, Surasana, Nandana, Pushpabhadra, Chaitraratha, and also at the Manasa lake. (40)

Riding in that splendid aerial chariot, which moved at will, they traveled swiftly like the wind to all the worlds, surpassing even the gods who travel by air. (41)

O Vidura! For those steadfast men who have taken refuge in the holy lotus feet of the Supreme Lord, the destroyer of the fear of worldly existence, what object or power is ever unattainable? (42)

समझकर देवहूतिको बड़ा विस्मय हुआ ।।३५।।

शत्रुविजयी विदुरजी! जब कर्दमजीने देखा कि देवहूतिका शरीर स्नान करनेसे अत्यन्त निर्मल हो गया है, और विवाहकालसे पूर्व उसका जैसा रूप था, उसी रूपको पाकर वह अपूर्व शोभासे सम्पन्न हो गयी है। उसका सुन्दर वक्षःस्थल चोलीसे ढका हुआ है, हजारों विद्याधरियाँ उसकी सेवामें लगी हुई हैं तथा उसके शरीरपर बढ़िया-बढ़िया वस्त्र शोभा पा रहे हैं, तब उन्होंने बड़े प्रेमसे उसे विमानपर चढ़ाया ।।३६-३७।।

उस विमानपर निवासकर उन्होंने दीर्घकालतक कुबेरजीके समान मेरुपर्वतकी घाटियोंमें विहार किया। वे घाटियाँ आठों लोकपालोंकी विहारभूमि हैं; इनमें कामदेवको बढ़ानेवाली शीतल, मन्द, सुगन्ध वायु चलकर इनकी कमनीय शोभाका विस्तार करती है तथा श्रीगंगाजीके स्वर्गलोकसे गिरनेकी मंगलमय ध्वनि निरन्तर गूँजती रहती है। उस समय भी दिव्य विद्याधरियोंका समुदाय उनकी सेवामें उपस्थित था और सिद्धगण वन्दना किया करते थे ।।३९।।

Coming on to his another baseless allegations on Mahabharat 1.157.22-31 here is Mahabharata Adi Parva Adhaya 157 slokas 22-31 geeta Press Gorakhpur volume 1 page 1143/2256 . I dont understand whats the problem with this ? What problem does this Halala Putra follower of Pedophile Rapist Prophet who raped a 9 year old Girl has with this simple Story ? I mean you can read it there is nothing so called objectionable thing in the entire text.

ब्रह्मन्! पुत्रवती स्त्रियाँ यदि अपने पतिसे पहले ही मृत्युको प्राप्त हो जायँ तो यह उनके लिये परम सौभाग्यकी बात है। धर्मज्ञ विद्वान् ऐसा ही मानते हैं ।। २२ ।।

पिता, माता और पुत्र- ये सब परिमित मात्रामें ही सुख देते हैं, अपरिमित सुखको देनेवाला तो केवल पति है। ऐसे पतिका कौन स्त्री आदर नहीं करेगी?

आर्यपुत्र ! आपके लिये मैंने यह पुत्र और पुत्री भी छोड़ दी, समस्त बन्धु-बान्धवोंको भी छोड़ दिया और अब अपना यह जीवन भी त्याग देनेको उद्यत हूँ ।। २३ ।।

स्त्री यदि सदा अपने स्वामीके प्रिय और हितमें लगी रहे तो यह उसके लिये बड़े-बड़े यज्ञों, तपस्याओं, नियमों और नाना प्रकारके दानोंसे भी बढ़कर है ।। २४ ।।

अतः मैं जो यह कार्य करना चाहती हूँ, यह श्रेष्ठ पुरुषोंसे सम्मत धर्म है और आपके तथा इस कुलके लिये सर्वथा अनुकूल एवं हितकारक है ।। २५ ।।

अनुकूल संतान, धन, प्रिय, सुहृद् तथा पत्नी- ये सभी आपद्धर्मसे छूटनेके लिये ही वांछनीय हैं; ऐसा साधु पुरुषोंका मत है ।। २६ ।।

आपत्तिके लिये धनकी रक्षा करे, धनके द्वारा स्त्रीकी रक्षा करे और स्त्री तथा धन दोनोंके द्वारा सदा अपनी रक्षा करे ।। २७ ।।

एक ओर सम्पूर्ण कुल हो और दूसरी ओर उस कुलकी वृद्धि करनेवाला शरीर हो तो उन दोनोंकी तुलना करनेपर वह सारा कुल उस शरीरके बराबर नहीं हो सकता; यह विद्वानोंका निश्चय है ।। २९ ।।

आर्य ! अतः आप मेरे द्वारा अभीष्ट कार्यकी सिद्धि कीजिये और स्वयं प्रयत्न करके अपनेको इस संकटसे बचाइये। मुझे राक्षसके पास जानेकी आज्ञा दीजिये और मेरे दोनों बच्चोंका पालन कीजिये ।। ३० ।।

धर्मज्ञ विद्वानोंने धर्म-निर्णयके प्रसंगमें नारीको अवध्य बताया है। राक्षसोंको भी लोग धर्मज्ञ कहते हैं। इसलिये सम्भव है, वह राक्षस भी मुझे स्त्री समझकर न मारे ।। ३१ ।।

पुरुष वहाँ जायँ, तो वह राक्षस उनका वध कर ही डालेगा इसमें संशय नहीं है; परंतु स्त्रियोंके वधमें संदेह है। (यदि राक्षसने धर्मका विचार किया तो मेरे बच जानेकी आशा है) अतः धर्मज्ञ आर्यपुत्र ! आप मुझे ही वहाँ भेजें ।। ३२ ।।

मैंने सब प्रकारके भोग भोग लिये, मनको प्रिय लगनेवाली वस्तुएँ प्राप्त कर लीं, महान् धर्मका अनुष्ठान भी पूरा कर लिया और आपसे प्यारी संतान भी प्राप्त कर ली। अब यदि मेरी मृत्यु भी हो जाय तो उससे मुझे दुःख न होगा ।। ३३ ।।

“O noble one! For a woman who dies before her husband, while having children, it is considered the highest good fortune. The learned and righteous declare it to be so. (22)

Father, mother, and children give only limited happiness; but a husband is the giver of boundless joy. Which woman would not honor such a husband?

O son of the noble lineage! For your sake I have left behind this son and daughter, I have left all relatives and kin, and now I am ready to even give up my own life. (23)

For a wife, being always devoted to what pleases her husband and is beneficial for him is greater than performing great sacrifices, penances, vows, or giving away all kinds of charity. (24)

Therefore, what I wish to do is in accordance with the dharma approved by the noble ones. It is wholly proper and beneficial both for you and for this family. (25)

Good children, wealth, friends, loving relatives, and a wife—these are all to be desired only as supports to overcome times of calamity. Such is the opinion of the virtuous. (26)

In times of danger one should protect wealth; with wealth one should protect the wife; and with both wealth and wife, one must always protect oneself. (27)

Wife, children, wealth, and home—all these things are to be gathered for both seen (worldly) and unseen (spiritual) benefits. This is the decision of the learned. (28)

If on one side is the entire family, and on the other side the very body which sustains and grows that family, when the two are weighed, the entire family is not equal to the body. This is the firm view of the wise. (29)

O noble one! Therefore, please fulfill the task I wish to undertake and by your own effort save yourself from this danger. Permit me to go to the demon, and you take care of our two children. (30)

The learned in dharma have declared that a woman is not to be slain. Even demons are known to be aware of dharma. Therefore, there is a possibility that this demon too may see me as a woman and not kill me. (31)

If a man goes there, there is no doubt that the demon will certainly kill him; but in the case of a woman, there is at least some uncertainty. (If the demon considers dharma, there is a chance I might be spared.) Hence, O righteous noble one, you should send me there. (32)

I have enjoyed all forms of pleasures, obtained all things that please the mind, performed great acts of dharma, and received from you beloved children. Now, even if I die, it will not bring me sorrow. (33)

व्युष्टिरेषा परा स्त्रीणां पूर्वं भर्तुः परां गतिम् ।
गन्तुं ब्रह्मन् सपुत्राणामिति धर्मविदो विदुः ।। २२ ।।

ब्रह्मन्! पुत्रवती स्त्रियाँ यदि अपने पतिसे पहले ही मृत्युको प्राप्त हो जायँ तो यह उनके लिये परम सौभाग्यकी बात है। धर्मज्ञ विद्वान् ऐसा ही मानते हैं ।। २२ ।।

(मितं ददाति हि पिता मितं माता मितं सुतः ।
अमितस्य हि दातारं का पतिं नाभिनन्दति ।।)

पिता, माता और पुत्र—ये सब परिमित मात्रामें ही सुख देते हैं, अपरिमित सुखको देनेवाला तो केवल पति है। ऐसे पतिका कौन स्त्री आदर नहीं करेगी?

परित्यक्तः सुतश्चायं दुहितेयं तथा मया ।
बान्धवाश्च परित्यक्तास्त्वदर्थं जीवितं च मे ।। २३ ।।

आर्यपुत्र! आपके लिये मैंने यह पुत्र और पुत्री भी छोड़ दी, समस्त बन्धु-बान्धवोंको भी छोड़ दिया और अब अपना यह जीवन भी त्याग देनेको उद्यत हूँ ।। २३ ।।

यज्ञैस्तपोभिर्नियमैर्दानैश्च विविधैस्तथा ।
विशिष्यते स्त्रिया भर्तुर्नित्यं प्रियहिते स्थितिः ।। २४ ।।

स्त्री यदि सदा अपने स्वामीके प्रिय और हितमें लगी रहे तो यह उसके लिये बड़े-बड़े यज्ञों, तपस्याओं, नियमों और नाना प्रकारके दानोंसे भी बढ़कर है ।। २४ ।।

तदिदं यच्चिकीर्षामि धर्मं परमसम्मतम् ।
इष्टं चैव हितं चैव तव चैव कुलस्य च ।। २५ ।।

अतः मैं जो यह कार्य करना चाहती हूँ, यह श्रेष्ठ पुरुषोंसे सम्मत धर्म है और आपके तथा इस कुलके लिये सर्वथा अनुकूल एवं हितकारक है ।। २५ ।।

इष्टानि चाप्यपत्यानि द्रव्याणि सुहृदः प्रियाः ।
आपद्धर्मप्रमोक्षाय भार्या चापि सतां मतम् ।। २६ ।।

अनुकूल संतान, धन, प्रिय, सुहृद् तथा पत्नी—ये सभी आपद्धर्मसे छूटनेके लिये ही वाञ्छनीय हैं; ऐसा साधु पुरुषोंका मत है ।। २६ ।।

आपदर्थं धनं रक्षेद् दारान् रक्षेद् धनैरपि ।
आत्मानं सततं रक्षेद् दारैरपि धनैरपि ।। २७ ।।

आपत्तिके लिये धनकी रक्षा करे, धनके द्वारा स्त्रीकी रक्षा करे और स्त्री तथा धन दोनोंके द्वारा सदा अपनी रक्षा करे ।। २७ ।।

दृष्टादृष्टफलार्थं हि भार्या पुत्रो धनं गृहम् ।
सर्वमेतद् विधातव्यं बुधानामेष निश्चयः ।। २८ ।।

पत्नी, पुत्र, धन और घर—ये सब वस्तुएँ दृष्ट और अदृष्ट फल (लौकिक और पारलौकिक लाभ)-के लिये संग्रहणीय हैं। विद्वानोंका यह निश्चय है ।। २८ ।।

एकतो वा कुलं कृत्स्नमात्मा वा कुलवर्धनः ।
न समं सर्वमेवेति बुधानामेष निश्चयः ।। २९ ।।

एक ओर सम्पूर्ण कुल हो और दूसरी ओर उस कुलकी वृद्धि करनेवाला शरीर हो तो उन दोनोंकी तुलना करनेपर वह सारा कुल उस शरीरके बराबर नहीं हो सकता; यह विद्वानोंका निश्चय है ।। २९ ।।

स कुरुष्व मया कार्यं तारयात्मानमात्मना ।
अनुजानीहि मामार्य सुतौ मे परिपालय ।। ३० ।।

आर्य! अतः आप मेरे द्वारा अभीष्ट कार्यकी सिद्धि कीजिये और स्वयं प्रयत्न करके अपनेको इस संकटसे बचाइये। मुझे राक्षसके पास जानेकी आज्ञा दीजिये और मेरे दोनों बच्चोंका पालन कीजिये ।। ३० ।।

अवध्यां स्त्रियमित्याहुर्धर्मज्ञा धर्मनिश्चये ।
धर्मज्ञान् राक्षसानाहुर्न हन्यात् स च मामपि ।। ३१ ।।

धर्मज्ञ विद्वानोंने धर्म-निर्णयके प्रसंगमें नारीको अवध्य बताया है। राक्षसोंको भी लोग धर्मज्ञ कहते हैं। इसलिये सम्भव है, वह राक्षस भी मुझे स्त्री समझकर न मारे ।। ३१ ।।

निस्संशयो वधः पुंसां स्त्रीणां संशयितो वधः ।
अतो मामेव धर्मज्ञ प्रस्थापयितुमर्हसि ।। ३२ ।।

Sex Slaves

There is a story mentioned in Matsya Purana which tells us how the Devas used to capture women of non-Hindus (considered demons here) and forced them into prostitution. Can the Hindu digest these verses and show them to others so that everyone may know what Hinduism is really about? The verses are pretty clear and are self-explanatory s so I won't be explaining or summarizing them,

Matsya Purana 70.26-30 "Once upon a time thousands and thousands of the demons (Danavas, Asuras, Daityas and Raksasas) were killed in the war between the Devas and the demons. Indra told their numberless widows and those women who were forcibly seized and enjoyed, to lead the life of prostitutes and remain devoted to the kings and the Devas. Indra continued, 'You should look upon, with equal eye, the kings your masters and on Sudra. All of you will attain prosperity, according to your fate. You should satisfy those who would come to you with adequate sum of money to enjoy your company, even if they be poor. "

Indra told the widows of Demons (Non-Hindus) how they should lead their prostitution life,

Matsya Purana 70.44-45 "That Brahmana should be well fed and be devoutly looked upon as cupid, for the sake of sexual enjoyment. Each and every desire of that Brahmana should be satisfied by the woman devote. She should, with all heart and soul and with a smile on her face, yield herself up to him."

Matsya Purana 70.56-59 "Henceforth, any Brahmana coming to them for the sake of sexual enjoyment on a Sunday, should be respected and honoured. If with the consent of that Brahmana, another handsome person come to them, these women should, with love and affection and to the best of their ability, perform all the fiftyeight kinds of observances of Love, favourite of man and gods, which would lead to pregnancy and which is not harmful to their soul's welfare. When the thirteenth month arrives, that woman should present to the designated Brahmana an excellent bed equipped with all necessary items.
This bed should be furnished with a mattress, a bedsheet, a soft pillow for resting, and be pleasing in appearance.

Along with this bed, she should also give a lamp, footwear, an umbrella, wooden sandals (khaḍāu), and a sitting mat.

At that time, she should adorn that Brahmana and his wife with fine garments, a golden chain, a ring, a bracelet, many garlands of flowers, and sandal paste.
Then, on a copper plate placed over a pot filled with jaggery (gur), she should install an image of Kamadeva (the god of love) together with his consort, cover it with golden eye-ornaments (netrāchchhādana, i.e., small gold coverings for the eyes of the idol).

Beside them, she should place a bronze vessel and sugarcane.

As discussed in this article in the Rape category under the sub-category Rape and Abduction is legitimized, that Hinduism permits Rakshasa form of marriage for the Kshatriya caste, It can be considered rape because it is done after the family of the girl is slain and she is forcibly taken away, Mahabharata 13.44 says that bridegroom may forcibly take away the girl he likes to marry even after killing or beheading the girl's kinsmen and Manu Smriti 3.33 says that sometimes the girl forcibly taken away may cry and weep and this is permitted in Mahabharata 1.73.

In marriages other than the Brahma and similar approved types—i.e., in Gandharva and others—the children speak harshly and untruthfully.
'Harsh' refers to vulgar or abusive language used toward mother, sister, etc.
'Untruthful' refers to lies and well-known dishonesty.
The etymology of 'nṛśaṁsa-anṛta' (cruel and false) is given as those whose nature is to say such things.
'Brahma-dharma' refers to Vedic dharma and the meaning of the Vedas; these people either hate, criticize, or do not believe in it.
Therefore, such marriages are to be condemned."

This verse presents a summary of the results of various types of marriages.
The children (progeny such as sons) born from those marriages which are scripturally sanctioned (अनिन्दित, unblameworthy) are themselves unblameworthy and praiseworthy.
The ones born from condemned (निन्दित) and prohibited (प्रतिषिद्ध) marriages are blameworthy.
Therefore, since such condemned marriages result in sorrow-bringing progeny, one should avoid such condemned marriages."

Through deserving (scripturally appropriate) marriage forms, men obtain an unblameworthy lineage.

He highlights the defects in the four other forms (excluding Brahma, Daiva, Arsha, and Prajapatya).
The word 'śiṣṭeṣu avaśiṣṭeṣu' refers to the remaining unapproved forms.
'Nṛśaṁsa' means cruel, either by action or by nature.
'Brahma' here refers to the Veda, the Brahmin caste, or Vedic dharma like Agnihotra, all of which these offspring tend to despise."

"Just as the logic of 'A mountain does not cry' implies that a non-mountain does, this verse also implies a prohibition of blameworthy marriages by praising the unblameworthy ones (अनिन्दितैः).
Just as in statements like 'he who sings is blessed', there's an implied directive.
So too, this verse implies that one should undertake only unblameworthy marriages; the prohibition of blameworthy ones is conveyed indirectly (arthavāda — a laudatory or cautionary statement with implied command)."

Refutation-

Now coming to Narada Smriti 12.78 we have to see the context . Narada Smriti 12.70-80 talks about premarital sex . Narada Smriti 12.71-72 clearly states that if you have sex with a woman without her consent then you will be given death penalty and your penis and fingers will be cut . Verse 72 states if you have sex with a woman with her consent then there is nothing wrong but you will have to marry her then .Narada Smriti 12.73-75 talks about relations with whom you cant have sex like your mother , daughter etc and punishment for it if you have forbidden intercourse like cutting the penis . Narada Smriti 12.78 says you can have sex with your Dasi (Female Employee) or a woman of lower varna but condition being this relationship must be wit consent and you must marry that woman after that compulsorily .

A learned man should not engage in sexual intercourse before marriage; otherwise, he is considered guilty of breaking the vow of celibacy. In such a case, he should perform expiation. He should neither look at another man's wife nor sit with her alone on the same seat. He should always keep his senses under control and remain pure in mind even in dreams.

In Mahabharat 13/141/25-26 Maheshwar Shiva himself told to avoid the contact of other men wives as a sign of Dharma

Shri Maheshwara (Lord Shiva) said –
O Devi! Not causing harm to any living being, speaking the truth, showing compassion to all creatures, controlling the mind and senses, and giving charity according to one's capacity — these are the noble duties of a householder (Grihastha Ashrama). (Verse 25)

Maintaining these duties of household life —
Staying away from relations with another's wife, protecting entrusted goods and the honor of women, not taking anything without giving in return, and renouncing meat and alcohol — these are five types (aspects) of Dharma that lead to happiness.
Each of these Dharmic principles has many branches.
Those who consider Dharma to be supreme should certainly follow this virtuous and meritorious path.

Refutation–

Here is correct translation of Agni Purana 211.37-43 It mentions Dasi who are maid servants not slaves . There is a large Earth-Sky difference between Slaves and Dasi . Dasa/Dasi are paid salary for their works while Slaves are forced to do unpaid labour without any salary

39-40. One who gives a maid servant to an excellent brahmin would reach the world of nymphs. Having given a copper plate weighing five hundred palas (a measure of weight) or half the weight or a quarter of that weight or one-eighth of the weight would get enjoyment and emancipation. By giving a cart together with a bull one would go to heaven by means of a cart.

2. Lexical Meaning from Amarakośa:

वेतनम् । इत्यमरः । २।१०।३८ ॥

“Vetanam” (वेतनम्) means wages, salary, or remuneration.
This is from Amarakośa, section 2.10.38.
So the word भृत्या is linked conceptually to वेतनम् — one who serves or supports, and in return receives wages.

Where as the definition of slave is a person who is the property of and wholly subject to another and forced to provide unpaid labor.

In Sanatan Dharm it is clearly said that you can't make someone dasa against his/her will ..
It is said
बलाद्दासीकृतश्चौरैर्विक्रीतश्चापि मुच्यते । that if someone is forcibly made a Dasa or sold by thieves, even when already sold, he/she has to be released

Yajnavalkya Smriti says बल्लाद्दासीकृतश्चौरैर्विक्रीतश्चापि मुच्यते । स्वामिप्राणप्रदो भक्तत्यागात्तन्निष्क्रयाद्धि –

ऐसा स्मृतिकार याज्ञवल्क्य का वचन है। जिसे बलपूर्वक दास बना लिया गया हो, तस्करों के द्वारा बेच दिया गया हो, उसे दासत्व से मुक्त कर देना चाहिए। अर्थात् यदि आप अपने घर के लिये या व्यापार के लिए किसी को नौकरी पर रखते हैं तो उसे बलपूर्वक या मानव-तस्करों के द्वारा खरीद बेच कर दास नहीं बनाया हुआ होना चाहिए –

This is the statement of Smriti writer Yagyavalkya. One who has been forcibly made a Dasa or sold by smugglers should be freed from Dasatva. That is, if you employ someone for your home or business, then he should not have been made a slave by force or by buying and selling from human smugglers.

Narada Smriti 5.38 says

चौरापहृतविक्रीता ये च दासीकृता बलात् । राज्ञा मोक्षयितव्यास्ते दासत्वं तेषु नेष्यते ॥ 38 ॥जो लोग चोरों द्वारा अपहरण कर लिए जाते हैं और गुलाम के रूप में बेच दिए जाते हैं या जबरन गुलाम बना लिए जाते हैं, उन्हें राजा द्वारा मुक्त कर दिया जाता है और उन्हें अधिक समय तक जेल में नहीं रखा जा सकता

Those who are kidnapped by thieves and sold as Dasas or are forcibly made Dasa are freed by the king and they cannot be kept in a prison for a longer period of time a person who is forced to work for another against his will is a slave

Where as Slave is one who is made to do work for a person forcefully against his desire

So its clear from the above that Dasa and Slave are completely two different terms. A Dasa is one who does a given work and is paid salary for it.

Hinduism also levies custom duties on importing female slaves,

Agni Purana 223.23-29 "…Duties payable on importing female slaves into the country should be determined with a due regard to the country imported from and the time of the import. The duties payable on animals and gold shall be a fifth and sixth part of the original value, while a sixth part of their value should be paid as the kings dues on importing articles of perfumery, cereals, flowers, roots…"

Refutation-

He claimed Agni Purana 223.23-29 talks about paying taxes while importing female slaves . In reality this translation is totally fake the mool sloka and its english translation doesnt even mention such thing

Agni Purana 223.23-29 – The property that has been stolen by the inmates of the house need not be restored by the king. O Brahmin! the king should take one twentieth of the value from the merchandise belonging to his country. The fees to be levied on goods from foreign countries should be determined after knowing the cost, the wear and tear and the profit got by the trader. (In this case) one twentieth of the profit should be taken. If not (paid) (the importer) should be punished. Freight should not be collected from women and mendicants. The ferryman should be made to repay by the king that which has been lost in transit on account of the fault of the ferryman. The king should take one sixth in the case of the grain śūka (barley) and one eighth in the case of the grain śimbi (a kind of kidney bean) as toll befitting the region and season. The king should take four and five parts respectively in the case of animals and gold. Only.a sixth part should be collected in the case of perfumes, herbs, cereals, flowers, roots, fruits, leaves, vegetables, straw, bamboos hides, wicker works and vessels made of stone and all (other materials), honey, meat and clarified butter.

22. The king should obtain from thieves and the officers in charge of the protection, the property taken by them. One who lies that he has been robbed when he has not been robbed should be punished and expelled (from the country).

30-33. (The king) should not levy tax on the brahmins even in emergency. The king in whose realm a brahmin, well-versed in the scriptures, perishes on account of hunger, his kingdom gets ruined on account of diseases, famine and thieves. रक्षा करनेका काम सौंपा गया हो, उनसे चुराया। हुआ धन राजा वसूल करे। जो मनुष्य चोरी न होनेपर भी अपने धनको चुराया हुआ बताता हो, वह दण्डनीय है; उसे राज्यसे बाहर निकाल देना चाहिये। यदि घरका धन घरवालोंने ही चुराया हो तो राजा अपने पाससे उसको न दे। अपने राज्यके भीतर जितनी दूकानें हों, उनसे उनकी आयका बीसवाँ हिस्सा राजाको टैक्सके रूपमें लेना चाहिये। परदेशसे माल मँगानेमें जो खर्च और नुकसान बैठता हो, उसका ब्यौरा बतानेवाला बीजक देखकर तथा मालपर दिये जानेवाले टैक्सका विचार करके प्रत्येक व्यापारीपर कर लगाना चाहिये, जिससे उसको लाभ होता रहे-वह घाटेमें न पड़े। आयका बीसवाँ भाग ही राजाको लेना चाहिये। यदि कोई राजकर्मचारी इससे अधिक वसूल करता हो तो उसे दण्ड देना उचित है। स्त्रियों और साधु-संन्यासियोंसे नावकी उतराई (सेवा) नहीं लेनी चाहिये। यदि मल्लाहोंकी गलतीसे नावपर कोई चीज नुकसान हो जाय तो वह मल्लाहोंसे ही दिलानी चाहिये। राजा शूकधान्यका' छठा भाग और शिम्बिधान्यका आठवाँ भाग करके रूपमें ग्रहण करे। इसी प्रकार जंगली फल-मूल आदिमेंसे देश-कालके अनुरूप उचित कर लेना चाहिये। पशुओंका पाँचवाँ और सुवर्णका

ब्राह्मणोंसे कोई प्रिय वस्तु अथवा कर नहीं लेना चाहिये। जिस राजाके राज्यमें श्रोत्रिय ब्राह्मण भूखसे कष्ट पाता है, उसका राज्य बीमारी, अकाल और लुटेरोंसे पीड़ित होता रहता है। अतः ब्राह्मणकी विद्या और आचरणको जानकर उसके लिये अनुकूल जीविकाका प्रबन्ध करे तथा जैसे पिता अपने औरस पुत्रका पालन करता है, उसी प्रकार राजा विद्वान् और सदाचारी ब्राह्मणकी सर्वथा रक्षा करे। जो राजासे सुरक्षित होकर प्रतिदिन धर्मका अनुष्ठान करता है, उस ब्राह्मणके धर्मसे राजाकी आयु बढ़ती है तथा उसके राष्ट्र एवं खजानेकी भी उन्नति होती है। शिल्पकारोंको चाहिये कि महीनेमें एक दिन बिना पारिश्रमिक लिये केवल भोजन स्वीकार करके ाजाका काम करें। इसी प्रकार दूसरे लोगोंको भी, जो राज्यमें रहकर अपने

शरीरके परिश्रमसे जीविका चलाते हैं, महीनेमें एक दिन राजाका काम करना चाहिये ॥ ३०-३४॥

Translation:

If a person is entrusted with the duty of protection, the king should recover from him any wealth that is stolen. If a person claims his wealth is stolen even when it is not, he is punishable and should be expelled from the kingdom. If the household's own members steal from the household wealth, the king should not compensate for it from his treasury.

Within the kingdom, all shops should pay one-twentieth (5%) of their income as tax to the king. When importing goods from foreign lands, considering the expenses and losses involved, as well as the taxes on the goods, the king should impose a tax on each merchant so that they still make a profit and do not suffer a loss. The king should take only one-twentieth of the income. Any royal official who collects more than this should be punished.

No services should be demanded from women or ascetics (sadhus and sanyasis) for rowing boats. If any damage occurs to the boat due to the fault of the boatmen (mallahs), the boatmen themselves should be held responsible and made to compensate.

The king should collect one-sixth part of grains like rice (shukadhanya) and one-eighth part of grains like wheat (shimbidhanya) as tax. Similarly, appropriate taxes should be taken on wild fruits and roots according to the country and season. One-fifth of animals and one-sixth of gold should be collected as royal tax.

On items such as perfumes, medicines, juices, flowers, roots, fruits, leaves, vegetables, grass, bamboo, baskets made of bamboo, stone utensils, honey, meat, and ghee, one-sixth of the income should be collected as tax.

No beloved items or taxes should be taken from Brahmins. In a kingdom where Brahmin scholars suffer from hunger, the kingdom will suffer from disease, famine, and robbers. Therefore, the king should ensure appropriate livelihood for Brahmins by understanding their knowledge and conduct, and protect learned and virtuous Brahmins just like a father cares for his son.

A Brahmin who stays safely under the king's protection and performs daily religious duties increases the king's lifespan as well as the prosperity of his kingdom and treasury.

Craftsmen should work one day each month for the king without any wages, accepting only food. Similarly, others who earn their living through manual labor in the kingdom should also work for the king one day a month.

Rebuttal –

Here is Mahabharat 4.72.19-26 -भगवान श्रीकृष्ण ने महात्मा पाण्डवों को दहेज या निमन्त्रण में बहुत-सी दासियाँ, नाना प्रकार के रत्न और बहुत-से वस्त्र पृथक-पृथक भेंट किये। तत्पश्चात् मत्स्य और पार्थकुल के वैवाहिक सम्बन्ध का कार्य विधिपूर्वक सम्पन्न होने लगा “Lord Krishna gave the great Pandavas many maidservants, various kinds of jewels, and numerous garments separately as part of the dowry or invitation gifts. Thereafter, the marriage alliance between the Matsya and Partha families was ceremoniously completed.”

Here it is clearly mentioned about dasis which are servants and there is a lot of difference between Slave and servant . You dont have to pay your slaves but you have to pay your servants regularly

Refutation-

Now coming to his allegations on Mahabharat Adi Parva 223.48-50.

This Prakaran has occured in Adhaya 220 of Geeta Press Gorakhpur . Here is geeta press translation –

"In bathing, drinking, and festive occasions, there were one thousand fair-complexioned women who were of marriageable age, beautifully attired, and radiantly charming. They adorned themselves with golden necklaces embedded with hundreds of pearls, their bodies free of any visible body hair, and they were exquisitely decorated with garments and ornaments. These women, who were also skilled in service, were presented as gifts by the lotus-eyed Lord Krishna."

In this context, Śrī Kṛṣṇa presented gifts to Arjuna and Subhadrā on the occasion of their marriage. These gifts included chariots, horses, trained soldiers, and also well-trained and graceful maidservants assigned to serve the queen. Now, observe carefully how the description of the dāsīs is given:

जिनके वेष सुंदर और कान्ति मनोहर थी, जिन्होंने सोने के सौ-सौ मणियों की कण्ठियाँ पहन रखी थीं, जिनके शरीर में रोमावलियाँ नहीं प्रकट हुई थीं, जो वस्त्राभूषणों से अलंकृत तथा सेवाके कार्यों में दक्ष थीं

“They adorned themselves with golden necklaces embedded with hundreds of pearls, their bodies free of any visible body hair, and they were exquisitely decorated with garments and ornaments.”

This description clearly shows that the dāsīs were adorned with costly and beautiful jewelry, diamond and gold ornaments, and elegant garments. Does this fit the image of a slave? Certainly not. These women were not slaves but maidservants (dāsīs) who performed their roles with dignity.

According to Vācaspatyam , dāsīs received proper wages for their work, which primarily included taking care of the queen, assisting in her decoration, and managing her personal service. Therefore, it is completely unreasonable and misleading to equate them with the notion of slaves.

2. Lexical Meaning from Amarakośa:

वेतनम् । इत्यमरः । २।१०।३८ ॥

"Vetanam" (वेतनम्) means wages, salary, or remuneration.
This is from Amarakośa, section 2.10.38.
So the word भृत्या is linked conceptually to वेतनम् — one who serves or supports, and in return receives wages.

Here actually the word used is 'vadhu' (वधू), which refers to a married woman or bride, not a slave. There is no word related to selling or buying female Slaves in this mantra.

In the commentary on this mantra in the Bṛhaddevatā, it is explained that kings would marry off their daughters to suitable men of the same gotra and varṇa, which is commonly known as 'kanyādāna' (ritual gift of a daughter in marriage). Hence, the word 'vadhu' appears in these mantras, which is always used for a married woman or bride, not a slave.

And as for the mention of giving chariots or other things, that is actually a traditional part of 'strī-dhana' (the wealth given to the bride by her family). For example, in the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, during the wedding of Sītā, King Janaka gave chariots, animals, male and female attendants to look after the bride. This was part of the marriage custom and not some form of slavery.

Seeing that he (Kakṣīvat) was handsome and radiant like a son of the gods, the king, finding no objection in terms of caste or lineage, considered offering him his daughter in marriage.

Then, lifting him up, the king asked about his caste and lineage. The young man (Kakṣīvat) replied respectfully: "O King, I belong to the lineage of the sage Aṅgiras. I am the son of the high-born sage Dīrghatamas."

Thereupon, the king (Svanaya) gave him ten beautifully adorned maidens as companions. To carry these maidens, he also provided a chariot, muscular horses in teams of four, wealth, vessels made of less precious metals, as well as goats and sheep.

Section 1: On the Root and Meanings of 'वधू'

> "ब(व)धू स्त्री बध्नाति ममतया बन्ध–ड गलोपः," > The feminine word vadhū (bride/wife) is derived from the root bandh (to bind) — indicating "she who binds with affection" (i.e., connects through love or emotional attachment).

> "उह्यते वह-क घश्चान्टालृएशे वा।" > Alternatively, it comes from the root vah (to carry or lead), interpreted through suffix usage (like ghañ or ṇic) per Pāṇinian rules — meaning, "she who is led/carries herself from father's house to husband's."

> "१ नार्य्याम्," — In the sense of "a woman."

> "२ पृक्कायाञ्च अमरः" — In the Amarakosha (a Sanskrit thesaurus), it is also applied to "a daughter-in-law."

> "३ स्नुषायां," — It also means "a son's wife."

> "४ नबोढिआयाम्, भार्य्यायां" — Specifically a newly-married woman, a wife.

> "५ शारिवोषधौ" — In botanical context, "Vadhū" is a name for a medicinal herb, Śārivā (Indian sarsaparilla).

> "६ शआम्, च मेदि०" — In Śabdakalpadruma and Medinī-kośa, Vadhū" also appears as a general term for a woman of marriageable age or a bride.

Section 2: Alternative Root and Etymology

> "वधू स्त्री उह्यते पितृगेहात् पतिगृहं वह–ऊ धुकच्।" > The word vadhū also derives from vah (to carry), with the meaning "she who is carried or led from her father's home to the husband's home" — using the dhukac affix formation.

Here the word used is 'vadhu' (वधू), which refers to a married woman or bride, not a slave. There is no word related to selling or buying female Slaves in this mantra.

In the commentary on this mantra in the Bṛhaddevatā, it is explained that kings would marry off their daughters to suitable men of the same gotra and varṇa, which is commonly known as 'kanyādāna' (ritual gift of a daughter in marriage). Hence, the word 'vadhu' appears in these mantras, which is always used for a married woman or bride, not a slave.

And as for the mention of giving chariots or other things, that is actually a traditional part of 'strī-dhana' (the wealth given to the bride by her family). For example, in the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, during the wedding of Sītā, King Janaka gave chariots, animals, male and female attendants to look after the bride. This was part of the marriage custom and not some form of slavery.

उसे रूप-सम्पन्न तथा देवपुत्रों के समान देखकर उन्होंने (राजा ने), वर्ण और गोत्र आदि का विरोध न होने पर उसे अपनी पुत्री प्रदान करने का विचार किया।

तब उसे (कक्षीवत् को) उठाकर उन्होंने उससे उसका वर्ण और गोत्रादि पूछा। उस युवक (कत्तीवत्) ने यह कहते हुये उत्तर दिया: 'हे राजन्, में अङ्गिरम् के वंश का हूँ; हे नृप में उच्च्य-पुत्र बत्रृषि दीर्घतमस् का पुत्र हैं।' तब उन्होंने (स्वनय ने) उसे (कक्षीवत्त् को) आभूषणों से अलंकृत दस कम्यायें प्रदान की, और इन कन्याओं को ले जाने के लिये इसी संरया में रथ तथा चार-चार के दल में चलने वाले मुहद शरीर के अश्व, और धन तथा हीन धातु के वर्तन, और बकरियों तथा भेड़ आदि भी दिये।

Seeing that he (Kakṣīvat) was handsome and radiant like a son of the gods, the king, finding no objection in terms of caste or lineage, considered offering him his daughter in marriage.

Then, lifting him up, the king asked about his caste and lineage. The young man (Kakṣīvat) replied respectfully: "O King, I belong to the lineage of the sage Aṅgiras. I am the son of the high-born sage Dīrghatamas."

Thereupon, the king (Svanaya) gave him ten beautifully adorned maidens as companions. To carry these maidens, he also provided a chariot, muscular horses in teams of four, wealth, vessels made of less precious metals, as well as goats and sheep.

इस आतिथ्य क्रिया सम्पन्न हो जाने पर वेदमाली ने विनय पूर्वक हाथ जोड़कर उन वाग्मीप्रवर मुनि से कहा- “हे भगवान्! मैं कृतार्थ हो गया। मेरा कल्मष नष्ट हो गया। हे पण्डित ! महाभाग ! ज्ञानदान द्वारा मेरा उद्धार करिये।” वेदमाली का कथन सुनकर मुनिसत्तम जानंति ने हंसते हुये गुणी वेदमाली को उत्तर दिया- “हे विप्रशार्दूल ! आप संसार के उच्छेदक इस ज्ञान का श्रवण करिये। मैं इसे संक्षेप में कहता हूं। यह अकृती (जो विवेकयुक्त न हों) लोगों के लिये अतीव दुर्लभ है। आप नित्य विष्णु का भजन करें तथा नारायण प्रभु का स्मरण किया करें। पर निन्दा, चुगली आदि कभी न करें। हे महामति! आप सदा परोपकार निरत रहिये। आप मूर्खी का साथ छोड़कर सदा हरि पूजन तत्पर रहें।।३९-४४।।

After this act of hospitality was completed, Vedamāli, with folded hands and great humility, said to that eloquent sage:

“O Revered One! I am fulfilled. My impurities have been destroyed. O learned, greatly fortunate one! Please liberate me by giving me knowledge.”

Hearing these words of Vedamāli, the best among sages, Jānanti, smiled and replied to the virtuous Vedamāli:

"O noble Brāhmaṇa! Listen to this knowledge which destroys worldly bondage. I will tell it to you briefly.
For those who lack proper discrimination, this is extremely rare.

You should constantly worship Viṣṇu and keep remembering Lord Nārāyaṇa.
Never indulge in slander, gossip or backbiting.

O highly intelligent one! Always remain engaged in acts of benevolence.
Abandon the company of ignorance and remain ever devoted to the worship of Hari."

Translation

“The phrase ‘captured under a banner’ (dhvaja-grahaṇa)—here the word ‘banner’ (dhvaja) stands for the army. Hence, one who has been defeated in battle, taken away and brought, is made a Dāsa.

Now, one may ask: Is it the statement of the Kṣatriya that when a Kṣatriya is defeated in battle, he becomes a Dāsa?
We say: No; not in the strict sense.
Because by nature this condition of Dāsya is connected primarily with the Śūdra; for the Śūdra has been created for the purpose of service.
When someone conquers a lord, the people belonging to that lord, once captured, accept the Dāsya of the captor.

One may question: Is Dāsya only for Śūdras?
No; though for the Śūdra it is natural, in exceptional cases others also may enter into Dāsya.
If this were not accepted, there would be no clarity about who exactly is considered a Dāsa.
For in reality all three varṇas, in one way, are Dāsas of the king, following him from generation to generation; there is no fixed rule, because it is a matter of dependence.
But not all such Dāsas engage in direct personal service.
Thus, even among Kṣatriyas and others, a form of Dāsya exists.
There is a distinction: one form of Dāsya is different from another.

Another form of Dāsya is simply performing lowly work.
The Dāsya of an unknown person is unrestricted: it involves unreserved rendering of service.
Paricaryā (personal attendance), on the other hand, means bodily service (pressing the limbs), assistance through wealth, etc.
This distinction has been elaborated by Nārada.

- Bhakta-Dāsa: One who, for the sake of benefit or due to devotion, has voluntarily undertaken Dāsya.
- Gṛhaja: The Dāsa born in the household, i.e., the son of a Dāsī.
- Krīta: The Dāsa purchased with a price from the master.
- Datrima: The Dāsa given as a gift, out of affection or without particular purpose.
- Kramāgata (Paitrika): The hereditary Dāsa, passed down from father.

What is the difference between Gṛhaja and Kramāgata?
-The Gṛhaja is one born in servitude within that same house;

—the Kramāgata is one whose status has come down as an inheritance from a previous arrangement.

- Daṇḍa-Dāsa: The Dāsa who, being unable to pay a royal fine, undertakes Dāsya as a consequence.

Even a person from a higher varṇa may, due to inability to pay a fine, become such a Dāsa.
But this is not the same as menial Dāsya.
There is a difference between Dāsya and mere work: the latter is only task-oriented, and does not completely make a person a Dāsa.
In the same way, performing tasks for someone is also found outside strict Dāsya.

Further, even a Śūdra who has approached Dharma may become a Dāsa, but this does not mean that these seven causes of Dāsa-status are the only ones.
These are sources of Dāsya, but the willingness of the person is also an important factor.
For the one who has voluntarily chosen to serve, it is not like the Dāsa who is bought, born in a household, etc.

Thus, as it has been said, each case must be considered according to its circumstances.
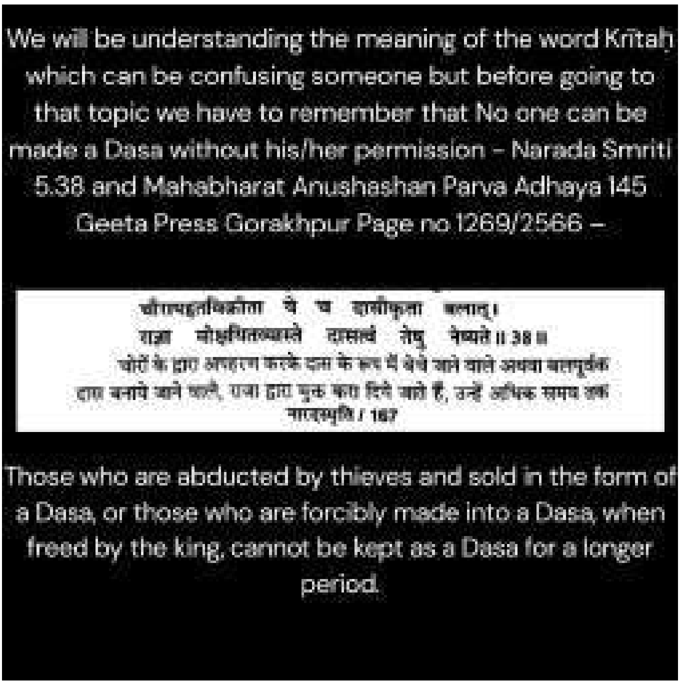
For one who desires a particular result, there is a form of Dāsya, but there is no lifelong obligation.
Therefore, for one who does not willingly accept Dāsya, there is no such relationship.
Hence, if a Śūdra, possessing wealth, lives in independence without dependence upon Brāhmaṇas or others, there is no fault in him."

Thus its clear From Acharya Medhatithi commentary that Manu 8.414 does not refer to Slavery but to Dasa Paid Servants and Employees .

We will be understanding the meaning of the word Krītaḥ which can be confusing someone but before going to that topic we have to remember that No one can be made a Dasa without his/her permission – Narada Smriti 5.38 and Mahabharat Anushashan Parva Adhaya 145 Geeta Press Gorakhpur Page no 1269/2566 –

Narada Smriti 5.38

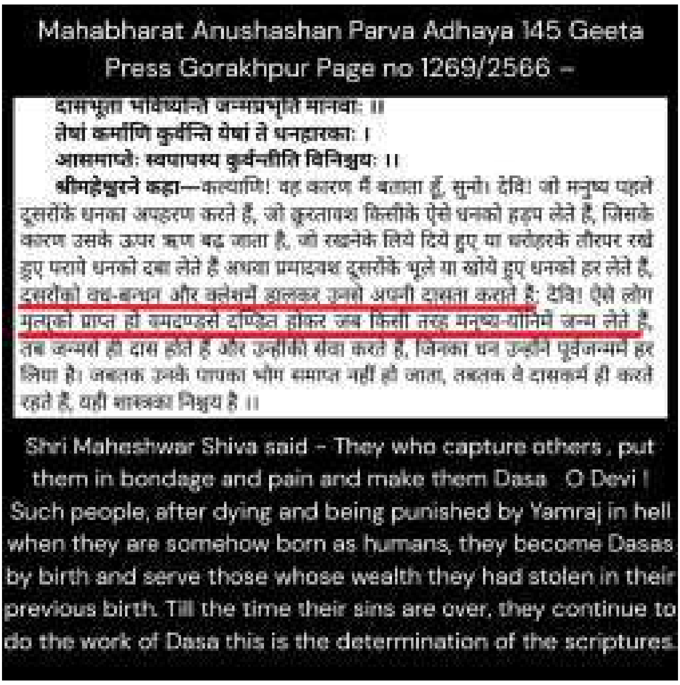
चोरों के द्वारा अपहरण करके दास के रूप में बेचे जाने वाले अथवा बलपूर्वक दास बनाये जाने वाले, राजा द्वारा मुक्त करा दिये जाते हैं, उन्हें अधिक समय तक नारदस्मृति /
Those who are abducted by thieves and sold in the form of a Dasa, or those who are forcibly made into a Dasa, when freed by the king, cannot be kept as a Dasa for a longer period.



Mahabharat Anushashan Parva Adhaya 145 Geeta Press Gorakhpur Page no 1269/2566 –

दसरोंको वध-बन्धन और क्लेशमें डालकर उनसे अपनी दासता कराते हैं; देवि ! ऐसे लोग मृत्युको प्राप्त हो यमदण्डसे दण्डित होकर जब किसी तरह मनुष्य-योनिमें जन्म लेते हैं, तब जन्मसे ही दास होते हैं और उन्हींकी सेवा करते हैं, जिनका धन उन्होंने पूर्वजन्ममें हर लिया है। जबतक उनके पापका भोग समाप्त नहीं हो जाता, तबतक वे दासकर्म ही करते रहते हैं, यही शास्त्रका निश्चय है ।।

Shri Maheshwar Shiva said – They who capture others , put them in bondage and pain and make them Dasas O Devi ! Such people, after dying and being punished by Yamraj in hell when they are somehow born as humans, they become Dasa by birth and serve those whose wealth they had stolen in their previous birth. Till the time their sins are over, they continue to do the work of Dasa, this is the determination of the scriptures.



We have Evidences from the Scriptures that prohibits selling and buying human beings
Mahabharat 13.45.23

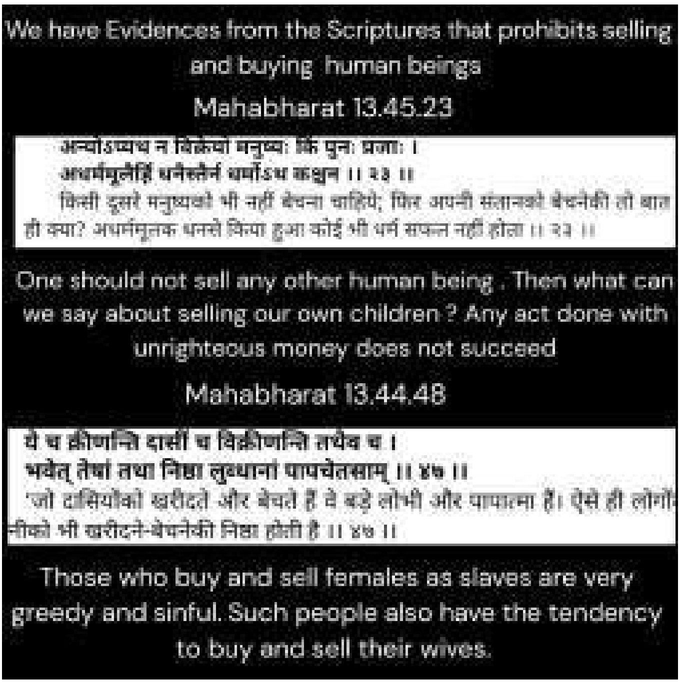
किसी दूसरे मनुष्यको भी नहीं बेचना चाहिये; फिर अपनी संतानको बेचनेकी तो बात ही क्या? अधर्ममूलक धनसे किया हुआ कोई भी धर्म सफल नहीं होता ।। २३ ।।

One should not sell any other human being. Then what can we say about selling our own children? Any act done with unrighteous money does not succeed

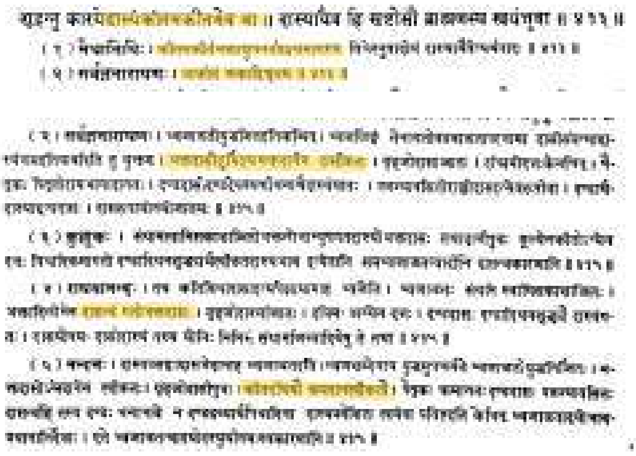
Mahabharat 13.44.48

'जो दासियोंको खरीदते और बेचते हैं वे बड़े लोभी और पापात्मा हैं। ऐसे ही लोगों नीको भी खरीदने-बेचनेकी निष्ठा होती है ।। ४७ ।।

Those who buy and sell females as slaves are very greedy and sinful. Such people also have the tendency to buy and sell their wives.



Sarvgaya Narayana , Raghavananda ,Nandan , Medhatithi and Kulluka Bhatta ji and have explained the meaning of word Krītaḥ as – भक्तदासोदुर्भिक्ष्य भक्तदानेन दासीकतः , दासत्वं गतोभक्तदासः । क्रीतदृत्रिमौ क्रयदानस्वीकृतौ meaning giving money or resources or a share of profit to someone in exchange for servitude and doing some work for the master in exchange for money in simple words contract labour as kritam . For ex – In IPL where Franchise buy players for a contract for a specific period of time but that doesn't mean they are forcefully sold as slaves like in Islamic Slavery



Thus we have understood the meaning of the word Kritam as purchasing the service of a person in a contract for a specific period of time for a specific amount like we see in Football Franchise and Cricket leagues .

Narada Smriti Adhayay 5 describes many circumstances in which the person who has become Dasa due to Drought or Famine – , one who has become Dasa become of non payement of Loan and money , one who has become Dasa by himself and or one who became a Dasa due to war , one who became Dasa for Bharan Poshan may free themselves from Dasatva by themselves

Narada Smriti 5.31 –

अकाल में पाला-पोसा जाने से दास बना व्यक्ति दीर्घकाल तक स्वामी की सेवा करने पर भी दासत्व से मुक्त नहीं हो सकता है। हां, सामर्थ्य जुटाने पर गाय-बैल आदि देकर मुक्ति-लाभ कर सकता है।

A person who has become a Dasa by being brought up during a famine cannot be freed from Dasatva even if he serves his master for a long time. Yes, if he can gather the means, he can get freedom by giving away cows and bulls etc.

Narada Smriti 5.33 –

भारी ऋण से मुक्त किया गया और प्रत्युपकार के रूप में दास बना व्यक्ति, ब्याज समेत ऋण-राशि को चुका देने पर दासत्व से मुक्त हो सकता है। इसी प्रकार निश्चित अवधि के लिए दासत्व के रूप में अनुबन्धित व्यक्ति अवधि बीतने पर अपने आप मुक्त समझा जाता है।

A person who is freed from a heavy debt and made a Dasa in return can be freed from Dasatva after repaying the loan amount along with interest. Similarly, a person contracted as a Dasa for a fixed period is considered free on expiry of the period.

Narada Smriti 5.34–

स्वयं अपने को दासत्व के लिए सौंपने वाले तथा युद्ध में बन्दी बनाकर लाये गये दास, स्थिति बदलने पर, अर्थात् अपना पेट भरने को समर्थ होने पर तथा राजाओं में सन्धि-समझौता हो जाने पर दासत्व से मुक्त हो जाते हैं।

The persons who surrender themselves for Dasatva and those captured in war, become free from Dasatva when their situation changes, i.e. when they become capable of feeding themselves and when a treaty is signed between the kings.

Narada Smriti 5.36 –

जीवन-भर भरण-पोषण की आशा से दास बना व्यक्ति उपयुक्त भरण-पोषण न मिलने पर दासकर्म को छोड़ सकता है। इसी प्रकार दासी द्वारा अपने साथ लाया होने से दास बना उसका बेटा भी मां की मुक्ति के साथ अपने आप मुक्त हो जाता है।

A person who became a Dasa with the hope of lifelong maintenance can give up Servitude if he does not get adequate maintenance. Similarly, a son who became a Das because he was brought up by a Dasi woman also gets freed automatically with the liberation of his mother.

Female slaves can't perform the rites of a wife,

Baudhyana Dharma Sutra, Prasna 1, Adhyaya 11, Kandika 21
Now they quote also (the following verse): 'It is declared that a female who has been purchased for money is not a wife. She cannot (assist) at sacrifices offered to the gods or the manes. Kasyapa has stated that she is a slave.

Refutation-

Baudhyana Dharmasutra 1.11.21.2 he deliberately took it out of Context . Just the next verse criticises slavery and says that one who sells and buys a girl goes into hell after death and faces severe punishment.

'Baudhyana Dharmasutra 1.11.21.3 – Those wicked men who, seduced by greed, give away a daughter for a fee, who (thus) sell themselves and commit a great crime, fall (after death) into a dreadful place of punishment and destroy their family down to the seventh (generation). Moreover they will repeatedly die and be born again. All (this) is declared (to happen), if a fee (is taken).

Hindu scriptures on concubines of Kings,

Natya Shastra 34.26-29 I shall now describe the classes and function of women who live in the harem and have dealings with the king. They are the chief queen (maha-devi), other queens (devi), his high born wives (sramini), ordinary wives (sthayini), concubines (bhogini) craft women (silpakarini), acresses (natakiya), dancers (nartaki), maids in constant attenance (ancarika), maids of special work (paricarka), maids in constant movement (sancarika), maids for running errands (presana-carika), Mahattaris (matron), old dames (sthavira). Ayuktikas and (overseer), Pratiharis (usher), maidens (kumari).

Natya Shastra 34.40 Concubines (bhogini) to a king are known as well-behaved, gentle [in manners], not very hanghty, and they are indifferent [to rivals], modest, affectionate but not held in high honor.

Refutation-

There is a concept known as Chaturmāga, which refers to four distinct movement paths: āliptā (smeared or coated), aṅkita (marked or decorated), gomukha (cow-faced, possibly curved like a cow's snout), and vitastā (spanned or stretched).

Next is Dvilepa, which denotes a double application of paste or makeup, specifically characterized by strokes that move upward and to the left (vāmordhvaka).

The term Ṣaṭkaraṇa encompasses six dramatic forms or structural variations: rūpa (the form itself), kṛtapratikṛta (original and its imitation), pratibheda (variation or differentiation), rūpaśeṣa (residual form), modha (distortion or modification), and pratiśulka (counter-cost or reciprocal value).

Triyati refers to three types of movement flows: sama (uniform or equal), srotogatā (stream-like or flowing), and gopucchā (cow-tail shaped, tapering or trailing).

Trilaya is the combination of three tempos in performance: druta (fast), madhya (medium), and vilambita (slow), which together create rhythmic complexity.

Trigata describes three philosophical or conceptual alignments: tattva-anugata (aligned with truth or essence), amogha (unfailing or effective), and iti (thus, indicating conclusion or affirmation).

Tripracāra outlines three styles of movement: sama-pracāra (equal movement), viṣama-pracāra (unequal movement), and sama-viṣama-pracāra (a combination of both).

Trisaṁyoga refers to three types of syllabic combinations in rhythm: guru-saṁyoga (heavy-heavy), laghu-saṁyoga (light-light), and guru-laghu-saṁyoga (heavy-light).

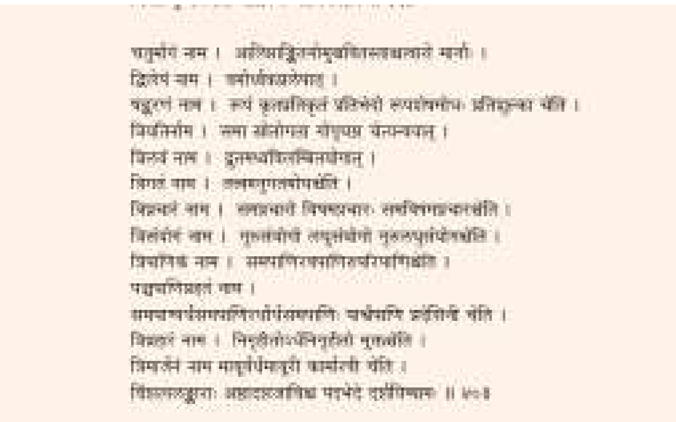
Tripāṇika defines three hand positions: sama-pāṇi (equal-handed), avapāṇi (lowered hand), and uparipāṇi (raised hand).

Pañcapāṇi-prahata includes five types of hand strikes: sama-pāṇi (equal-handed), ardha-sama-pāṇi (half-equal), ardhārdha-sama-pāṇi (quarter-equal), pārśva-pāṇi (side-hand), and pradeśinī (index-hand or pointing gesture).

Triprahāra refers to three types of strikes or attacks: nigṛhīta (restrained), ardha-nigṛhīta (half-restrained), and mukta (released or free).

Trimārjana describes three cleansing or sweeping gestures: māyūrī (peacock-like), ardha-māyūrī (half-peacock), and kārmāravī (blacksmith-like, possibly forceful or rhythmic).

Finally, the passage concludes by stating that there are twenty types of ornamentation (alaṅkāra) and eighteen types of rhythmic patterns (jāti), which will be demonstrated through variations in footwork (padabheda).



CONCUBINAGE FOR KINGS OR ANY SUCH LUSTFUL THINGS ARE STRICTLY PROHIBITED IN SANATAN DHARMA

शिकार करना, जुआ खेलना, दिन में स्वप्न देखना, दूसरों की निन्दा करना, स्त्री-सम्पर्क, नशा करना, नृत्य-गीत-वाद्य के प्रति आसक्ति तथा व्यर्थ में इधर उधर घूमना, यह काम से उत्पन्न दस का समूह होता है ।। ४७ ।।

चुगलखोरी, दुःसाहस करना, द्रोह करना, ईर्ष्या करना, गुणों में दोषदृष्टि रखना, दूसरे का धन हड़पने की आकांक्षा रखना, कर्कश वाणी का उच्चारण तथा कठोरतापूर्वक आचरण करना, यह क्रोध से उत्पन्न आठ का समूह (माना गया है) ।। ४८ ।।

सभी विद्वान् जिसे इन दोनों का भी मूलकारण मानते हैं, उस लोभ को अत्यन्त प्रयत्नपूर्वक जीतना चाहिए, क्योंकि ये दोनों समूह उसी से उत्पन्न होते हैं।। ४९ ।।

काम से उत्पन्न होने वाले समूह के अन्तर्गत शराब पीना, जुआ खेलना, स्त्रियों से सम्पर्क तथा शिकार करना, इस चार के समूह को ही क्रमशः अधिक कष्टदायक समझना चाहिए।। ५० ।।

जितेन्द्रिय राजा सभी राजाओं में रहने वाले इस सात के समूह के पूर्व-पूर्व व्यसन को अपेक्षाकृत अधिक दुष्प्रभाव वाला समझे ।। ५२ ।।

Verse 47:
Hunting, gambling, daydreaming, slandering others, excessive association with women, intoxication, attachment to dancing, singing and playing musical instruments, and roaming about here and there aimlessly—these are described as the tenfold group that arises from desire (kāma).

Verse 48:
Tale-bearing (backbiting), reckless daring, treachery, jealousy, finding faults in others' virtues, the desire to seize another's wealth, speaking harsh words, and behaving with cruelty—these eight are said to arise from anger (krodha).

Verse 49:
All learned men consider greed (lobha) to be the root cause of both these groups. One should therefore strive with utmost effort to conquer greed, because these two groups spring forth from it.

Verse 50:
Among the group born of desire, drinking liquor, gambling, association with women, and hunting—this group of four should be regarded, in order, as especially more harmful.

Verse 52:
A self-controlled king should consider, in this group of seven (vices), that the earlier ones (arising from desire) have relatively more disastrous effects.

मृगयाक्षो दिवास्वप्नः परिवादः स्त्रियो मदः।
तौर्यत्रिकं वृथाट्या च कामजो दशको गणः॥ ४७॥

आखेटकाख्ये मृगयायां मृगया, अक्षो द्यूतक्रीडा, सकलकार्यविघातिनी दिवानिद्रा, परदोषकथनं, स्त्रीसम्भोगः, मद्यपानजनितो मदः, तौर्यत्रिकं नृत्यगीतवादित्राणि, वृथाभ्रमणं एष दशपरिमाणो दशकः पूर्वोक्तकामजो गणः॥ ४७॥

शिकार करना, जुआ खेलना, दिन में स्वप्न देखना, दूसरों की निन्दा करना, स्त्री-सम्पर्क, नशा करना, नृत्य-गीत-वाद्य के प्रति आसक्ति तथा व्यर्थ में इधर उधर घूमना, यह काम से उत्पन्न दस का समूह होता है॥ ४७॥

चुगलखोरी, दुःसाहस करना, द्रोह करना, ईर्ष्या करना, गुणों में दोषदृष्टि रखना, दूसरे का धन हड़पने की आकांक्षा रखना, कर्कश वाणी का उच्चारण तथा कठोरतापूर्वक आचरण करना, यह क्रोध से उत्पन्न आठ का समूह (माना गया है)॥ ४८॥

(1) Medhātithi's Commentary:

> On drinking and gambling:
> Of the two (drinking and gambling), drinking is worse, because it causes loss of awareness, turns even a sane man insane, makes him walk naked, results in loss of learning and intelligence, loss of friends, association with bad company and alienation from good people, creates attachment to singing, music and other sensual pleasures, makes one reveal secrets, invites ridicule from others, makes one talk nonsense even if his nature was earlier serious—all due to the force of intoxication.
> In gambling, however, a skilful gambler always wins, while an unskilled one is defeated; but gambling itself leads to loss of wealth even for the skilled, constant enmity, frequent quarrels, ordinary or slight gains but heavy losses, destruction of food and property, holding in the urges of urine and stool causing bodily weakness and diseases, and intense misery caused by worthless people.
> Even when the mother dies, a gambler continues gambling; and even when respectable men rebuke him, he does not stop. Like heated iron balls, he swallows others' property and does not bow down. When hungry and in distress, he disregards food, shows indifference to necessities, and looks down even on virtuous and qualified people as if they were grass—these are the faults of gambling.

> On addiction to women:
> Between woman-addiction and hunting, woman-addiction is worse, because association with women leads to neglect of duties, delay in work, loss of dharma, and it also drags in the faults of drinking. It causes attachment to pleasure, falsehood, and related vices.
> On hunting:
> Hunting involves exercise, binding of bile and phlegm, reduction of fat, knowledge of moving and still targets, expertise in weapons, and contact with common people.
> Thus, in the group of four vices arising from desire (kāma)—drinking, gambling, woman-addiction, and hunting—each preceding one is worse than the following.
> In the anger-born group:
> These also are connected with punishment. Both harsh speech and physical punishment have faults, but physical punishment is worse because it leads to death, injury, or permanent damage, which cannot be remedied.
> Harsh words, on the other hand, though they burn like fire arising from anger, can be pacified by gifts, respect, or soothing words. Between harsh speech and economic damage, harsh speech is worse, because for spirited men, hurtful words disturb the mind, even more than the loss of wealth. Hence the saying:
> "A tree pierced with an axe heals;
> a wound pierced with an arrow heals;
> but a heart wounded with words > never recovers."
> Therefore, it is concluded that in both groups (desire-born and anger-born), the earlier vice is worse than the later ones. (Verse 52)

---

(2) Sarvajña-Nārāyaṇa:

> In this set of seven vices, the two groups (desire-born and anger-born) overlap, because women, music, etc., give rise to further faults like tale-bearing.
> Of the desire-born vices, gambling is worse than women, because gambling destroys wealth and the possibility of enjoyment, whereas women are a cause of pleasure.
> Similarly, in the anger-born group, the same principle applies. (Verse 52)

---

(3) Kulaka:

> These seven vices (from drinking to economic harm) usually exist in every royal court. A king of noble character should know that in the series of vices, the earlier ones are more harmful than the later ones.
> Drinking destroys self-control and results in misconduct due to loss of sense; gambling causes wealth-loss but sometimes has accidental gain; woman-addiction is worse than gambling due to the resulting enmity; hunting, compared to woman-addiction, has some good aspects like exercise and health.
> Thus, in the desire-born group, each previous one is worse.
> Similarly, in the anger-born group of three, physical punishment is worse than harsh speech, because its effects like mutilation are irreparable. Harsh speech, though painful, can be soothed by conciliation.
> Economic harm (arthadoṣa), however, can be compensated by giving wealth. (Verse 52)

(4) Rāghavānanda:

> All these seven vices—beginning with drinking and ending with economic harm—cause misery both in this life and the next. Hence the gravity of these vices has been explained here. (Verse 52)

(5) Nandana:

> Here, a gradation between the two groups is expressed: each previous vice is heavier than the next. The word “pūrva” (earlier) means “relative to its own class” and not absolute, because it has already been established that the desire-born vices are graver than the anger-born vices. (Verse 52)

(6) Rāmacandra:

> For a self-controlled king, among these seven vices, the earlier vices such as drinking are to be considered more grievous and painful. This applies because these vices spread everywhere in the kingdom. (Verse 52)

Shree Krishna Uvach-

स्त्रियोंके प्रति आसक्ति, जुआ खेलना, शिकार खेलनेका शौक और मद्यपान – ये चार प्रकारके भोग कामनाजनित दुःख बताये गये हैं, जिनके कारण मनुष्य अपने धन-ऐश्वर्यसे भ्रष्ट हो जाता है। शास्त्रोंके निपुण विद्वान् सभी परिस्थितियोंमें इन चारोंको निन्दनीय मानते हैं; परंतु द्यूतक्रीडाको तो जूएके दोष जाननेवाले लोग विशेषरूपसे निन्दनीय समझते हैं ।। ७-८ ।।

"Attachment to women, gambling, fondness for hunting, and drinking Alchohol —these four kinds of indulgences, arising from desire, are said to be causes of suffering, due to which a man is ruined in terms of wealth and prosperity. Scholars well-versed in the scriptures consider all four of these to be blameworthy under any circumstance; however, those who understand the evils of gambling regard it as especially reprehensible. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 113

Anyone who has sex with a man or woman other than own husband or wife, suffers the pāpa of aborting the embryo.

श्वेतकेतुने यह नियम बनाया, कि आजसे जो नारी पतिको तजकर व्यभिचार करेगी, उसको दुःखदायी भ्रूणहत्याका पाप लगेगा ।। १७

तथा इस भूमण्डलमें जो पुरुष कुमारी ब्रह्मचारिणी तथा पतिव्रता प्यारी स्त्रीको तजकर परायी नारीसे मिलेगा उसके भी वैसा ही पाप लगेगा ।। १८ ।।

“O noble one! We have heard that from that time onward, this rule was firmly established in human society; it does not apply to other living beings.”

Śvetaketu established this rule:
From today, any woman who abandons her husband and commits adultery will incur the grievous sin equivalent to the destruction of a fetus (embryo).”

And likewise, in this world, any man who, forsaking a maiden observing brahmacharya (celibacy) or a faithful, devoted wife, engages with another’s wife, will incur the same sin.”

If he does not keep his senses under control, the great faults arising from them will surely bring him down.

He should subdue all five senses and dry up (destroy) the five sense-objects associated with them.
Through knowledge and humility, with due effort, he should abandon the six faults such as lust and anger.

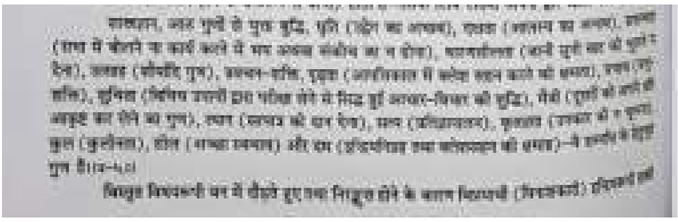
Agni Purana Adhaya 238 Slokas 3-7 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications – Description of Ethics by Bhagwan Shree Rama for Kings and Common Man

शास्त्रज्ञान, आठ गुणों से युक्त बुद्धि, धृति (उद्वेग का अभाव), दक्षता (आलस्य का अभाव), प्रगल्भता (सभा में बोलने या कार्य करने में भय अथवा संकोच का न होना), धारणशीलता (जानी सुनी बात को भूलने न देना), उत्साह (शौर्यादि गुण), प्रवचन-शक्ति, दृढ़ता (आपत्तिकाल में क्लेश सहन करने की क्षमता), प्रभाव (प्रभु-शक्ति), शुचिता (विविध उपायों द्वारा परीक्षा लेने से सिद्ध हुई आचार-विचार की शुद्धि), मैत्री (दूसरों को अपने प्रति आकृष्ट कर लेने का गुण), त्याग (सत्पात्र को दान देना), सत्य (प्रतिज्ञापालन), कृतज्ञता (उपकार को न भूलना), कुल (कुलीनता), शील (अच्छा स्वभाव) और दम (इन्द्रियनिग्रह तथा क्लेशसहन की क्षमता)- ये सम्पत्ति के हेतुभूत गुण हैं।।४-५।। ज्ञानमय अङ्कुश से वश में करना चाहिये। काम, क्रोध, लोभ, हर्ष, मान और मद-ये 'षड्वर्ग' कहे गये हैं। राजा इनका सर्वथा त्याग कर देना चाहिये। इन सभी का त्याग हो जाने पर वह सुखी होता है।।६-७।।
राजा को विनय-गुण से सम्पन्न हो आन्वीक्षिकी (आत्मविद्या एवं तर्कविद्या), वेदत्रयी वार्ता (कृषि, वाणिज्य और पशुपालन) तथा दण्डनीति-इन चार विद्याओं का उनके विद्वानों तथा उन विद्याओं के अनुसार अनुष्ठान करने वाले कर्मठ पुरुषों के साथ बैठकर चिन्तन करना चाहिये। (जिससे लोक में उनका सम्यक् प्रचार और प्रसार हो)। 'आन्वीक्षिकी' से आत्मज्ञान एवं वस्तु के यथार्थ स्वभाव का बोध होता है। धर्म और अधर्म का ज्ञान 'वेदत्रयी' पर अवलम्बित है, अर्थ और अनर्थ 'वाती' के सम्यक् उपयोग पर निर्भर हैं तथा न्याय और अन्याय 'दण्डनीति' के समुचित प्रयोग और अप्रयोग पर आधारित हैं।।

Scriptural knowledge; intelligence endowed with eight qualities; fortitude (absence of agitation); skill (absence of laziness); boldness (absence of fear or hesitation in speaking or acting in an assembly); retentiveness (not forgetting what has been heard or learned); enthusiasm (qualities like valor); eloquence (ability to expound and speak well); firmness (capacity to endure hardships in times of calamity); influence (commanding authority); purity (purity of conduct and thought, proven through various tests); friendliness (the quality of drawing others toward oneself); generosity (giving charity to a worthy recipient); truthfulness (keeping one's word); gratitude (never forgetting a favor); noble lineage; good character; and self-control (restraint of the senses and endurance of hardship) – these are the virtues that serve as the causes of prosperity. (4–5)

One should control others with the goad of knowledge. Lust (kāma), anger (krodha), greed (lobha), delight (harṣa), pride (māna), and arrogance (mada) – these are called the sixfold enemies (ṣaḍ-varga). A king should completely renounce them. When all these are abandoned, he becomes happy. (6–7)

A king, endowed with the virtue of humility, should deliberate upon the four sciences – Ānvīkṣikī (the science of the self and logic), the triple Veda (Vedic knowledge), Vārttā (agriculture, commerce, and cattle-rearing), and Daṇḍanīti (science of governance and law enforcement) – together with learned scholars and capable men who practice these sciences according to their respective fields (so that they are properly propagated and spread among the people). From Ānvīkṣikī comes knowledge of the self and understanding of the true nature of things. Knowledge of righteousness (dharma) and unrighteousness (adharma) rests upon the triple Veda. Wealth and misfortune depend upon the proper use of Vārttā. Justice and injustice are based upon the proper or improper application of Daṇḍanīti. (8–9)



Now we will see the prohibition of Slavery

Before that I will clarify some basic terms –

The Sanskrit word “dasa” is often deliberately mistranslated into English by Western scholars with an ulterior motive to denigrate the Hindu tradition. A case of spiteful mistranslation can be found regarding the word dasa. The Sanskrit word Dāsa is mistranslated as 'slave' so frequently that almost everyone accepts this as the correct meaning.People see Dāsa as equivalent to the shameful and inhumane system of slavery followed by Christian and Islamic invaders all over the world.

दास त्रि० दन्स-दशने “दंसेष्टटनौ नस्य आत्” उणा०
१ ज्ञातात्मनि २ शूद्रे ३ धीवरे च पुंस्त्री स्त्रियां ङीष्।
दास्यते भृतिरस्मै दासति ददात्यङ्गं स्वामिने उपचा-
राय वा दास अच् वा। ४ भृत्ये (चाकर)। दास-दाने

दास्यते भृतिरस्मै दासति ददात्यङ्गं स्वामिने उपचाराय वा दासः। (वाचस्पत्यम्)
Vachaspatyam says that one who is given Salary, and who dedicates his part (Body) for the treatment (Seva) of the Master (in exchange for Salary), is called Dasa.

Where as the definition of slave is a person who is the property of and wholly subject to another and forced to provide unpaid labor.

In Sanatan Dharm it is clearly said that you can't make someone dasa against his/her will ..
It is said
बलाद्दासीकृतश्चौरैर्विक्रीतश्चापि मुच्यते । that if someone is forcibly made a Dasa or sold by thieves, even when already sold, he/she has to be released

Yajnavalkya Smriti says बल्लाद्दासीकृतश्चौरैर्विक्रीतश्चापि मुच्यते । स्वामिप्राणप्रदो भक्तत्यागात्तन्निष्क्रयाद्धि –

ऐसा स्मृतिकार याज्ञवल्क्य का वचन है। जिसे बलपूर्वक दास बना लिया गया हो, तस्करों के द्वारा बेच दिया गया हो, उसे दासत्व से मुक्त कर देना चाहिए। अर्थात् यदि आप अपने घर के लिये या व्यापार के लिए किसी को नौकरी पर रखते हैं तो उसे बलपूर्वक या मानव-तस्करों के द्वारा खरीद बेच कर दास नहीं बनाया हुआ होना चाहिए –

This is the statement of Smriti writer Yagyavalkya. One who has been forcibly made a Dasa or sold by smugglers should be freed from Dasatva. That is, if you employ someone for your home or business, then he should not have been made a slave by force or by buying and selling from human smugglers.

Narada Smriti 5.38 says

चौरापहृतविक्रीता ये च दासीकृता बलात् । राज्ञा मोक्षयितव्यास्ते दासत्वं तेषु नेष्यते ॥ 38 ॥जो लोग चोरों द्वारा अपहरण कर लिए जाते हैं और गुलाम के रूप में बेच दिए जाते हैं या जबरन गुलाम बना लिए जाते हैं, उन्हें राजा द्वारा मुक्त कर दिया जाता है और उन्हें अधिक समय तक जेल में नहीं रखा जा सकता

Those who are kidnapped by thieves and sold as Dasas or are forcibly made Dasa are freed by the king and they cannot be kept in a prison for a longer period of time a person who is forced to work for another against his will is a slave

Where as Slave is one who is made to do work for a person forcefully against his desire

So its clear from the above that Dasa and Slave are ompletely two different terms. A Dasa is one who does a given work and is paid salary for it.

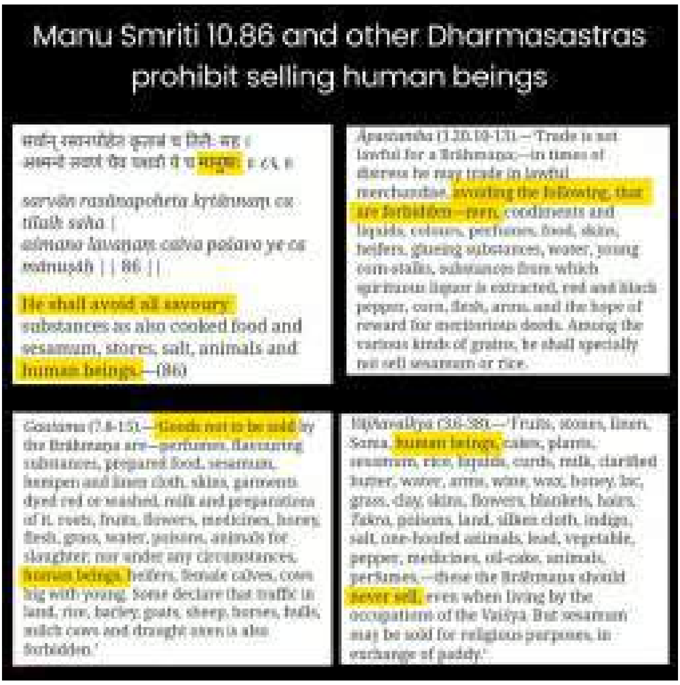
Apastamba (1.20.10-13). Trade is not lawful for a Brāhmaṇa;- in times of distress he may trade in lawful merchandise, avoiding the following, that are forbidden-men, condiments and liquids, colours, perfumes, food, skins, heifers, glueing substances, water, young corn-stalks, substances from which spirituous liquor is extracted, red and black pepper, corn, flesh, arms, and the hope of reward for meritorious deeds. Among the various kinds of grains, he shall specially not sell sesamum or rice.

Gautama (7.8-15).-'Goods not to be sold by the Brahmaṇa are-perfumes, flavouring substances, prepared food, sesamum, hempen and linen cloth, skins, garments dyed red or washed, milk and preparations of it, roots, fruits, flowers, medicines, honey, flesh, grass, water, poisons, animals for slaughter; nor under any circumstances, human beings, heifers, female calves, cows big with young. Some declare that traffic in land, rice, barley, goats, sheep, horses, hulls, milch cows and draught oxen is also forbidden

Yājñavalkya (3.6-38).-'Fruits, stones, linen, Soma, human beings, cakes, plants, sesamum, rice, liquids, curds, milk, clarified butter, water, arms, wine, wax, honey, lac, grass, clay, skins, flowers, blankets, hairs, Takra, poisons, land, silken cloth, indigo, salt, one-hoofed animals, lead, vegetable, pepper, medicines, oil-cake, animals, perfumes, these the Brahmaṇa should never sell, even when living by the occupations of the Vaiśya. But sesamum may be sold for religious purposes, in exchange of paddy.'



Manu Smriti 10.86

He shall avoid all savoury substances as also cooked food and sesamum, stores, salt, animals and human beings. —(86)

Even Traditional Commentators on Manu Smriti 10.86 said similar thing that selling of Human beings is not allowed and is strictly prohibited

1) Medhātithi's Commentary:

> "Sweetness and other six tastes (madhura-ādi ṣaḍ-rasāḥ) are being referred to. The primary substances (dravyāṇi) that strongly exhibit these tastes—such as jaggery (guḍa), pomegranate (dāḍima), kishat (a type of sweet), bitter substances (tikta), etc.—are prohibited (pratiṣidhyante). This is because tastes (rasāḥ) do not exist in isolation; even though the word 'rasa' (taste) does not independently refer to a substance like the word 'white' (śukla) does, it still implies the substance by association (sāmānādhikaraṇya), similar to the expression 'sound in the Ganges' (gaṅgāyāṃ ghoṣaḥ), which refers to sound occurring in the Ganges region."

> "Thus, these are to be avoided in sale: cooked food (kṛtānna), prepared rice (siddham anna), modana (a type of rice preparation), raw rice (taṇḍula), etc. Also, sesame seeds (tilāḥ) and food prepared from sesame should not be sold. However, the prohibition applies when they are sold together (sahaprayuktayoḥ), not individually. That is, the individual sale of either sesame or its preparations may be permitted."

> "'Aśmānaḥ' refers to all types of stones (pāṣāṇa). Salt, even if in rock form (apāṣāṇarūpam), like rock salt (saindhava), is included under the word 'stone' here. In the context of taste, the sale of salt is being definitively prohibited. Therefore, even substances > having sweet or other tastes (madhura-ādīnāṃ) may only be sold incidentally (pākṣika), not as primary items."

"Animals (paśavaḥ), both domesticated (grāmya) and wild (āraṇya), and even human beings (mānuṣāḥ), are included in the prohibition."

(२) सर्वज्ञनारायणः । तदेवाह सर्वानिति । रसान् पत्त्रकाष्ठादिनिर्यासान् अपोहेत विक्रये त्यजेत्, न विक्रीणीतेत्यर्थः । अश्मनः उपलान् । पशव श्छागाः । ये च मानुषा-स्तानिति पूरणीयम् ।। ८६ ।।

"Thus he says 'all' to indicate a complete prohibition. The term 'rasān' refers to plant exudations such as from leaves, wood, etc.—these should not be sold (apohyet = should be avoided in sale). 'Aśmān' refers to stones or pebbles. 'Paśavaḥ' here includes goats (chāgāḥ). The phrase 'and humans' (mānuṣāḥ) is to be understood as completing the list."

(३) कुल्लूकः। तानि वर्जनीयान्याह सर्वानिति । सिद्धार्थतिलपाषाणलवणपशुमनुष्यान्न विक्रीणीत । रसत्वेनैव लवणरय निषेधसिंद्धौं विशेषेण निषेधो दोषगौरवज्ञापनार्थः । तच्च प्रायश्चित्तगौरवार्थमेवमन्यस्यापि पृथङ्निषेधो व्याख्येयः ।। ८६ ।।

All those actions which are prohibited and not encouraged (anacodyamānān adharmaḥ) are to be avoided. That's what is implied by the use of 'sarvān' (all). This includes cooked food made from sesame, stones, salt, animals, and humans—they are not to be sold. In the context of taste, salt is specifically prohibited, emphasizing the gravity of the fault (doṣa-gaurava). The specific prohibition also indicates the need for serious expiation (prāyaścitta), and similar prohibitions should be interpreted in the same manner for other items."

(८) गोविन्दराजः। तानि वर्जनीयान्याहुः सर्वानिति । सर्वान् खण्डादीन् रसांस्तथा सिद्धान्नतिलपाषाणपशुलवणमनुष्यान् न विक्रीणीत । लवणस्य रसशब्देनैव ग्रहणसिद्धौ पृथग्वचनं दोषविशेषज्ञापनार्थम् । एतेनान्यस्यापि पृथगाम्नातव्याख्यातम् ।। ८६ ।।

"They say these are to be renounced entirely. One should not trade any of the six rasas, cooked food, sesame, stones, animals, salt, or humans. The fact that salt is mentioned separately despite already being covered under 'rasa' highlights a special fault or defect associated with salt. Similarly, other specific terms mentioned separately despite being implied serve to draw special attention to their prohibition."

Similarly Mahabharat too prohibits and condemns slavery – Mahabharat 12.262.39 –

Bride selling

Leave aside this purchasing of female slaves, Hinduism even brings a kind of marriage into slavery. As we know there are many forms of marriage in Hinduism, one of them is Manusha rite commonly known as Asura form of marriage. Vasistha explains it as,

Vasistha Dharma Shastra 1.35-36 "If, after making a bargain (with the father, a suitor) marries (a damsel) purchased for money, that (is called) the Manusha-rite. The purchase (of a wife) is mentioned in the following passage of the Veda,

'Therefore one hundred (cows) besides a chariot should be given to the father of the bride."

Gautama Dharma Shastra 4.11-15 "If those who have (authority over) a female are propitiated by money, (that is) an Asura wedding…The first four (rites) are lawful; Some say, (the first) six."

Baudhayana Dharma Shastra Prasna I, Adhyaya 11, Kandika 20 (I, II, 20), Verses 7-8 "(If the bridegroom receives the maiden) after gladdening (the parents) by money, (that is) the rite of the Asuras (asura). (If the maiden is wedded) after being forcibly abducted, (that is) the rite of the Rakshasas (rakshasa). [12] Among these the sixth and the seventh agree with the law of Kshatriyas. For power is their attribute."

Baudhayana permits Asura (Manusha) form of marriage for Kshatriya whereas Manu Smriti prohibits it for Kshatriya and permits them for Vaishyas and Shudras and in some cases for Brahmanas also.

Manu Smriti 3.20-24 "Now listen to (the) brief (description of) the following eight marriage-rites used by the four castes (varna) which partly secure benefits and partly produce evil both in this life and after death. (They are) the rite of Brahman (Brahma), that of the gods (Daiva), that of the Rishis (Arsha), that of Pragapati (Pragapatya), that of the Asuras (Asura), that of the Gandharvas (Gandharva), that of the Rhashasas (Rakshasa), and that of the Pisakas (Paisaka). Which is lawful for each caste (varna) and which are the virtues or faults of each (rite), all this I will declare to you, as well as their good and evil results with respect to the offspring. One may know that the first six according to the order (followed above) are lawful for a Brahmana, the four last for a Kshatriya, and the same four, excepting the Rakshasa rite, for a Vaisya and a Sudra. The sages state that the first four are approved (in the case) of a Brahmana, one, the Rakshasa (rite in the case) of a Kshatriya, and the Asura (marriage in that) of a Vaisya and of a Sudra."

Garuda Purana permits Asura marriage for the Vaishyas,

Garuda Purana I.95.10-11 "In the Asura form of marriage, money is taken…The first four types of marriage are recommended for brahmin

Vishnu Smriti 24.24 and Asvalayana Grihya Sutra 1.6.6 also mentions Asura marriage. Bhishma also talks about prevalence of these forms of marriages,

Mahabharata Adi Parva 1, Section 116, Verses 8-10 "Bhishma said:- The wise have said that after inviting an accomplished man, a maiden may be bestowed on him decked with ornaments and accompanied with valuable presents as much as lie in the power of the bestower to give. Others may bestow their daughters by accepting a couple of kine. Some again may bestow their daughters by taking a fixed sum, and some again take away maidens by force. Some marry with the consent of the maidens and some by dragging them into consent…"

Skanda Purana also states that Asura form of marriage was prevalent among Kshatriyas and Vaishyas,

Skanda Purana IV.i.38.7 "Generally speaking, the marriages of the types of Gandharva, Asura and Raksasa are in vogue among Ksatriyas and Vaisyas..."

Refutation-

Manu Smriti 3.41-42 says Asura and Rakshas Vivah results in offspring who are cruel, anti-Veda & habitual liars and hence Rakshas and Asura Vivah should be avoided at all costs and never performed or practiced by anybody at all

Verse 41:
"When the other remaining four types of improper marriages take place, the children born from them are harsh, untruthful, and hold hatred towards the Vedic Dharma."

Verse 42:
"Children born from a dharmically wedded wife—through a marriage approved by the scriptures and considered noble—are not objects of criticism but of praise. On the other hand, those born of a woman wed through unapproved and blameworthy marriage systems become subjects of contempt. Therefore, to avoid the birth of distress-bringing children, such degraded forms of marriage should be avoided."

In marriages other than the Brahma and similar approved types—i.e., in Gandharva and others—the children speak harshly and untruthfully.
'Harsh' refers to vulgar or abusive language used toward mother, sister, etc.
'Untruthful' refers to lies and well-known dishonesty.
The etymology of 'nṛśaṁsa-anṛta' (cruel and false) is given as those whose nature is to say such things.
'Brahma-dharma' refers to Vedic dharma and the meaning of the Vedas; these people either hate, criticize, or do not believe in it.
Therefore, such marriages are to be condemned."

This verse presents a summary of the results of various types of marriages.
The children (progeny such as sons) born from those marriages which are scripturally sanctioned (अनिन्दित, unblameworthy) are themselves unblameworthy and praiseworthy.
The ones born from condemned (निन्दित) and prohibited (प्रतिषिद्ध) marriages are blameworthy.
Therefore, since such condemned marriages result in sorrow-bringing progeny, one should avoid such condemned marriages."

From the four lower types of marriage—Asura, Gandharva, Rakshasa, and Paisacha—excluding the approved Brahma and similar ones, children are born who commit cruel deeds, lie a lot, and hate the Vedas and Vedic rituals like yajñas."

This verse is a concise statement about the fruits (results) of marriage.
Through deserving (scripturally appropriate) marriage forms, men obtain an unblameworthy lineage.
But through condemned (गर्हित) marriages, the progeny is also condemned.
Therefore, one should not engage in blameworthy marriages."

"In the four remaining marriage forms, children are born who are cruel, liars, and haters of Brahma-dharma.
These forms are Asura, Gandharva, Rakshasa, and Paisacha.

From marriages that are unblameworthy (अनिन्दितैः), praiseworthy progeny (children like sons) are born — this is the intended meaning.
From condemned marriages such as the Asura type, blameworthy children are born.
Therefore, one should avoid such condemned marriages."

He highlights the defects in the four other forms (excluding Brahma, Daiva, Arsha, and Prajapatya).
The word 'śiṣṭeṣu avaśiṣṭeṣu' refers to the remaining unapproved forms.
'Nṛśaṁsa' means cruel, either by action or by nature.
'Brahma' here refers to the Veda, the Brahmin caste, or Vedic dharma like Agnihotra, all of which these offspring tend to despise."

"Just as the logic of 'A mountain does not cry' implies that a non-mountain does, this verse also implies a prohibition of blameworthy marriages by praising the unblameworthy ones (अनिन्दितैः).
Just as in statements like 'he who sings is blessed', there's an implied directive.
So too, this verse implies that one should undertake only unblameworthy marriages; the prohibition of blameworthy ones is conveyed indirectly (arthavāda — a laudatory or cautionary statement with implied command)."

One should never practice the Asura or Rakshasa forms of marriage.””For Brahmins, Kshatriyas, and Vaisyas and Shudras the Brahma, Prajapatya, and Gandharva types of marriage are dharmic (in accordance with dharma). These are righteous and free from sin.”

Among the eight types of marriages mentioned above, the first four — Brāhma, Prājāpatya, Ārṣa, and Daiva — are in accordance with dharma.

Skanda Purana I.iii(U).20.32-33 "Be victorious, O Lord, whose head is adorned with Ganga and the crescent moon, O Lord, who have fascinated the minds of the wives of all sages by means of your handsome features. Be victorious, O Lord, who are possessed of the glory of the god of Love due to the close contact of the daughter of the Mountain. Be victorious, O Lord, who are an expert in the repetition of the (sexual) play over the body of Naranaya adopted by means of Maya (?)."

देवी कहती हैं- हे मेरुचाय, कैलासाचलवासी, नीहार (हिम) शैल के जामाता, शोणाचल रूपी, वरुणादि देवगण द्वारा अर्चनीय, तरुणादित्य के समान किरणों वाले, अरुणाचलेश्वर, करुणामूर्ति आपको प्रणाम ! हे जन्हुपुत्री (गंगा) तथा चन्द्रलेखा द्वारा अलंकृत मस्तक वाले, आप अपने सौन्दर्य से समस्त मुनियों के अन्तःकरण को मुग्ध करते हैं। आपको प्रणाम! आपकी जय हो। आप शैलपुत्री के साथ अनंग वैभव का पोषण करते हैं। आप मायानारायण के आभोगार्थ क्रीड़ा में पण्डित हैं। आपकी जय हो। हे सन्ध्यासमोपंत सम्भूतानन्द ताण्डव ! आप देव-गन्धर्व-सिद्ध-विद्याधर द्वारा पूजित हैं। आपकी जय हो। हे हेरम्बजनक! सम्मुखवत्सल (पार्वती) हैमवती द्वारा प्रार्थित, पार्थिवदुर्लभ ! आपकी जय हो।" उन ज्योतिपदार्थ के अवलोकन में तत्पर देवी को यह स्तव करते देखकर वृषध्वज देवदेव शिव वहीं विलीन हो गये तथा सुन्दर रूप धारण करके वृषभारूढ़ होकर पार्वती को दर्शन देने वहीं प्रकट हो गये। उन्होंने यह दर्शन भगवती शिवा को प्रदान किया, जो अतिशय मान के कारण सभी ऐश्वर्य का त्याग करके तप कर रही थीं। वे शंकर के प्रति मुग्ध शिवा को सान्त्वना देने का प्रयास करने लगे।।३०-३८।।
।। विंश अध्याय समाप्त।।

The goddess said:

"O Meruchaya (resplendent like Mount Meru), O resident of Mount Kailasa, son-in-law of the snowy mountain (Himavat), O embodiment of Shonachala (Arunachala), worshipped by gods like Varuna, one whose rays are like that of the rising sun, O Arunachaleshwara, embodiment of compassion—salutations to you!

O one adorned with the crescent moon and the holy river Ganga (Jahnavi) on your head, you enchant the hearts of all sages with your divine beauty—salutations to you! Victory to you!

You, along with Shailaputri (Parvati), nourish the bliss of divine love (Ananga Vaibhava). You are an expert in the divine play (Krida) intended for the delight of Maya-Narayana—victory to you!

O embodiment of the joyous Tandava dance performed at twilight, you are worshipped by devas, gandharvas, siddhas, and vidyadharas—victory to you!

O father of Heramba (Ganesha), prayed to by the affectionate daughter of Himavat, Parvati, you are rarely attainable even through severe penance—victory to you!"

Seeing the goddess engaged in such devotional praise while perceiving that effulgent form (jyoti), Lord Shiva—the ord of all gods, Vrishadhvaja—merged into that very light and then manifested before Parvati in a beautiful form, mounted on his bull (Vrishabha).

He granted this divine vision to the supreme goddess Shiva (Parvati), who, out of great pride and resolve, had renounced all prosperity and was engaged in intense penance. Now, seeing her enamored with him, Lord Shankara began to console her.

So here Maya- Narayana is none other than Devi Parvati- the eteranal consort of Maheshwar Shiva . So the meaning here is –

आप मायानारायण के आभोगार्थ क्रीड़ा में पण्डित हैं।

You are an expert in the divine play meant for the enjoyment of Māyā-Nārāyaṇa Who is None other than Devi Parvati “

Moreover nowhere it’s explicitly told about any Sexual intercourse here

Agni Purana 3.17-20 He [Vishnu] was then requested by Hara to show (this form) unto him. The Divine Hari then displayed his female form unto Rudra. Overpowered by his (Vishnu’s) illusory power, Shambhu, renouncing Gouri, longed for that damsel. He became naked and looked like a maniac. He held the woman by the hair and she, releasing her hairs, ran away.

He too followed her. Wherever dropped Hara's seminal fluid there sprang up fields of his phallic emblem and gold.

The story mentioned in Srimad Bhagavatam will briefly explain this,

Srimad Bhagavatam 8.12.15-16 "The Supreme Personality of Godhead said: When the demons took away the jug of nectar, I assumed the form of a beautiful woman to bewilder them by directly cheating them and thus to act in the interest of the demigods. O best of the demigods, I shall now show you My form that is very much appreciated by those who are lusty. Since you want to see that form, I shall reveal it in your presence. [19] Because the ball was falling down and bouncing up, as She played with it Her breasts trembled, and because of the weight of those breasts and Her heavy flower garlands, Her waist appeared to be all but breaking at every step, as Her two soft feet, which were reddish like coral, moved here and there. [21] As She played with the ball, the sari covering Her body became loose, and Her hair scattered. She tried to bind Her hair with Her beautiful left hand, and at the same time She played with the ball by striking it with Her right hand. This was so attractive that the Supreme Lord [Vishnu], by His internal potency, in this way captivated everyone. [24-26] Thus Lord Śiva saw the woman, every part of whose body was beautifully formed, and the beautiful woman also looked at him. Therefore, thinking that She was attracted to him, Lord Śiva became very much attracted to Her. Lord Śiva, his good sense taken away by the woman because of lusty desires to enjoy with Her, became so mad for Her that even in the presence of Bhavānī [Shiva's wife] he did not hesitate to approach Her. The beautiful woman was already naked, and when She saw Lord Śiva coming toward Her, She became extremely bashful. Thus She kept smiling, but She hid Herself among the trees and did not stand in one place. [28-32] After following Her with great speed, Lord Śiva caught Her by the braid of Her hair and dragged Her near him. Although She was unwilling, he embraced Her with his arms. Being embraced by Lord Śiva like a female elephant embraced by a male, the woman, whose hair was scattered, swirled like a snake. O King, this woman,

Traditional Sri Vaishnava Acharya Pandit Madhavacharya Shastri in his book Purana Digdarshan page 599 explained the meaning of the Shiva Mohini story in Bhagvatam

(क) यद् रुद्रश्चन्द्रमास्तेन । – (कोषीतकी ६ । ७) – (a) Due to which Rudra [is called] the Moon.

(ख) (प्रजापतिः) तं (रुद्रं) अब्रवीन्महादेवोऽसीति । तद्यदस्य तन्नामाकरोच्चन्द्रमास्तरूपमभवत् ।। (शतपथ ६ । १।३।१६) -Prajapati said to this Rudra that you are Mahadev because he was named Mahadev = Mahan-radiant, so he (beautiful) became the Moon. . (ग) आग्नेयी पृथिवी । (ताण्ड्य १५।४।८) -This earth was igneous – fiery vapor

(घ) इयं (पृथिवी) वै देव्यदितिविश्वरूपी । (तैत्तिरीय १ । ७ । ६।७) – This earth itself is the beautiful goddess in the form of Mohini

So the meaning is that on insistence of Lord Shiva in the form of Moon, the आग्नेय वाष्प in the form of Vishnu, on attaining density, assumed the form of Mohini in the form of the Earth. So, when the Earth became stable and the Earth also got an independent orbit due to the attraction and repulsion of other planets, the Moon started revolving around the Earth, as if Lord Shiva became infatuated with the beauty of the Earth in the form of Mohini. This is what Mahadev means by running after Mohini; the Moon ran around to its full capacity, spread its rays or hands, but could not get anything, that is, the Moon could not assimilate the Earth, this is the meaning of Mohini not coming in its hands.

Then whats the meaning of Maheshwar Shiva releasing his tejas behind Mohini . Pandit Madhavacharya Shastri explained

वर्तमान विज्ञानवेत्ता भी इस बात को स्वीकार करते हैं कि आरम्भमें यह पृथ्वी तपे हुवे सोने के बराबर जाज्वल्यमान एवं दमकते हुवे पिण्ड के समान थी सो ज्यों ही चांद पृथ्वीपिण्ड की अपरिमित ऊष्मा से संश्लिष्ट हुवा तो उसका बहुत सा भास्वर हिम पिघल २ कर बहने लगा। गर्मी के संयोग से बर्फ का बह जाना विज्ञान सिद्ध बात है। सो यही शिव के वीर्यपात का आशय है।

The present day Science also accept that in the beginning, the earth was like a glowing and shining body like heated gold, (As provided in Vedic Shruti as well) so as soon as the moon was composed of the infinite heat of the earth, a lot of its shining snow melted and started flowing. It is a scientifically proven fact that snow starts flowing due to heat. So this is the meaning of Shiva's semen discharge in Srimad Bhagvatam 8.12. 32

Allegations-

Brahmanda Purana Lalita Mahatmya 6.7-9 "The second form appeared when the churning for the sake of Nectar was being carried out. That form fascinated Sarva (Siva). It cannot be comprehended by the mind or expressed through words. On seeing it, even isa (god Siva) became charmed and enchanted although he is omniscient. When prohibited by her, he left off Parvati all of a sudden and he indulged in sexual intercourse with her (i.e. Mohini). He begot of her (the son) Sasta, the supressor of Asuras." Tr. G.V. Tagare Shasta is popularly known as Ayyappa in south India. He is also known by the name Hari-Hara. As he was born from Hari (Vishnu) and Hara (Shiva).

Refutation-

The claim that Ayyappa (Shasta) was born from a homosexual union between Shiva and Vishnu is based on a superficial reading of the Brahmanda Purana Lalita Mahatmya 6.7–9 and ignores the clear theological framework given in the same Purana and other texts. Mohini is not "male Vishnu dressed as a woman" but the direct māyā form of the Supreme Goddess Lalita Tripurasundari (Uma), who is Vishnu's own Shakti. The Lalita Sahasranama (name 562) and Soundarya Lahari 5 state that Vishnu assumed the form of Mohini only after meditating upon and uniting with Uma's essence, thereby manifesting the Goddess Herself. The Brahmanda Purana explicitly narrates that Mohini was an incarnation of Lalita Devi, who disappeared after the birth of Shasta, revealing her true divine nature. According to the Rudra-hridayopanishad (1.5), Uma Herself is Vishnu, showing the non-duality of Hari and Shakti. Thus, the union of Shiva with Mohini was a union of Shiva and Shakti, the eternal male–female cosmic principle, not two males. "Hari-Hara-putra" refers to the child born of this union of Hara (Shiva) with the Shakti manifested through Hari (Vishnu), not a homosexual relationship. The episode is symbolic of Śiva–Śakti unity and Advaita, in which Shasta's birth served the dharmic purpose of subduing asuras, not as an expression of human sexual categories.

WHO WAS MOHINI?
Mohini was an illusion created by Devi Lalita Tripurasundari (uma) because she herself is Vishnu maya

BRAHMANDA PURAN, UTTARABHAGA
CHAPTER 6
Thus, the Divine Mother who manifested and enchanted the demons was called MOHINI (the divine entrantress). Shiva, staying in Kailasha came to know of these events and wanted to note the speciality of the new form of Vishnu. Along with his consort Parvati, Shiva went to Vaikuntha, the abode of Vishnu and pressed Him to show the form of Mohini. Vishnu suddenly disappeared without saying yes or no.
While Shiva was searching for Vishnu, he happened to reach a new place where he continued to search.
There he heard the music of Veena. He saw a beautiful young lady.who was Mohini an incaration of Lalitha Devi Unable to resist his infatuation, Shiva embraced her. At once a divine baby was born. He was named SHASTA (one who rules). He became a commander in Shiva's army.
At once the lady disappeared. Shiva realised that she was none else than Mohini, a form of Vishnu. He applauded her beauty and returned to Kailasha along with Parvati.
Thus the Divine Mother incarnated as Mohini and granted success of the activities of the celestials.9

BRAHMANDA PURAN, CHAPTER 10 MANIFESTATION OF MOHINI

4. In the meantime, Vishnu, the sole protector of all the worlds, earnestly propitiated Lalita2 whose form was in union with his own.
5. The lord (Vishnu), the leader of Yogins, propitiated Maheshvari. By meditating solely on her, he became identical in form with her.
6. She fascinated and enchanted everyone. She was the very heroine incarnate of the sentiment of love. She was richly-clad in a seductively charming dress and she was bedecked with all ornaments.
   Brahmand puran gives the same narration where Sri Hari got mohini roop from Devi Lalita after uniting with her and Mohini was maya (illusion) here we can see the Non duality(advaita) between Vishnu and Adi Shakti रुद्रहृदयोपनिषदः (1.5) says, वामपार्श्वे उमा देवी विष्णुः सोमोऽपि ते त्रयः या उमा सा स्वयं विष्णुर्यो II
   Devi Uma Herself is in the form of Vishnu this chapter shows Aikyavada of Sri Hari and Devi Adi shakti

BRAHMANDA PURAN, CHAPTER 10 MANIFESTATION OF MOHINI
45-46. Mahadeva requested him
"O lord Purushottama, O glorious Lord and master of great Yogic practice, show me that beautiful form of excellent magnificence, charming in every respect, which had been assumed by you-the form that bewitched and fascinated everyone, and which surpassed the power of the mind (imagination) and of speech (being beyond description).

47. I wish to see that form of yours which is the presiding deity of the sentiment of love. It should, by all means, be seen by me. Indeed, you are like the divine cow that yields everything that is sought."

48-49. On being repeatedly requested thus by Mahadeva, Hari the lord and master of great yogic practice, meditated with single-minded devotion on that (supreme deity), by meditating on whom that matchlessly miraculous form had been obtained by him (before). Smiling a little, he said, -"Be it so" and then vanished.

After Samudra Manthan Mahadev requested Vishnu to show his Mohini swaroop then Shri Hari again meditates on Devi Lalita and acquires that form

Shiva, staying in Kailasha came to know of these events and wanted to note the speciality of the new form of Vishnu. Along with his consort Parvati, Shiva went to Vaikuntha, the abode of Vishnu and pressed Him to show the form of Mohini. Vishnu suddenly disappeared without saying yes or no.

While Shiva was searching for Vishnu, he happened to reach a new place where he continued to search.

There he heard the music of Veena. He saw a beautiful young lady.who was Mohini an incaration of Lalitha Devi Unable to resist his infatuation, Shiva embraced her. At once a divine baby was born. He was named SHASTA (one who rules). He became a commander in Shiva's army.

At once the lady disappeared. Shiva realised that she was none else than Mohini, a form of Vishnu. He applauded her beauty and returned to Kailasha along with Parvati.

Thus the Divine Mother incarnated as Mohini and granted success of the activities of the celestials.9

BRAHMANDA PURAN,CHAPTER 10
MANIFESTATION OF MOHINI

4. In the meantime, Vishnu, the sole protector of all the worlds, earnestly propitiated Lalita[2] whose form was in union with his own.

7. The lord (Vishnu), the leader of Yogins, propitiated Maheshvari. By meditating solely on her, he became identical in form with her.

8. She fascinated and enchanted everyone. She was the very heroine incarnate of the sentiment of love. She was richly-clad in a seductively charming dress and she was bedecked with all ornaments.

Brahmand puran gives the same narration where Sri Hari got mohini roop from Devi Lalita after uniting with her and Mohini was maya(illusion)here we can see the Non duality(advaita) between Vishnu and Adi Shakti रुद्रहृदयोपनिषद: (1.5) says,वामपार्श्वे उमा देवी विष्णु: सोमोऽपि ते त्रय: या उमा सा स्वयं विष्णुर्यो ||

MANIFESTATION OF MOHINI

45-46. Mahadeva requested him – "O lord Purushottama, O glorious Lord and master of great Yogic practice, show me that beautiful form of excellent magnificence, charming in every respect, which had been assumed by you-the form that bewitched and fascinated everyone, and which surpassed the power of the mind (imagination) and of speech (being beyond description).

47. I wish to see that form of yours which is the presiding deity of the sentiment of love. It should, by all means, be seen by me. Indeed, you are like the divine cow that yields everything that is sought."

48-49. On being repeatedly requested thus by Mahadeva, Hari the lord and master of great yogic practice, meditated with single-minded devotion on that (supreme deity), by meditating on whom that matchlessly miraculous form had been obtained by him (before). Smiling a little, he said, -"Be it so" and then vanished.

After Samudra Manthan Mahadev requested Vishnu to show his Mohini swaroop then Shri Hari again meditates on Devi Lalita and acquires that form

Morever as I had explained earlier-

The union of Shiva and Shakti(Mohini) —who in this context is none other than Vishnu's own Māyā—cannot be equated with mortal relationships, for it represents the meeting of cosmic principles beyond the confines of human limitation. The Śāstras themselves declare that the very body of Maheshvara Shiva is the entire cosmic universe, not a human-like form (Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 8.7.27–30). Thus, such divine interactions are symbolic of universal creation and the interplay of transcendental energies, far removed from material or carnal interpretations.

Allegations-

Shiva and Agni
There is one more story of LGBT of Shiva. Where Shiva ejaculated his semen into the mouth of the fire god Agni, after Agni interrupted his sexual dalliance of Shiva with his wife. The context of this story is that all the gods were frightened by a demon named Taraka who was causing trouble on earth, no god could defeat him except Shiva.

Brahma Purana, Gautami-Mahatmya 58.16-24 "At the instance of Devas the fire-god assumed the form of a parrot and went to the place where the lord of the worlds was sporting with Uma…The lord of Devas called the fire-god moving about in front of him, in the form of a bird and said, "O Agni, you have been recognised through various ways. Do not speak anything. Open your mouth. Take this in and carry it with you." After saying this lord Sambhu discharged a great deal of semen in

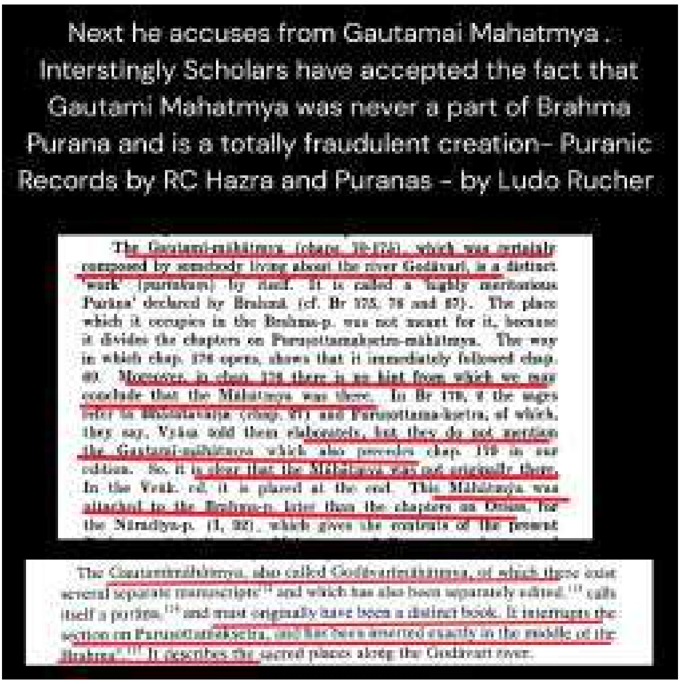
Next he accuses from Gautami Mahatmya . Interestingly Scholars have accepted the fact that Gautami Mahatmya was never a part of Brahma Purana and is a totally fraudulent creation- Puranic Records by RC Hazra and Puranas – by Ludo Rucher



The Gautami-māhātmya (chaps. 70-175), which was certainly composed by somebody living about the river Godāvarī, is a distinct work (purāṇam) by itself. It is called a 'highly meritorious Purāṇa' declared by Brahmā (cf. Br 175. 78 and 87). The place which it occupies in the Brahma-p. was not meant for it, because it divides the chapters on Puruṣottamakṣetra-māhātmya. The way in which chap. 176 opens, shows that it immediately followed chap. 69. Moreover, in chap. 178 there is no hint from which we may conclude that the Māhātmya was there. In Br 178, 2 the sages refer to Bhūvarṇana (chap. 21) and Puruṣottama-kṣetra, of which, they say, Vyāsa told them elaborately, but they do not mention the Gautami-māhātmya which also precedes chap. 176 in our edition. So, it is clear that the Māhātmya was not originally there. In the Venk. ed. it is placed at the end. This Māhātmya was attached to the Brahma-p. later than the chapters on Orissa, for the Nāradīya-p. (I, 92), which gives the contents of the present

The Gautamīmāhātmya, also called Godāvarīmāhātmya, of which there exist several separate manuscripts[11] and which has also been separately edited,[12] calls itself a purāṇa,[13] and must originally have been a distinct book. It interrupts the section on Puruṣottamakṣetra, and has been inserted exactly in the middle of the Brahma.[14] It describes the sacred places along the Godāvarī river.

Allegations-

This is also mentioned in Mahabharata 9.44.6-11 with a slight variation. Kartikkeya is considered the son of Shiva and Agni as per Vamana Purana as the semen was swallowed by Agni,

Vamana Purana 31.26-28 “O Brahman, in the meantime Brahman said to Agni 'How old and grown up is your son, Guha now'? Hearing his words, and not knowing his son, Agni said to Brahman, I do not know who is Guha,' Being pleased, the Lord said, 'You drank the semen of Sankara in the past, so a child, the lord of the three worlds has been born in the thickest of reeds.” Tr. Anand Swarup Gupta

As per another version, the sages' wives who were bathing in the river were also impregnated as Agni had deposited a portion of the semen in the river. Later all those wives aborted their pregnancies except Arundhati. Agni is an intermediary, i.e. whatever is put in Agni reaches the god as a result the semen of Shiva went into the stomach of all the gods and they were impregnated by it,

Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Kumara Khanda 4. Ch 2.25 ”The gods are wont to partake of the offerings of food etc. consigned to the fire in accordance with the Vedic text. Hence the gods became pregnant.”

The gods later vomited the semen on the behest of Shiva, Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Kumara Khanda 4. Ch 2.30-38 ”We have become pregnant and also scorched by your semen. O Siva, take pity on us. Remove our miserable plight... [Shiva said] At my Behest you shall vomit this semen virile of mine. you will be happy thereby. Accepting this command with bent head Visnu and the other gods immediately vomited it out after duly remembering Siva the imperishable”

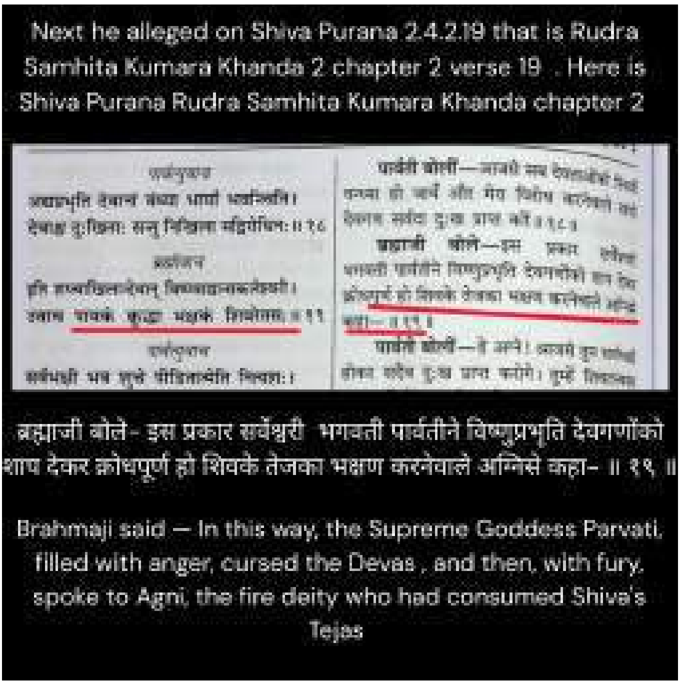
Refutation-

Next he alleged on Vamana Purana and Shiva Purana 2.4.2.19 that is Rudra Samhita Kumara Khanda 2 chapter 2 verse 19 . Here is Shiva Purana Rudra Samhita Kumara Khanda chapter 2

ब्रह्माजी बोले- इस प्रकार सर्वेश्वरी भगवती पार्वतीने विष्णुप्रभृति देवगणोंको शाप देकर क्रोधपूर्ण हो शिवके तेजका भक्षण करनेवाले अग्निसे कहा- ॥ १९ ॥

Brahmaji said — In this way, the Supreme Goddess Parvati, filled with anger, cursed the Devas , and then, with fury, spoke to Agni, the fire deity who had consumed Shiva's Tejas .



Here the second chapter of Rudra Samhita Kumara Khanda is about birth of Kumar Kartikeya from Maheshwar Shiva Tejas

Kataka Commentary on Valmiki Ramayana Bala Kanda Sarga 36 sloka 12 too says that Tejas of Shiva is the Energy of Shiva and Uma which is held within the Aditya Mandala (Constellation of the Sun)which if released unnecessarily could destroy the universe . Whereas mortal human semen is made and stored in blood muscles and veins . This also proves that Maheshwar Shiva Tejas is his Divine Energy and not mortal human semen

Then what should be done? The gods advise Siva to perform the Brahma tapas along with Uma. What is the use of the Brahma tapas and why should Siva perform it? Because he might be able to secure his seed. In the beginning of conception we have an embryo. The semen remains over all parts of the body and soul. "Hold your mercurial semen within the sahaja eight-fold yoga" said the gods. But then the question arises about the effect of holding the semen through sahaja yoga in the body? The answer is it will save the world. It is said that the semen, of the Brahman is held within the Aditya mandala (in the constellation of the Sun) and it saves the worlds. If it is released, like Siva's semen the worlds will be destroyed.Hence 'Na alokam kartumarhasi'. So Siva accepted their plea. All the gods are his limbs and if the limbs are destroyed and he will become a branchless trunk (Sthanu). So, he said "All right! I shall hold my seed and so shall Uma. The gods and earth can be happy now. Uma will hold her seed in the fire". It is said in the Vedas that the menstrual flow in the women is a form of Agni. Siva will hold his seed in water. If their seed falls on the earth, it will burn the entire world and even the gods. "Therefore, to protect them, we shall hold our seed." But stirred by long love the semen will drop from its place .It is in the form of moisture and infallible and the best one capable of giving birth to a son who will be able to fulfil gods' requirement. Who will be able to hold it? Saying this Siva released his seed with which the entire earth along with all its mountains and forests became filled.

should Siva perform it? Because he might be able to secure his seed. In the beginning of conception we have an embryo. The semen remains over all parts of the body and soul. Tilaka Commentary on Valmiki Ramayana Sarga 36 too states that Maheshwar Shiva Tejas is his and Uma Devi's Energy only which Agni Deva received and not any mortal human semen

If lord Siva bears his energy in his own self, of what use is it to the world? The scriptures say 'what is in man in the form of semen is the form of energy in the Sun. That form of energy is light which is the disc of the Sun itself. In that circle the whole world is being protected, if the reverse happens, there will be a calamity (Viparyaye Viparyaya).' If the sun perishes the whole world will collapse.
Siva says, 'I along with Uma, will bear the fire of my energy in my own self'. So he bears the semen. It will turn into fire (blood) in women. Since this world cannot withstand the extraordinary energy, if released, there would be devastation. This is the sense.
The gods said, 'This earth will bear it because it has unlimited power of forbearance'. This is the implied sense. The gods engaged Agni to receive the energy released on the earth as he is the lord and well-wisher of the earth. The wind which accompanied him helped him move. That energy acquired the form of the white mountain and having entered the earth by means of Agni, was moving (as he carried it). Then that energy got the form of a thicket of needles like the fire of the Sun at the place of its entry as a result of its greatness. Since Agni carried the energy for some time, it should be noted, Karttikeya originated from Agni. There was joy among the gods that Siva's energy was borne for the benefit of the world and that the energy that fell transformed into Kartikeya for the sake of the gods. But there was anger in Uma, for Siva did not accept Uma engaged in his worship. She cursed the Earth, saying 'Be not in one form. May you give fruits for a variety of seeds in the ame field. Be wife to many husbands (Lords of the earth or kings).

The implication is, 'If only she (earth) had not conceded to bear the energy of Siva, Uma would have received it. She would have had that son'.

Story of Uma 1.35.8-27

If lord Siva bears his energy in his own self, of what use is it to the world? The scriptures say 'what is in man in the form of semen is the form of energy in the Sun. Allegations-

According to Tamil versions of the Mahabharata, the god Krishna – an incarnation of Vishnu – also took the form of Mohini and married Aravan. This was in order to give Aravan the chance to experience love before his death, as he had volunteered to be sacrificed. Krishna remained in mourning in the Mohini form for some time after Aravan's death. This marriage and death of Aravan are commemorated annually in a rite known as Thali, during which Hijra (Indian "third gender") take on the role of Krishna-Mohini and "marry" Aravan in a mass-wedding, followed by an 18-day festival. The festival ends with a ritual burial of Aravan, while the Hirjas mourn in Tamil style: by beating their chests in ritual dances, breaking their bangles and changing into white mourning clothes.

Refutation-

In the authentic Sanskrit Mahabharata composed by Vedavyasa, Iravan (son of Arjuna and Ulupi) neither sacrificed himself before the war nor married Krishna in the Mohini form. The Bhishma Parva clearly records that Iravan fought on the Pandava side during the Kurukshetra war and was killed in battle by the Rakshasa king Alambusha. The entire account of a voluntary sacrifice, pre-death marriage to Mohini-Krishna, and subsequent mourning rituals is absent from Vyasa's epic and originates in later Tamil folk narratives such as the Koothandavar tradition. These later compositions altered Iravan's death from a battlefield encounter to a sacrificial act and introduced the Mohini marriage episode, making them a later regional addition rather than part of the original Mahabharata.

Claims that Iravan sacrificed himself before the Kurukshetra war are contradicted by the actual narrative in Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Adhyaya 90 (Gita Press edition), verses 16–17, where he is shown alive, arriving on the battlefield with his cavalry to aid the Pandavas. The text records Arjuna, in Devaloka, instructing his son to support them in battle, and Iravan later fulfilling this command by confronting the Kaurava forces—clearly proving he participated in the war rather than perishing beforehand.

नरेश्वर ! भरतनन्दन ! उन दिनों देवलोकमें अर्जुनने प्रेमपूर्वक अपने महाबाहु पुत्रको अपना सब कार्य बताते हुए कहा – ।। १६ ।। शक्तिशाली पुत्र ! युद्धके अवसरपर तुम हमलोगोंको सहायता देना।' तब बहुत अच्छा कहकर इरावान् चला गया और अब युद्धके अवसरपर यहाँ आया है ।। १७ ।

O lord of kings, O descendant of Bharata! In those days, in the realm of the gods, Arjuna affectionately spoke to his mighty-armed son, telling him all his affairs: (16)
"My powerful son, at the time of battle, you must come to our aid." Then, saying "Very well," Iravan departed, and now, at the time of battle, he has come here. (17)

DESCRIPTION OF IRAVAN FIGHTING IN KURUKSHETRA WAR AGAINST KAURAVAS

Mahabharat Bhisma Parva Adhaya 90 slokas 29-31

महाबाहो ! उस समय उन युद्धदुर्मद गान्धार-देशीय वीरोंने विजय अथवा स्वर्गकी अभिलाषा लेकर विशाल सेनाके साथ पाण्डव-वाहिनीके परम दुर्जयव्यूहका भेदन करके हर्ष और उत्साहसे परिपूर्ण हो उसके भीतर प्रवेश किया ।। २९ तब उन्हें सेनाके भीतर प्रविष्ट हुआ देख पराक्रमी इरावान्ने भी समरभूमिमें भयंकर अस्त्र-शस्त्रवाले अपने विचित्र योद्धाओंसे कहा- 'वीरो ! तुम सब लोग संग्राममें ऐसी नीति बना लो, जिससे दुर्योधनके ये समस्त योद्धा अपने सेवकों और सवारियोंसहित मार डाले जायँ' ।। ३०-३१ ।।

O mighty-armed one! At that time, those war-intoxicated Gandhara warriors, desiring either victory or heaven, along with a vast army, broke through the formidable and nearly impregnable battle formation of the Pandava forces. Filled with joy and enthusiasm, they entered within it. (29)

Seeing them penetrate into the army's formation, the valiant Iravan, in the battlefield, spoke to his extraordinary warriors—armed with dreadful weapons—saying:
"O heroes! In this battle, devise such a strategy that all these warriors of Duryodhana, along with their attendants and mounts, are slain." (30–31)

Now Iravan too was greatly enraged. That hero, who had conquered enemy cities, struck them in battle with sharp arrows, rendering them all unconscious. (38)

Then he (Iravan) covered the Rākṣasa with many serpents. When he was enveloped by the serpents, that king of the Rākṣasas, after some thought, assumed the form of Garuḍa and began devouring all the serpents. (74–75)

When that Rākṣasa had devoured all the serpents belonging to Iravan's maternal lineage, he slew the bewildered Iravan with his sword. (76)

The Rākṣasa cut off Iravan's head—radiant like the lotus and the moon, adorned with earrings and a crown—and cast it upon the earth. (77)

Thus, when Arjuna's heroic son Iravan was slain by the Rākṣasa, King Duryodhana and all your sons were freed from grief. (78)

Padma Purana Patalakhanda 5, Chapter 74, Verses 61-74a "Then having heard the words, when Arjuna plunged into the water of the lake…The charmingly smiling one got up and on seeing around, was confused. He instantly saw himself (to be turned into) a wonderful, excellent lady, who had a slim, fair, charming body like the rays of pure gold…"

Padma Purana Patalakhanda 5, Chapter 74, Verses 177b-196a "…Arjuniya, having seen in confusion on the left side of the pleasing goddess Radhika, propitiating and offering a tambula to him of a bright smile, was overcome with the passion of love. Then, Srikrsna, who knew everything, knowing her to be like that, seized her hand, and he the lord, the great master of magical art secretly sported with her in the entire pleasure-forest. Then putting his sport-like arm on her should and coming to Sarada, said to her: 'Bathe quickly this slim-bodied lady of a gentle smile, fatigued due to sport, in this western lake.' Then that goddess Sarada (took her) to the western lake, (and) said to her, 'Take bath'. The fatigued one did like that. She who got to the interior of the water, again turned into Arjuna and got up at the place where the lord of gods and the chief of the beautiful ' 'aikuntha stood. Seeing Arjuna dejected and broken-minded, Krsna kindly touched him with his hand and put him (back) to his nature."

Refutation-

Ashoke Chatterjee in his book Padma Purana – A Study page number 92/281 mentioned that chapter 69-99 in Patala Khanda of Padma Purana (Including chapter 75) are later interpolations and were inserted later on in Padma Purana between 12-13th Century AD . Thus this chapter 75 which he alleged is a later interpolation

This part consists of chaps 69 99 of the Patāla-khanda This portion is neither the work of the Ramaites nor that of the Linga worshippers

This group seems to have come from a very late date We have seen how it depicts a picture of a developed Radha

Some 200 years' time should be given to the group 2 to attain recognition Then obviously this part dates between 1150-1200 AD

Group 3

This part consists of chaps 69 99 of the Patāla-khanda This portion is neither the work of the Rāmaites nor that of the Linga worshippers, but definitely a contribution of the Bhāgavata Vaisnavas who put a stamp of their own sect on it by supplementing it with some new chaps of their own interest In the discussion of group 2 we have shown how the Linga worshippers of the Pāśupata sect describe Śiva being praised by Rama The present group, it appears, is a recast by the Bhāgavata-Vaisnavas who have paid back the Linga worshippers in their own coin In this group it is seen that Pārvatī and Īśvara were glorifying the Māhātmyas and celebrity of Krsna and Rādhā—His eternal consort, and Vrndāvana—their eternal blissful abode Rādhā has been highly eulogised She is conceived as the eternal Prakrti She pervades the whole universe, phenomenal and real and is the prime cause of creation, existence and destruction She is self-luminous and illumines the external objects The eternal unity of Krsna and Rādhā is the Supreme Truth and this unity must be realised in order to reach the highest goal—the summum bonum of human life Rādhā is the abode of the highest bliss, and beauty She is the essence of all fair instincts She is the concept of love but this love or Prema is high

This group seems to have come from a very late date We have seen how it depicts a picture of a developed Rādha cult Moreover, it abounds in references to Tulasi[39] Traces of Tāntricism are also vividly observable[40] Āgama has been admitted as an authority[41] Tāntric mudrās, nyasas have

[38] It should however, be noted in this connection that the Bengal mss of the Pātāla-khanda do not contain all these references as they exist as chap 80 of the Ānan ed of the Pātāla-khanda been referred to more than once[42] Mandala and Yantra have been regarded as the medium of worship[43] All these tend to assign a much later date to this part We have also shown that it has been contributed later than the group 2, the date of which is c 950-1000 A D Some 200 years' time should be given to the group 2 to attain recognition Then obviously this part dates between 1150-1200 A D And this may be accepted if we keep the fact in view that Gopālabhatta (of 1400 A D) in his Hari-bhakti-vilāsa has quoted numerous vss from this part[44], and the contents of these chaps are given in the Nāradiya-p I 93 which is also of a very later origin

Allegations-

Arjuna the biggest devotee of Krishna is said to have transformed himself into a eunuch, Mahabharata 4.45.13-14 "... Indeed, thou seemest to me to be Mahadeva, or Indra, or the chief of the Gandharvas, dwelling in the guise only of one of the third sex.' "Arjuna said, 'I tell thee truly that I am only observing this vow for a whole year agreeable to the behest of my elder brother. O thou of mighty arms, I am not truly one of the neuter sex, but I have adopted this vow of eunuchism from subservience to another's will and from desire of religious merit. O prince, know me now to have completed my vow..."

Refutation-

In the Mahabharata, during the 13th year of exile (the year of incognito or ajñātavāsa), Arjuna disguised himself as Bṛhannalā, a dance and music teacher in the court of King Virata. This was done to conceal his identity, not because he had literally become a eunuch or had any physical transformation.

- Mahabharata 4.45.13-14 clearly shows Arjuna confessing his true identity to Prince Uttara and stating: "I am not truly one of the neuter sex... I have adopted this vow of eunuchism from subservience to another's will and from desire of religious merit."

👉 This confirms it was a vow or guise, not a biological or metaphysical transformation.

🧠 Why Did Arjuna Do This?

1. Curse of Urvashi: After rejecting Urvashi's advances, the celestial nymph cursed Arjuna to become a klība (effeminate). But Indra softened it to be a temporary fate—useful during his incognito year.
2. Strategic Disguise: Arjuna used this curse as a blessing—adopting the identity of a dance teacher, acting effeminate to avoid detection by the Kauravas.
3. Not a Transformation: Nowhere in the epic does Arjuna undergo any physical or gender transition. His masculinity and warrior identity remain intact, evident when he picks up his weapons and defeats Kaurava forces while still in disguise.

🙏 Spiritual & Devotional Angle

Arjuna's act was one of obedience, self-discipline, and devotion to dharma:

- He honored the conditions of exile.
- He used his curse creatively in service of his brothers.
- He never abandoned his warrior identity or devotion to Krishna.

Thus, far from degrading him, this episode enhances Arjuna's greatness.

Allegations-

Krishna and Narada

Krishna also had sex with Narada Muni in the same way,

Padma Purana, Patalakhanda 5, Chapter 75, Verses 24b-32a
“Narada said: This is a great secret, the secret of secrets. Formerly Brahma told me that secret about Vrndavana (when I had said to him): ‘O lord of gods, O father, tell me the secret of Vrndavana.’ Hearing this desire (of mine), he remained silent for a moment. Then he said to me: ‘O child, go to Maha (i.e. great) Visnu, my lord. Undoubtedly I must also go there with you.’ Saying so, and taking me (with him) he went to the abode of Visnu. He told Maha Visnu what I had said to him. Hearing that Maha Visnu himself ordered the self-born one (i.e. Brahma). ‘By my order, you take the sage Narada, and arrange for his bath in the lake called Amrta.’ Having entered the Amrta lake, I took bath there. Just at that moment I was (i.e. I found myself) near women, beyond (i.e. on the other side of) the lake (I was) turned into a woman, endowed with all (good) charachteristics…”

Padma Purana, Patalakhanda 5, Chapter 75, Verses 39B-53
“With them, (we) went where the eternal Krsna remained. The lord, who was merely of the form of the Good, the Intelligence and the Joy, and o that of a woman, and whose heart was delighted due to the women, again and again said to me: ‘Come along O dear one, O beloved, embrace me devoutly.’ O you best brahmana, there only he enjoyed (with me) for a year. Then that best lover said to that goddess Radhika: ‘This was my natural form there, which had taken the form of Narada. Take her to the Amrta lake, and arrange for her bath.’…After that goddess Radhika took me to the lake, waited there, and went (back) near the feet of the Moon in the form of Krsna. Then immediately after plunging (into the lake) I came (back) as Narada…”

Narada and King Taladhvaja

Sage Narada had a relationship with a King named Taladhvaja as per the version available in Srimad Devi Bhagavatam,

Srimad Devi Bhagavatam Book 6, Chapter 28, Verses 37-54
"...O Nârada! Look! Look! How clear crystal-like is the water of this pool like the heart of a saint; see how it smells also fragrantly in contact with the lotuses on it." When the Bhagavân spoke thus to me; I kept my lute and deer skin aside and gladly went to the edge of the tank. Washing then my hands and feet I tied my hair lock and, taking Kus'a grass, I performed my Âchaman and, purifying myself, began to bathe myself in that tank. While I was bathing, Hari was looking at me; by the time I took a dip, I saw that I quitted my male form and got a beautiful female form. Hari took away, then, my deer skin and lute and mounting on Garuda went away in a moment to His own residence. Getting the female form and decorated with excellent ornaments, my memory of my previous male form vanished at once; I forgot all about my famous lute and forgot also Jagannâtha, the Deva of the Devas. I then came out of the tank in that enchanting woman form, saw the pool of water filled with clear limpid water and adorned with lotuses. Seeing that, I began to think :– "What is this?" and I became very much astonished. While I was thus meditating in my woman form, a king, named Tâladhvaja, came there, all on a sudden, on a chariot, accompanied by numerous elephants and horses. The King looked like a second Cupid…"

Srimad Devi Bhagavatam Book 6, Chapter 29, Verses 13-20. "The King then began to sport with me amorously according to the rules of the Kâma S'âstra in various ways and with great enjoyments and pleasures. He then left all his kingly duties and state affairs and he began to remain day and night with me deeply immersed in amorous sports; so much his mind was merged in me in these plays that he could not notice the long time that passed away in the interval. He used to drink the Vârunî wine and, forsaking all the state affairs, began to enjoy me in nice gardens, beautiful lakes, lovely palaces, beautified houses, excellent mountains and enviable forests and became completely subservient to me. O Dvaipâyana! Being incessantly engaged with the King in amorous sports and remaining obedient to him, my previous body, male ideas, or the birth of Muni, nothing whatsoever came in my memory. I remained always attached to him…"

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmad-bhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sat (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and there wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D." based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars, and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

Krishna's Transgenderism

Krishna transforms himself into a girl

Garga Samhita 2.17.30-31 "Śrī Nārada said: After hearing Rādhā's words, Lord Kṛṣṇa, who was magically transformed into a young girl, spoke to lotus-eyed Rādhā. The Supreme Personality of Godhead said: O girl whose thighs are graceful as banana trees, I live in Gokula, just north of Nanda's palace in Nandanagara. My name is Gopadevatā."

Refutation-

The claim that Krishna's occasional assumption of a female form proves "transgenderism" imposes a modern social ategory onto a theological and metaphysical act that the texts themselves explain in a completely different way. In Garga Saṁhitā 2.17.30–31, Krishna temporarily assumes the form of a young girl (Gopadevata) as part of a divine pastime (līlā) with Śrī Rādhā. Such transformations in the Lord's pastimes are not expressions of gender identity in the human sense, but manifestations of His infinite śakti and His capacity to embody any form for the purpose of rasa (spiritual relish) or dharma.

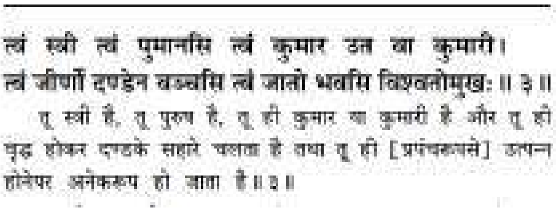
The Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 4.3 explicitly states: "You are woman, You are man, You are boy and girl; You are the old man tottering with a staff; You are all forms that manifest in creation." This describes the Supreme Being's all-encompassing nature, where assuming male, female, or any other form does not alter His eternal transcendental identity. Such transformations are acts of divine sovereignty, not indications of human-like psychological gender identification.

तू स्त्री है, तू पुरुष है, तू ही कुमार या कुमारी है और तू ही वृद्ध होकर दण्डके सहारे चलता है तथा तू ही [प्रपंचरूपसे] उत्पन्न होनेपर अनेकरूप हो जाता है ॥

"You are woman, You are man; You are the boy and the girl. You are also the old man tottering with a staff. When manifested in creation, You become of many forms."



त्वं स्त्री त्वं पुमानसि त्वं कुमार उत वा कुमारी।
त्वं जीर्णो दण्डेन वञ्चसि त्वं जातो भवसि विश्वतोमुखः ॥ ३ ॥
तू स्त्री है, तू पुरुष है, तू ही कुमार या कुमारी है और तू ही वृद्ध होकर दण्डके सहारे चलता है तथा तू ही [प्रपंचरूपसे] उत्पन्न होनेपर अनेकरूप हो जाता है ॥ ३ ॥

In Vaishnava siddhānta, Krishna is eternally Puruṣottama—the Supreme Male Principle—and His assumption of a female form is part of His līlā to please His devotees or fulfill specific divine purposes. Just as Vishnu manifested Mohini without ceasing to be Vishnu, Krishna manifests female forms without ceasing to be the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Equating these divine manifestations with mortal gender identity is a category error that strips the event of its theological context and misrepresents the nature of the Absolute Truth.

OTHERS

There's a story of King Dilipa the ancestor of Rama in a Bengali Ramayana called Krittvasa Ramayana. In this Ramayana it is stated that King Dilip died without having any son. His kingdom had become kingless, the gods were worried so Shiva ordered King Dilipa's two wives to have sex with each other like a man. One of the wife conceived a son who was later known as Bhagiratha. There are two versions in the Krittvasa Ramayana, I am mentioning only one, the second version names the two queens as Chandra and Mala.

Krittvasa Ramayana, Adi Kanda "Dilipa ruled like Indra, the king of the gods, but was sad as he did not have a son. Leaving behind his two wives in the city of Ayodhya, Dilipa went in search of the Ganga....On his death the city of .yodhya was kingless...Riding his bull, Shiva went to Dilipa's two queens and said to them: 'By my blessings, one of you will have a son.' Hearing Shiva's words, the two women said: 'We are widows, how can we have a child?' Shankara replied: 'You two have intercourse with one another. By my blessings one of you will have a lovely child.' Having bestowed this boon, the god who destroys the three worlds went his way. The two wives of Dilipa took bath. They lived together in extreme love. After days, one of them menstruated. Both of them knew one another's intentions and enjoyed love play, and one of them conceived...." Tr. Kumkum Roy

Refutation-

The claim in the Krittivasa Ramayana that Bhagiratha was born after Shiva instructed King Dilipa's widowed queens to engage in intercourse is a late, fictitious addition with no basis in the original Ramayana tradition. The ancient Valmiki Ramayana and major Puranas state plainly that Bhagiratha was the natural son of King Dilipa and Queen Sudakshina, with no such obscene or unnatural episode. Composed in the 14th–15th century CE, over two millennium after Valmiki, the Krittivasa Ramayana is a regional Bengali retelling that often altered events and inserted local folk tales for dramatic effect, many of which have no scriptural authority. This passage is a product of medieval imagination, not divinely revealed history, and it stands in contradiction to the consistent and pure genealogies preserved in the authentic Sanskrit texts.

There is another version mentioned in the Bengali version of Padma Purana, Padma Purana, Svarga Khanda 16.6-24 “King Dilipa had no son, and after a long time, he died. His two wives were constantly sad. They went to the hermitage of the sage Vasistha and said to him, ‘The dynastic line descended from King Sagara has been broken, and the kingdom has been attacked by enemies. Tell us what to do.’ When he heard this, the great sage thought deeply about the matter, and when he had made his decision he said to the two queens, ‘This human dynasty will not be terminated. A noble son will be born to the two of you, fine ladies with beautiful eyes. I will make a supreme effort on your behalf.' When he had said this, Vasistha cooked up a consecrated pot of rice and milk (caru) that was infused with all good qualities, using the proper ritual for one who wished to have a son. Then he said to the two noble women, 'One of you must eat this consecrated pot of rice and milk, and the other must have intercourse with her in the manner of a man.' When the women heard this, they did what the great sage had told them to do. The eldest queen became pregnant, and after the usual time brought forth a son. But since the boy had been born without any semen of a man, he was born without any bones, and was just like a ball (pinda) of flesh. The two queens named him Bhaghiratha…"

Refutation-

The so-called passage from Padma Purana, Svarga Khanda 16.6–24 describing King Dilipa's widowed queens engaging in a sexual act "in the manner of a man" and giving birth to Bhagiratha is not found in the authentic Sanskrit mūla of Svarga Khanda, Adhyāya 16, which contains only 22 verses in total. The actual chapter narrates Kubera's austerities, his boon from Mahadeva, and the glorification of the Kaveri–Narmada confluence with its associated religious merits, with no mention whatsoever of Dilipa, his queens, Bhagiratha, or any such episode.

The Glory of the Confluence of the Kaveri and Narmada Rivers, and the Description of Kubera's Place

The sages said—All the great sages and ascetics who were with Yudhishthira asked the noble Nārada:
"O revered one, please tell us about the fruits obtained at the confluence of the Kaveri River, so that worldly beings as well as we may attain welfare." (1–2)

"Even sinful beings who are constantly engaged in sin, if they bathe at the confluence of the Kaveri, are freed from all sins and attain the supreme goal—it is said. O revered one, I wish to know more about this." (3)

Nārada said—"O Yudhishthira and assembled great sages, listen: Here, Kubera, endowed with truth and valor, once performed a great sacrifice. As a result of performing this sacrifice at this holy place, his kingdom increased and he attained perfection. I will tell you about this—listen attentively.

It is at the place where the Kaveri River meets the world-famous Narmada River (5). After bathing there, Kubera performed penance for a hundred divine years (6). Pleased with him, Lord Śaṅkara granted him an excellent boon, saying: 'O mighty Yakṣa, ask for a boon or express whatever wish you have.' (7)

Kubera said: 'O Lord of the gods, if you are pleased and wish to grant me a boon, may I become the king of all the Yakṣas.' (8)

Hearing Kubera's words, Śaṅkara, being pleased, said: 'So it shall be.' Saying this, he disappeared. (9)

Kubera, having obtained the boon, went to the Yakṣas. The great Yakṣas worshipped him and made him their king. (10)

That confluence of the Kaveri is the destroyer of all sins. Those who do not know this are indeed in ignorance. (11) Therefore, a person should make every effort to bathe there. The Kaveri and the Narmada are both extremely holy rivers. (12)

O king, after bathing there one should worship Lord Śiva. One who does so attains the fruit of an Aśvamedha sacrifice and is honored in Rudra's abode. (13)

One who enters fire there or undertakes fasting does not return to this world after death—this is what Lord Śaṅkara told me. (14) There, he is served by noble women equal to Rudra himself, and he dwells in Rudraloka for sixty crore and sixty thousand years, enjoying bliss and moving about as he wishes. (15–16)

After the merit is exhausted, he returns to the mortal world as a righteous king, endowed with enjoyments, religious merit, and born in a great lineage. (17) One who drinks the water at the Kaveri–Narmada confluence attains the fruit of performing the Cāndrāyaṇa vow.

Those who drink that water go to heaven. The fruit obtained by bathing at the confluence of the Ganga and Yamuna is the same as that obtained by bathing at the Kaveri confluence. O king, the merit and sanctity of the Kaveri confluence are great; it destroys all sins. (18–22)

Thus ends the sixteenth chapter of the third Svarga-khaṇḍa of the great Padma Purāṇa, in the Hindi translation by Shivaprasad Dwivedi (Śrīdhara Ācārya). (16)

Another form of LGBT is also found in Srimad Bhagavatam. Some sages went to the abode of Shiva but as soon as they spotted Shiva and Parvati engaged in sexual intercourse they immediately went away. To please Parvati, Shiva said that anyone coming near his area shall become a woman. A king accidentally stepped into that area and became a woman, later (s)he had sex with the son of moon god Soma named Budha, Vayu Purana, Part 2.23.15-18 …He who is revered in the three worlds is famous as Sudyumna. He has attained the form of a lady. That noble lady returned to her father after securing the boon. After getting an opportunate moment, she was invited for love making (sexual intercourse) by Budha (the planet mercury). From Budha, the son of Soma, Puruavas, the son of Ila was born. After giving birth to the son born of Budha, she became Suyumna again. Sudyumna had three sons, all extremely virtuous"

Srimad Bhagavatam 9.1.30-35 "When the goddess Ambikā saw the great saintly persons, she was very much ashamed because at that time she was naked. She immediately got up from the lap of her husband and tried to cover her breast. Seeing Lord Śiva and Pārvatī engaged in sexual affairs, all the great saintly persons immediately desisted from going further and departed for the āśrama of Nara-Nārāyaṇa. Thereupon, just to please his wife, Lord Śiva said, "Any male entering this place shall immediately become a female!" Since that time, no male had entered that forest. But now King Sudyumna, having been transformed into a female, began to walk with his associates from one forest to another. Sudyumna had been transformed into the best of beautiful women who excite sexual desire and was surrounded by other women. Upon seeing this beautiful woman loitering near his āśrama, Budha, the son of the moon, immediately desired to enjoy her. The beautiful woman also desired to accept Budha, the son of the king of the moon, as her husband. Thus Budha begot in her womb a son named Purūravā."

This is also mentioned in Matsya Purana 11.50 and Brahmanda Purana 2.3.60.15-17.

Hinduism supports the LGBT community – Shuddhyumna became Ila, a transgender figure.

Read actual scriptures, not your WhatsApp PhD. Hindu texts clearly say Shuddhyumna was cursed into becoming a woman – he didn't choose it, he didn't identify as female, and it wasn't some inner gender journey. It was a curse, plain and simple. The story doesn't celebrate transitioning – it shows male-to-female transformation as a mark of misfortune, not pride. So if anything, Hinduism calls it a curse, not a cause

Allegations–

Niyog Pratha is the Vedic practice where the childless or sonless widow sleeps with another man and conceives the child, but the child would be considered the son of the deceased father and not his biological father. The Brother of the deceased person is preferred to contract Niyog with the widow after that close relatives were given preferences. Niyoga is sanctioned by Hindu scriptures.

Gautama Dharma Shastra 18.4-6 “A woman whose husband is dead and who desires offspring (may bear a son) to her brother-in-law… (On failure of a brother-in-law she may obtain offspring) by (cohabiting with) a Sapinda, a Sagotra, a Samanapravara, or one who belongs to the same caste.”

Baudhyana Dharma Shastra Prasna II, Adhyaya 2, Kandika 4, verses 7-9 “widow shall avoid during a year (the use of) honey, meat spirituous liquor, and salt, and sleep on the ground. Maudgalya (declares that she shall do so) during six months. After (the expiration of) that (time) she may, with the permission of her Gurus, bear a son to her brother in law, in case she has no son.”

It is mentioned in Puranas,

Garuda Purana chapter 95 ”The younger brother of a husband, may go unto a childless wife of his elder brother for the purpose of begetting an offspring on her person with the permission of his elders, first had and obtained in that behalf, and with his body annointed with clarified butter.”

Garuda Purana I.95.16-17 “For producing a son and a heir in ne family the brother-in-law or a cousin or a person of the same clan can have intercourse with an issueless widow till she conceives. If he touches her after that he becomes degraded. The son born thus is the legitimate son of the deceased husband."

Kurma Purana 2.22.98 "…a son born of the Niyoga rite should perform Sraddha to his progenitor as well as the dead husband of his mother. Then he shall be the true heir. If a son is born out of the semen virile without the sanction of Niyoga, the son should offer Pindas to the progenitor. However, he may perform Sraddha to the Ksetrin (mother's husbands)."

It is mentioned in Vishnu Smriti,

Vishnu Smriti 15.1-3 Now there are twelve kinds of sons. The first is the son of the body, viz. he who is begotten (by the husband) himself on his own lawfully wedded wife. The second is the son begotten on a wife, viz. one begotten by a kinsman allied by funeral oblations, or by a member of the highest caste, on an appointed (wife or widow).

It is mentioned in Yajnavalkya Smriti,

Yajnavalkya Smriti, Book 1 Achara Adhyaya, chapter 3, verse 68 "The younger brother of the husband, a Sapinda or a Sagotra, being anointed with clarified butter, and with the permission of the Guru, may go to a sonless widows, when in season, with the desire of raising a son."

Maharshi Manu writes,

Manu Smriti 9.190 "Let the widow of a deceased, sonless man get a son procreated on her person by a man of her husband's Gotra (i.e., his younger brother, or a Sapinda relation), and let the entire estate of that deceased person be invested in that son."

Vasistha Dharma Shastra 17.56 "After the completion of six months she shall bathe, and offer a funeral oblation to her husband. (Then) her father or her brother shall assemble the Gurus who taught or sacrificed (for the deceased) and his relatives, and shall appoint her (to raise issue to her deceased husband)…Let him approach (the widow) in the muhuarta sacred to Pragapati (behaving) like a husband, without (amorously) dallying with her, and without abusing or ill-treating her."

Katyayana Smriti verse 859 "When a person begets a fruit (a son) with the consent of the owner of the field (husband of the wife), both of them are entitled to the fruit (the son), since a fruit is not produced in the absence of one (of the two)."

Manu Smriti 9.59 "In the absence of a son, a woman wishing to obtain a progeny, shall lie down under an appointment, with a younger brother, or with a Sapinda relation, of her husband for the procreation of a son."

Manu Smriti 3.173 "He, who, otherwise than under an appointment of begetting a son on her, visits the widow of his deceased elder brother, out of passion, is called the husband of a deceased elder brother's widow."

Refutation-

WHAT IS NIYOG?

Niyoga was a practice that was allowed to make sure that woman experiences the pious feeling of becoming a mother during her lifetime.

Simply put, if a man failed in his responsibility to impregnate his wife, then-wife could seek permission from her husband to get impregnated by someone else. An exception was also made if the man died without becoming a father. Since humans are not perfect and Hindus know it from the beginning of time, various restrictions were laid to curtail the misuse of Niyoga.

WHEN YOU SHOULD DO NIYOG

Rules For performing Niyog

The woman would agree to this only for the sake of rightfully having a child and not for sexual pleasure.

The appointed man would do this for Dharma, considering it as his duty to help the woman bear a child and not for pleasure.

There will be no foreplay or contact of any kind with the upper body. The bodies of the female and male both are smeared with Ghee. There is a curtain between the male and the female so that none can see each other's face so that passion does not sneak into their minds. Only the legs of the female are kept uncovered. The male penetrates and ejaculates inside the woman and the process is completed.

The child, thus born would be considered the child of the husband-wife and not that of the appointed man.

The appointed man would not seek any paternal relationship or attachment to this child in the future.

To avoid misuse, a man was allowed a maximum of three times in his lifetime to be appointed in such a way.

Only Kshatriya Royal families and Widows have access to perform niyoga

Widows shall approach only her dead Husband's Brother for helping her to beget a child

This verse is quoted in Mitākṣarā (1.69), as enunciating the view that the sanction of the 'ksetraja' son pertains only to those cases where the bridegroom has died after the verbal betrothal;-again under 2.127, as describing the case in which alone 'niyoga' is permissible; and it adds that this verse implies that the man to whom a girl has been betrothed has become her 'husband' even before the marriage rites have been performed.

Mitākṣarā adds the following notes:-When the 'husband' to whom the girl has been betrothed dies, then his 'own' ie., uterine brother, elder or younger, 'vindeta,' shall take her, i.e., marry her. It construes 'anena vidhānena' with the next verse.

Dharmashastras sanctioned Niyoga only for widows and kshatriyas.

Gautama (18.4-7). 'A woman whose husband is dead and who desires offspring may bear a son to her brother-in-iaw. She should obtain the permission of her elders and should have intercourse during her period only. On failure of her brother-in-law, she may obtain offspring from a Sapinda, a Sayotra, a Samānapravara or from one belonging to the same caste. Some people hold that she should do this with none hut her brother-in-law.'

Do. (28.22-23).-'The widow may seek to raise up offspring to her deceased husband. A son begotten on a widow, whose brother-in-law is alive, by another relative, is excluded from inheritance.'

Baudhāyana (2.4.9-10). 'After the expiry of six months from her husband's death, she may, with the authority of her elders, bear a son to her brother-in-law, in case she has no son. They quote the following: -"A barren woman or one who has already borne sons, or one who is past childhearing, or one whose children are all dead, or one who is unwilling, must never be authorised or appointed to do this.""

Vasistha (17.56).-'After the completion of six months from the death of her husband, she shall bathe, and offer a funeral oblation to the husband. Then her father and brother shall assemble the elders who taught or sacrificed for her husband, as also his relatives, and authorise her to raise issue to her deceased husband. One should not thus appoint a widow who is either mad or ill-behaved or diseased; nor one who is very aged; sixteen years after maturity is the period for authorising a widow. Nor shall such an authorisation be made if the male entitled to approach her is sickly.'

Yājñavalkya (1.68-69).-'If a widow is without a son, her brother-in-law, or a Sapinda or a Sagotra,- smeared with butter, shall approach her during her period, being authorised to do so by the elders, for the purpose of obtaining a son for her. He shall approach her only till conception has taken place; doing otherwise, he would become an outcast. The son born in this manner is called Kşetraja.

Brhaspati (25.12-14).- 'The Niyoga (authorisation of a widow to raise offspring to her deceased husband), after having been declared by Manu, has been forbidden by himself; on account of the deterioration in the nature of the time-cycles, this cannot he done by all in the proper form. In the Kṛta, Tretā and Dvāpara cycles, men were imbued with austerities and with knowledge; in the Kali cycle a deterioration in the capacity of men has been brought about. Therefore the sons that were obtained by various methods by the ancient sages cannot he obtained by men now, on account of their being without that capacity.'

Narada (12.80-81).-'Should the husband of a childless woman die, she should go to her brother-in-law, through desire to obtain a son, after having received the necessary authorisation from her elders; and he shall have intercourse with her till a son is born. When a son is born, he must leave her. It would be sinful intercourse otherwise.'

Brahmapurana (Aparārka, p. 97).-'On the death of her husband, or on her having abandoned her usband, a woman may beget a son from a man of her own caste. If she is a child-widow, or has been forcibly abandoned by her husband, she shall go through the sacrament of marriage again, with any other man. But this remarriage of women, or the begetting of a son from the brother-in-law, or the freedom of women, should not be permitted during the Kali age; as during this age, men are inclined to be sinful.'

Dharmashastras sanctioned Niyoga only for widows and kshatriyas.

"Therefore, from that time onward, whoever, out of ignorance, urges a widow whose husband has died to undergo niyoga (union for the sake of offspring), is especially censured by the virtuous." (68)

Acharya Kulluka Bhatta bhasya –

वेनकालत्प्रभृति यो मृतभर्तृकादिस्त्रियं शास्त्रार्थाज्ञानादपत्यनिमित्तं देवरादौ नियोजयति तं साधवो नियंतं गर्हयन्ते। अयं च स्वोक्तनियोगनिषेधः कलियुगविषयः । तदाह बृहस्पतिः- "उक्तो निरोगो मुनिना निषिद्धः स्वयमेव तु । युगक्रमादशक्योऽयं कर्तुमन्यैर्विधानतः ।। तपोज्ञानसमायुक्ताः कृतत्रेतायुगे नराः। द्वापरे च कलौ नृणां शक्तिहानिर्हि निर्मिता। अनेकधा कृताः पुत्रा ऋषिभिश्च पुरातनैः। न शक्यन्तेऽधुना कर्तुं शक्तिहीनैरिदंतनैः ।।" अतो यद्गोविन्दराजेन युगविशेषव्यवस्थामज्ञात्वा सर्वदैव संतानाभावे नियोगादनियोगपक्षः श्रेयानिति स्वमनीषया कल्पितं तन्मुनिव्याख्या-विरोधान्नाद्रियामहे। प्रायशो मनुवाक्येषु मुनिव्याख्यानमेव हि। नापराध्योऽस्मि विदुषां क्वाहं सर्वविदः कुधीः ।। ६८ ।।

From the time of King Vena onwards, whoever, out of ignorance of the true intent of the śāstras, causes a widow or any such woman to undergo niyoga (union with the husband's brother or another) for the sake of offspring, that person is censured by the virtuous. And this prohibition of niyoga is specific to the Kali Yuga. Hence Bṛhaspati has said: 'Niyoga, though once mentioned by the sage, was later forbidden by the sage himself. But due to the sequence of the Yugas, it cannot be practiced any longer in any prescribed manner. For men endowed with austerity and knowledge in the Kṛta and Tretā Yugas could (properly) perform it; but in Dvāpara and Kali, a decline of human power has been ordained. Many sons were indeed begotten by the sages of old in various ways, but now it cannot be practiced by the weakened men of the present time.'

Therefore, the view imagined by Govindarāja—namely, that since there is now generally no progeny, niyoga is preferable to aniyoga (non-niyoga)—is not accepted by us, because it contradicts the authoritative commentaries of the sages. In fact, in most of Manu's passages the sage-commentaries alone are authoritative. Nor am I guilty before the learned; for where am I, a fool, compared with the all-'·nowing?" (68)

ततः प्रभृति यो मोहात्प्रमीतपतिकां स्त्रियम्।
नियोजयत्यपत्यार्थं तं विगर्हन्ति साधवः॥ ६८॥

Why Niyog is banned in Kaliyuga

Brhaspati (25.12-14). The Niyoga (authorisation of a widow to raise offspring to her deceased husband), after having been declared by Manu, has been forbidden by himself; on account of the deterioration in the nature of the time-cycles, this cannot he done by all in the proper form. In the Krta, Treta and Dvāpara cycles, men were imbued with austerities and with knowledge; in the Kali cycle a deterioration in the capacity of men has been brought about. Therefore the sons that were obtained by various methods by the ancient sages cannot he obtained by men now, on account of their being without that capacity.'
It is quoted in Nrsimhaprasāda (Vyavahāra, 38a); in Smrticandrikā (Samskāra, p. 226), which says that this prohibition is meant for the Kali-age; and in Viramitrodaya (Vyavahāra, 186a).
Brahmapurāṇa (Aparārka, p. 97).-'On the death of her husband, or on her having abandoned her husband, a woman may beget a son from a man of her own caste. If she is a child-widow, or has been forcibly abandoned by her husband, she shall go through the sacrament of marriage again, with any other man. But this remarriage of women, or the begetting of a son from the brother-in-law, or the freedom of women, should not be permitted during the Kali age; as during this age, men are inclined to be sinful.'
Apastamba (2.27.2-4).-'A husband shall not make over his wife, who occupies the position of a gentilis, to others (than to his gentiles), in order to cause children to be begotten for himself. For they declare that a bride is given to the family of her husband (and not to the husband alone). This is forbidden for the present age, on account of the incapacity of men's senses.'
In simple words in Kaliyug Men will be lusty this practice may be misused, In the 3 yugas sages had capacity to impregnent women even without having sexual intercourse but in kaliyug men are not capable to doing these

Why Niyog is banned in Kaliyuga

Brihaspati (21.12-14).—'The Niyoga (authorisation of a widow to raise offspring to her deceased husband), after having been declared by Manu, has been forbidden by himself; on account of the deterioration in the nature of the time-cycles, this cannot be done by all in the proper form. In the Kṛta, Tretā and Dvāpara cycles, men were imbued with austerities and with knowledge; in the Kali cycle a deterioration in the capacity of men has been brought about. Therefore the sons that were obtained by various methods by the ancient sages cannot be obtained by men now, on account of their being without that capacity.'

It is quoted in Kṛtyakalpataru (Vyavahāra, 86a);—in Smṛticandrikā (Saṃskāra, p. 220), which says that this prohibition is meant for the Kali-age;—and in Vīramitrodaya (Vyavahāra, 188a).

Brahmapurāṇa (Aparārka, p. 97).—'On the death of her husband, or on her having abandoned her husband, a woman may beget a son from a man of her own caste. If she is a child-widow, or has been forcibly abandoned by her husband, she shall go through the sacrament of marriage again, with any other man. But this remarriage of women, or the begetting of a son from the brother-in-law, or the freedom of women, should not be permitted during the Kali age; as during this age, men are inclined to be sinful.'

Āpastamba (2.27.2-3).—'A husband shall not make over his wife, who occupies the position of a gentile, to others than to his gentiles, in order to cause children to be begotten for himself. For they declare that a bride is given to the family of her husband (and not to the husband alone). This is forbidden for the present age, on account of the incapacity of men's senses.'

📌In simple words in Kaliyug Men will be lusty this practice may be misused, In the 3 yugas sages had capacity to impregnent women even without having sexual intercourse but in kaliyug men are not capable to doing these

Allegations-

Tulsi Ramayana 1.188.1-4 "One day the king was sad at heart that he had no son. He hastened to his preceptorís residence and, falling at his feet, made many entreaties. He told the Guru all his joys and sorrows; the sage Vasista comforted him in many ways and said, "Take heart and wait; you will have four sons, who will be known throughout the three worlds and will rid the devotees of their fears". Then Vasista invited the sage Sringi and had a noble sacrifice performed by him for the birth of a son to the king. When the sage devoutly offered oblations into the sacred fire, the fire-god appeared with an offering of rice boiled with milk in his hand. Said the fire-god, "Whatever Vasista has contemplated for you, that object is fully accomplished. Take this oblation, O king, and divide it in such proportions as you think fit." Tr. Gita Press

It is also mentioned in Valmiki Ramayana,

Valmiki Ramayana, Bala Kanda 1, Sarga 16, Verse 26 "Then Dasharatha on entering palace chambers spoke this to queen Kausalya, "Receive this dessert to beget your son."

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar wrote, "Rama's birth is miraculous and it may be that the suggestion that he was born from a pinda prepared by the sage Shrung is an allegorical gloss to cover up the naked truth that he was begotten upon Kausalya by the sage Shrung, although the two did not stand in the relationship of husband and wife. In any case his birth, if not disreputable in its origin, is certainly unnatural."

Refutation-

I don't care what Dr BR Ambedkar said . He is not a Vedic scholar nor he has knowledge of Sanskrit nor he Learnt Vedic Scriptures under an Authentic Acharya . BR Ambedkar told many terrible things about Islam and its Pedophile Rapist Prophet as well .

This halala Putra quoted Valmiki Ramayana and Ramcharitmanas you can read it nowhere its told that Bhagwan Shree Ram was born by Niyoga or something .

So if Bhagwan Shree Hari is free From Birth and Birthless then how could he be born by Mortal Birth through sexual intercourse .

Srimad Bhagavatam 9.10.2 says Bhagwan Shree Hari manifested in four forms – Rama , Lakshman , Satrughna and Bharata and came to be known as Sons of Dashratha

श्रीशुकदेवजी कहते हैं- परीक्षित् ! खट्वांगके पुत्र दीर्घबाहु और दीर्घबाहुके परम यशस्वी पुत्र रघु हुए। रघुके अज और अजके पुत्र महाराज दशरथ हुए ।।१।।

At the prayer of the gods, the Supreme Brahman, the Supreme Self, Bhagavān Śrī Hari Himself, taking partial incarnations (aṁśāṁśa), manifested in four forms as the sons of King Daśaratha. Their names were Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata, and Śatrughna. (Verse 2)

Parīkṣit! The divine life and deeds of Lord Śrī Rāma, the husband of Sītā, have been extensively described by seers endowed with true knowledge, and you too have heard them many times. (Verse 3)

Kaama (Pradhyumana) and Aniruddha were born as Bharata and Shatrugna after Rama. . Sesha was born after Rama as Lakshmana son of Sumitra .

Special notes:

1. There are varied opinions with regard to the order of birth of Lakshmana and Bharata. Some are of the opinion that Bharata is elder while some have reasons to call Lakshmana elder.

Special Notes:

1. In some puranas it is mentioned that Shri Vaasudeva Sankarshana, Pradhyumna and Aniruddha have taken avatara as Raama, Lakshmana, Bharata and Shatrugna respectively. Vaalmiki Raamaya itself says so. In the sloka 'shankarshannadhyai.......' Shrimadhacharya has given the right interpretation for this.

2. Vaasudeva is saakshat Raama. But in Lakshmana and others there is only avesha of the Lord Hari as Sankarshana, Pradhyumna and Aniruddha respectively. They are not saakshat avatara of the Lord.

Allegations-

Brahma had gone to sage Santanu's house, however, Santanu was not present at that time and Brahma was welcomed by Santanu's wife Amogha, seeing the beautiful wife of sage Santanu, Brahma ejaculated on their seat and left the house. When sage Santanu came ɔ of all this, instead of becoming furious, he asked his wife Amogha to drink Brahma's semen in order to conceive a son, as commanded by her husband, Amogha drank the semen and was impregnated.

Padma Purana Section 1 Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa, Chapter 55, verses 19b-30a "There was a well-known sage, Śantanu by name, who was honoured by gods and whose lustre was like that of the lotus-born one (i.e. Brahmā). (His) beautiful and youthful (wife) was known as Amoghā. Once Brahmā went to her house to meet her husband (Śantanu). At that time, the best sage (i.e. Śantanu) had gone to the forest for (collecting) flowers etc... Seeing that woman of a spotless body, the Creator was overpowered with the passion of love...The semen of the supreme soul, Brahmā, fell on the bedstead.

Refutation-

Rc Hazra in his book Puranic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs page no 120 said that the chapters after chapter 43 in Shristi khanda (including chapter 55) are later interpolations into Padma Purana and was composed likely after the Satanic Islamic Muhammadans established their rule in India . So this chapter is a later interpolation and not part of Padma Purana originally

(5) SṚṢṬI-KHAṆḌA.[68] This Khaṇḍa, which is assigned the fifth place in our edition, is really the first of the set. This position of the Khaṇḍa is betrayed by the mode of its beginning as well as by the sequence and contents of the five Parvans given in chap. 1.

This Khaṇḍa, as we have it now, can be rightly divided into two parts:

(1) chaps. 1-43 (verses 1-97)

and (2) chaps. 43 (verses 98 ff.) to the end.

It will be seen hereinafter that the chapters of the second part were added to the Sṛṣṭi-kh. after the Muhammadans had established kingdoms in India. Hence the chapters of the first part, which are of earlier date, are examined first.

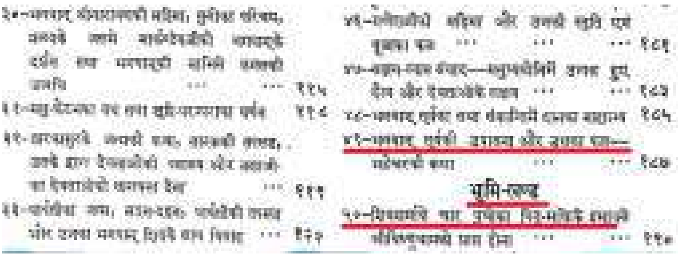
* The Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa in Bengal Mss consists only of 46 (or according to Aufrecht, 45) chapters. The corresponding chapters in a Bengal Ms. (No. 1991, D. U. Mss Lib.) of this Khaṇḍa and the ĀnSS ed. are given below:

upon them, it is difficult to say anything about the lower limit.

Chapters 43 (verses 98 ff.) to the end, which, according to our division, form the second part of the work, are not found in the Bengal Mss. So their comparatively late date can be well understood. These chapters were written and added to the Sṛṣṭi-kh. after the Muhammadans had established kingdoms in India. These foreigners have been called kings[83] and scornfully described more than once under the names 'Turuṣka', 'Mleccha' and 'Yavana'[84]. The descriptions are undoubtedly aimed at the Muhammadans who 'polluted' the society and the land of the Hindus by their contact and slaughter of cows. Hence the date of composition of this part of the Sṛṣṭi-kh. can by no means be placed earlier than 1000 A.D. Such a late date is supported by the contents also, which are replete with Tantric elements. The Āgamas have many times been mentioned as authorities along with the Vedas and the Purāṇas; the Tulasī plant has been glorified in highly extravagant language; and so on. As Hemādri quotes

* In connection with the quotations the following stories of the Padma-p. have been mentioned in the Adbhutasāgara:

Even Geeta Press Gorakhpur padma Purana has only 49 Chapters and no 55th chapter exists



THE TRUE CHARACTER OF BRAHMA JI FROM SRIMAD BHAGAVATAM

Brahma Ji is the master of all his senses, never speaks falsehood, never strays from the righteous path, and remains ever devoted to penance and austerities.

Srimad Bhagvatam 2/6/32-35

प्यारे नारद ! मैं प्रेमपूर्ण एवं उत्कण्ठित हृदयसे भगवान्‌के स्मरणमें मग्न रहता हूँ, इसीसे मेरी वाणी कभी असत्य होती नहीं दीखती, मेरा मन कभी असत्य संकल्प नहीं करता और मेरी इन्द्रियाँ भी कभी मर्यादाका उल्लंघन करके कुमार्गमें नहीं जातीं ।। ३३ ।। मैं वेदमूर्ति हूँ, मेरा जीवन तपस्यामय है, बड़े-बड़े प्रजापति मेरी वन्दना करते हैं और मैं उनका स्वामी पहले मैंने बड़ी निष्ठासे योगका सर्वांग अनुष्ठान किया था

Dear Nārada! With a heart full of love and longing, I remain absorbed in the remembrance of the Lord.
Because of this, my speech never appears to be false, my mind never forms false resolves, and my senses never violate propriety by straying onto the wrong path. (33)
I am the embodiment of the Vedas; my life is filled with austerity.
Great Prajāpatis offer me their reverence, and I am their master. Earlier, with great steadfastness, I had performed the complete practice of Yoga, yet I could not come to know the true nature of my original cause the Supreme Self. (34)

Srimad Bhagvatam 2/9/3-8 Geeta Press Gorakhpur

ब्रह्माजीकी निष्कपट तपस्यासे प्रसन्न होकर भगवान्ने उन्हें अपने रूपका दर्शन कराया और आत्म-तत्त्वके ज्ञानके लिये उन्हें परम सत्य परमार्थ वस्तुका उपदेश किया (वही बात मैं तुम्हें सुनाता हूँ) ।।४।।
तीनों लोकोंके परम गुरु आदिदेव ब्रह्माजी अपने जन्मस्थान कमलपर बैठकर सृष्टि करनेकी इच्छासे विचार करने लगे . ब्रह्माजी तपस्वियोंमें सबसे बड़े तपस्वी हैं। उनका ज्ञान अमोघ है। उन्होंने उस समय एक सहस्र दिव्य वर्षपर्यन्त एकाग्र चित्तसे अपने प्राण, मन, कर्मेन्द्रिय और ज्ञानेन्द्रियोंको वशमें करके ऐसी तपस्या की, जिससे वे समस्त लोकोंको प्रकाशित करनेमें समर्थ हो सके ।।८।।

Pleased with Brahmā's sincere and guileless austerity, the Lord granted him a vision of His own form and instructed him in the Supreme Truth – the ultimate reality so that he might gain knowledge of the Self. (4)
The supreme preceptor of the three worlds, the primordial deity Brahmā, seated upon the lotus – his place of birth – began to contemplate with the desire to create the universe.
Brahmā is the greatest of all ascetics. His knowledge is unfailing. At that time, for a thousand divine years, with a concentrated mind, he brought his life-breath, mind, organs of action, and organs of perception under control, performing such austerity that he became capable of illuminating all the worlds. ब्रह्माजी ! नाना प्रकारके कर्मसंस्कारोंके अनुसार अनेक प्रकारकी जीवसृष्टिको रचनेकी इच्छा होनेपर भी तुम्हारा चित्त मोहित नहीं होता, यह मेरी अतिशय कृपाका ही फल है ।।३४।। तुम सबसे पहले मन्त्रद्रष्टा हो। प्रजा उत्पन्न करते समय भी तुम्हारा मन मुझमें ही लगा रहता है, इसीसे पापमय रजोगुण तुमको बाँध नहीं पाता ।।३५।। तुम मुझे भूत, इन्द्रिय, गुण और अन्तःकरणसे रहित समझते हो; इससे जान पड़ता है कि यद्यपि देहधारी जीवोंको मेरा ज्ञान होना बहुत कठिन है, तथापि तुमने मुझे जान लिया है ।।३६।। 'मेरा आश्रय कोई है या नहीं' इस सन्देहसे तुम कमलनालके द्वारा जलमें उसका मूल खोज रहे थे, सो मैंने तुम्हें अपना यह स्वरूप अन्तःकरणमें ही दिखलाया है ।।३७।।
O Brahmā! Even though, according to various karmic impressions, you have the desire to create many kinds of living beings, your mind is not deluded this is solely the result of My supreme grace. (34)
You are the very first seer of the mantras. Even while producing the creation, your mind remains fixed on Me; therefore, the sinful quality of rajas cannot bind you. (35)

You understand Me to be devoid of elements, senses, qualities, and the inner organ (mind); this shows that, although it is extremely difficult for embodied beings to know Me, you have indeed realized Me. (36)
When you wondered, “Do I have a source or not?” and searched for its root in the water through the stalk of the lotus, I revealed this very form of Mine to you within your own heart. (37)

Allegations-

A sage named Angira had also contracted Niyoga with the wife of Rathitara, Srimad Bhagavatam 9.6.2-3 “Rathītara had no sons, and therefore he requested the great sage Aṅgirā to beget sons for him. Because of this request, Aṅgirā begot sons in the womb of Rathītara’s wife. All these sons were born with brahminical prowess.— Having been born from the womb of Rathītara’s wife, all these sons were known as the dynasty of Rathītara, but because they were born from the semen of Aṅgirā, they were also known as the dynasty of Aṅgirā. Among all the progeny of Rathītara, these sons were the most prominent because, owing to their birth, they were considered brāhmaṇas.”

Shri Shukadeva said—
O Parīkṣit! Ambarīṣa had three sons — Virūpa, Ketumān, and Śambhu.

From Virūpa was born Puṣpadrakṣa, and his son was Sthītiraḥ. ॥19॥

Sthītiraḥ was childless. For the protection of the family lineage, he prayed to the sage Aṅgirā.
Through his wife, empowered by the Brahmic radiance (spiritual potency), Angirā produced several sons. ॥20॥

Now read the line स्थीतिर् सन्तानहीन था। वंश परम्पराकी रक्षा के लिये उसने अङ्गिरा ऋषिसे प्रार्थना की,. For the protection of the family lineage, he prayed to the sage Aṅgirā. Here Sthītiraḥ was childless and for the protection of his family lineage he approached Sage Angira .

The Purpose of Niyoga was to save the family lineage from getting extinct and was practised only in these types of Extreme Situations

Niyoga was a practice that was allowed to make sure that woman experiences the pious feeling of becoming a mother during her lifetime.
Simply put, if a man failed in his responsibility to impregnate his wife, then-wife could seek permission from her husband to get impregnated by someone else. An exception was also made if the man died without becoming a father. Since humans are not perfect and Hindus know it from the beginning of time, various restrictions were laid to curtail the misuse of Niyoga.
WHEN YOU SHOULD DO NIYOG
Narada (12.82-88)-For this custom is practised only when the family threatens to become extinct, for the continuance of the lineage, and not from amorous desire.

only direct intercourse is allowed no foreplay with body(kissing,hugging, limbs etc)

Narada (12.82-88). He shall approach the woman, free from passion, and without amorous desire. He must have anointed his limbs with clarified butter, or with oil which has not lost its natural condition, and must turn away his face from hers and avoid the contact of limb with limb. For this custom is practised only when the family threatens to become extinct, for the continuance of the lineage, and not from amorous desire. After niyog he should never approach the women or her child again and should do penance

Kātyāyana (Do., 449).-'After having carried out Niyoga, one should perform the prescribed penance for expiation.'

Sages Declare a window shouldn't do niyoga instead she should preserve her Chastity.

Parāśara (4.29). 'If, on the death of her husband, a woman remains firm in her chastity, she obtains heaven, on death, in the manner of the Religious Students.'

Do. (4.4.57-59).-'On the death of her husband, the chaste woman should either accompany him or observe the vows; she should not go to other houses; she should maintain chastity, control her passions and give up personal adornment.'

Yājñavalkya (1.87).-'She who is devoted to her husband's welfare, well-behaved, with senses under control, attains fame in this world and the supreme state, after death.'

This practice is criticized by rishi manu himself –

Manu Smriti 9.159

That woman, however, who from a longing for a child, disregards her husband, brings disgrace to herself in this world and falls off from her place in the other world.-(159).

"The Gandharva continued, 'Thus addressed, Vasishtha, that best of Brahmanas devoted to truth replied unto that mighty bowman of a monarch, saying, 'I will give you...After the royal sage had entered his capital, the queen, at the king's command, approached Vasishtha. The great Rishi, making a covenant with her, united himself with her according to the high ordinance. And after a little while, when the queen conceived, that best of Rishis, receiving the reverential salutations of the king, went back to his asylum. The queen bore the embryo in her womb for a long time. When she saw that she did not bring forth anything, she tore open her womb by a piece of stone. It was then that at the twelfth year (of the conception) was born Asmaka, that bull amongst men, that royal sage who founded (the city of) Paudanya."

And Vali said, ‘O illustrious one, it behoveth thee to raise upon my wife a few sons that shall be virtuous and wise.’ Thus addressed, the Rishi endued with great energy, expressed his willingness. Thereupon king Vali sent his wife Sudeshna unto him. But the queen knowing that the latter was blind and old went not unto him, she sent unto him her nurse. And upon that Sudra woman the virtuous Rishi of passions under full control begat eleven children of whom Kakshivat was the eldest…Thy unfortunate queen Sudeshna, seeing me blind and old, insulted me by not coming herself but sending unto me, instead, her nurse.’ The king then pacified that best of Rishis and sent unto him his queen Sudeshna. Ved Vyas Said – "The wives of Vichitravīrya must observe a vow (vrata) in the manner prescribed by me for one full year—practicing self-restraint and performing it solely with the aim of begetting offspring. Only then will they be considered pure. Any woman who has not observed such a vow may not approach me."

"It is particularly important to note that Rishi Vyasa explicitly instructed Mata Satyavati that the wives of Vichitravīrya must observe a vow of purity and self-restraint for a full year, with the sole objective of begetting progeny. Had his intent been driven by lust, he would never have talked about imposing such a condition of discipline and sanctity. This clearly reflects that his purpose was entirely righteous and aimed at preserving the lineage through dharma."

"Mata Satyavati urged Rishi Vyasa to act swiftly, not out of impatience, but because Hastinapur could not remain without a king for long. Without a ruler, the kingdom risked falling into disorder, dharma would decline, and divine balance would be lost. Her concern was for the stability of the state and continuation of the royal lineage."

Verse 43:
Satyavatī said, "Son! Do whatever is necessary so that these two queens may conceive quickly."

Verse 44:
"There is no king in the kingdom at present. Without a ruler, the people become orphaned and are destroyed. Sacrificial rites, charity, and other religious duties also disappear. In such a kingdom, there is neither rainfall nor the presence of the gods."

Verse 45:
"O Lord! You yourself consider—how can a kingdom remain protected and orderly without a king? Therefore, perform the act of conception without delay. Bhīṣma will raise and nurture the child with care."

प्रभो! तुम्हीं सोचो, बिना राजाका राज्य कैसे सुरक्षित और अनुशासित रह सकता है। इसलिये शीघ्र गर्भाधान करो। भीष्म बालकका पालन-पोषणकर बड़ा कर लेंगे ।। ४५ ।।

Verse 46:
Vyasa said, “Mother! If I am to give a son to my brother without following the proper time-bound observances, then it is essential that those noble ladies observe this important vow — they must remain calm and not be frightened upon seeing my unattractive appearance.”

Verse 47:
“If Kausalya (Ambikā) can endure my smell, form, attire, and body without fear or aversion, then she can conceive a noble son in her womb even today.”

व्यास उवाच

यदि पुत्रः प्रदातव्यो मया भ्रातुरकालिकः ।

व्यासजी बोले—माँ! यदि मुझे समयका नियम न रखकर शीघ्र ही अपने भाईके लिये पुत्र प्रदान करना है, तो उन देवियोंके लिये यह उत्तम व्रत आवश्यक है कि वे मेरे असुन्दर रूपको देखकर शान्त रहें, डरें नहीं ॥ ४६ ॥

यदि मे सहते गन्धं रूपं वेषं तथा वपुः ।
अद्यैव गर्भं कौसल्या विशिष्टं प्रतिपद्यताम् ॥ ४७ ॥

यदि कौसल्या (अम्बिका) मेरे गन्ध, रूप, वेष और शरीरको सहन कर ले तो वह आज ही एक उत्तम बालकको अपने गर्भमें पा सकती है ॥ ४७ ॥

“O graceful lady! Restore the declining Bharata dynasty. Give birth to a brilliant son, equal to Indra, the king of the gods. He alone will uphold the great burden of our royal legacy.”

नष्टं च भारतं वंशं पुनरेव समुद्धर ।

“It should therefore be clearly understood that Rishi Vyasa was entrusted with this responsibility in a grave and critical situation, solely to preserve and continue the lineage of the Kuru dynasty. His role was a dharmic duty—driven by necessity and Situation —not by any motive of lust.”

WHAT IS NIYOG?

Niyoga was a practice that was allowed to make sure that woman experiences the pious feeling of becoming a mother during her lifetime.
Simply put, if a man failed in his responsibility to impregnate his wife, then-wife could seek permission from her husband to get impregnated by someone else. An exception was also made if the man died without becoming a father. Since humans are not perfect and Hindus know it from the beginning of time, various restrictions were laid to curtail the misuse of Niyoga.

WHEN YOU SHOULD DO NIYOG

Nārada (12.82-88)-For this custom is practised only when the family threatens to become extinct, for the continuance of the lineage, and not from amorous desire.

📌Widows shall ask permission from elders before performing Niyog

Gautama (18.4-7).—'A woman whose husband is dead and who desires offspring may bear a son to her brother-in-law. She should obtain the permission of her elders and should have intercourse during her period only. On failure of her brother-in-law, she may obtain offspring from a Sapiṇḍa, a Sagotra, a Samānapravara or from one belonging to the same caste. Some people hold that she should do this with none but her brother-in-law.'

Baudhāyana (2.4.9-10).—'After the expiry of six months from her husband's death, she may, with the authority of her elders, bear a son to her brother-in-law, in case she has no son. They quote the following:—"A barren woman or one who has already borne sons, or one who is past childbearing, or one whose children are all dead, or one who is unwilling, must never be authorised or appointed to do this."'

Vasiṣṭha (17.56).—'After the completion of six months from the death of her husband, she shall bathe, and offer a funeral oblation to the husband. Then her father and brother shall assemble the elders who taught or sacrificed for her husband, as also his relatives, and authorise her to raise issue to her deceased husband. One should not thus appoint a widow who is either mad or ill-behaved or diseased; nor one who is very aged;—sixteen years after maturity is the period for authorising a widow. Nor shall such an authorisation be made if the male entitled to approach her is sickly.'

Yājñavalkya (1.68-69).—'If a widow is without a son, her brother-in-law, or a Sapiṇḍa or a Sagotra,—anointed with butter, shall approach her during her period, being authorised to do so by the elders, for the purpose of obtaining a son for her. He shall approach her only till conception has taken place; doing otherwise, he would become an outcast. The son born in this manner is called Kṣetraja.'

Nārada (12.80-81).—'Should the husband of a childless woman die, she should go to her brother-in-law, through desire to obtain a son, after having received the necessary authorisation from her elders;—and he shall have intercourse with her till a son is born. When a son is born, he must leave her. It would be sinful intercourse otherwise.'

📌The man should never meet her again and should perform penance after finishing niyoga

Yama (Vīramitrodaya, p. 448).—'A man desirous of securing offspring for his dead brother, may beget a child on his widow; he shall leave her as soon as conception has taken place; he shall never approach her after she has got a child.'

Kātyāyana (Ibid., 449).—'After having carried out Niyoga, one should perform the prescribed penance for expiation.'

📌Banned for brahmin women and other are allowed to have only 2 children from Niyog

Gautama (18.8).—'She shall not bear more than two sons.'

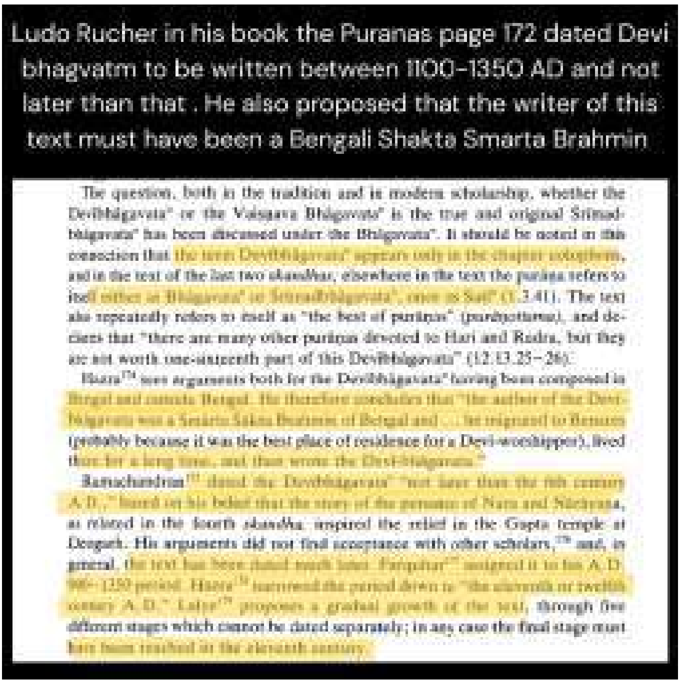
Ludo Rucher in his book the Puranas page 172 dated Devi bhagvatm to be written between 1100-1350 AD and not later than that . He also proposed that the writer of this text must have been a Bengali Shakta Smarta Brahmin



The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmadbhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sad (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[174] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and there wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[175] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[176] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[177] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[178] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[179] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

BIRTH OF VIDUR JI EXPLAINED FROM MAHABHARATA

Vidura's birth was not an accident or the result of circumstance—it was preordained by divine will. According to the scriptures, Dharma was cursed by Maharṣi Māṇḍavya to take birth in the mortal world. As a result, Dharma incarnated as Vidura to guide the Kuru dynasty with wisdom and uphold righteousness during a time of great moral crisis.

The manner of his birth—through a maidservant—was simply the instrument of that divine plan, not the essence of it. Even though Rishi Vyāsa came to know later that the woman was not the queen but a maid, this only fulfilled what had already been destined. Far from being irregular, this ensured that Vidura, who represented pure dharma, would remain detached from royal ambition and courtly corruption, enabling him to serve as the kingdom's moral compass.

His life, character, and revered status in the Mahābhārata confirm that his birth was the result of higher design, not of human failing or deception.

MAHABHARAT ADI PARVA ADHAYA 105 GEETA PRESS GORAKHPUR

Verse 20:
After that, Satyavatī again requested him (Vyāsa) for another son. The great sage accepted his mother's command, saying, "Very well."

Verse 21:
Then, at the proper time, Devi Ambālikā gave birth to a son of pale complexion. He was radiating with divine brilliance.

Verse 22:
This was the same child whose sons became the mighty archers—the five Pāṇḍavas. After this, when the proper time arrived, Satyavatī once again appointed her elder daughter-in-law, Ambikā, to go to Vyāsa.

Verse 23:
But the beautiful Ambikā, comparable to a celestial maiden, thought about the sage's unpleasant appearance and smell, and out of fear, disobeyed Devi Satyavatī's command.

Verse 24:
Princess Ambikā of Kāśī adorned one of her maidservants, who was as beautiful as an apsarā, with her own ornaments and sent her to the dark-complexioned sage Vyāsa.

Verse 25:
When the sage arrived, the maidservant came forward to welcome him, offered her respects, and upon receiving his permission, sat on the bed and began serving him with reverence.

Verse 26–27 (combined):
Meeting him in private, the sage Vyāsa was greatly pleased with her. O King! When the sage, strict in observing his vows, rose after lying with her, he said, "O blessed one! You shall no longer remain a maidservant. In your womb will be born a most excellent child."

Verse 30 (summary of a previous section):
Śrī Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa informed Satyavatī of everything. He revealed the secret that Ambikā had 'eceived him by sending her maid in her place. Therefore, the child born from the womb of the maidservant—who was of the Śūdra class—would be a son.

Verse 31:
In this way, Vyāsa fulfilled his dharmic duty by obeying his mother's command. Then he met her again, informed her about the pregnancy, and disappeared from there.

Verse 32:
From Vyāsa, in the field of Vichitravīrya, were born these three sons, who were radiant like celestial beings and who expanded the Kuru dynasty.

Mahabharata 1.120.26-41 "Hearing these words of the ascetics, Pandu, remembering the loss of his procreative powers owing to the curse of the deer, began to reflect deeply. And calling his wedded wife the excellent Kunti, unto him, he told her in private, 'Strive thou to raise offspring at this time of distress... The religious institutes mention six kinds of sons that are heirs and kinsmen, and six other kinds that are not heirs but kinsmen. I shall speak of them presently. O Pritha, listen to me. They are: 1st, the son begotten by one's own self upon his wedded wife; 2nd, the son begotten upon one's wife by an accomplished person from motives of kindness; 3rd, the son begotten upon one's wife by a person for pecuniary consideration; 4th, the son begotten upon the wife after the husband's death; 5th, the maiden-born son; 6th, the son born of an unchaste wife; 7th, the son given; 8th, the son bought for a consideration; 9th, the son self-given; 10th, the son received with a pregnant bride; 11th, the brother's son; and 12th, the son begotten upon a wife of lower caste. On failure of offspring of a prior class, the mother should desire to have offspring of the next class. In times of distress, men solicit offspring from accomplished younger brothers. The self-born Manu hath said that men failing to have legitimate offspring of their own may have offspring begotten upon their wives by others, for sons confer the highest religious merit. Therefore, O Kunti, being destitute myself of the power of procreation, I command thee to raise good offspring through some person who is either equal or superior to me. O Kunti, listen to the history of the daughter of Saradandayana who was appointed by her lord to raise offspring. That warrior-dame, when her monthly season arrived, bathed duly and in the night went out and waited on a spot where four roads met. She did not wait long when a Brahmana crowned with ascetic success came there. The daughter of Saradandayana solicited him for offspring. After pouring libations of clarified butter on the fire (in the performance of the sacrifice known by the name of Punsavana) she brought forth three sons that were mighty car-warriors and of whom Durjay

Refutation-

After being cursed by Rishi Kindama, Maharaj Pandu renounced worldly pleasures and began to live a life of intense penance and austerity along with his wives. Through his sincere atonement and sinless living, he attained great spiritual power, becoming as radiant and influential (Prabhavshali) as a Brahmarishi.

One day, he saw a procession of sages and Brahmarishis journeying toward Brahmaloka to have the divine darshan of Pitamah Brahma Ji. Deeply inspired, Pandu wished to accompany them. However, he was restrained by a painful realization—he had not yet fulfilled his debt to the ancestors (Pitṛ-ṛṇa) since he remained childless. If he were to die without leaving behind progeny, his ancestors would surely face a fall from their celestial realms.

But due to the curse of Rishi Kindama, he was incapable of fathering children. This thought caused him immense grief and fear—of failing in his duties, of letting down his lineage, and of the destruction of his family line.

Torn by desperation and a deep sense of dharma, Pandu finally turned to Kunti, begging her to bear children—even if it meant doing so through another man. His plea was not born out of personal desire but from the weight of responsibility, fear of ancestral doom, and the torment of being unable to fulfill his sacred obligations.

O ascetic sages! I have not yet been able to free myself from the debt owed to my ancestors, and that thought deeply troubles me. (Verses 15–16)

If I die in this childless state, then surely my forefathers will fall (from their heavenly abodes). A human being takes birth on this earth bearing four kinds of debts. (Verse 17)

(These four debts are:) the debt to the ancestors (Pitṛ-ṛṇa), the debt to the gods (Deva-ṛṇa), the debt to the sages (Ṛṣi-ṛṇa), and the debt to fellow human beings (Manuṣya-ṛṇa). All these debts must be repaid through righteous conduct. Those who do not properly fulfill these obligations in due time are not eligible to attain the virtuous realms. This is the principle established by the wise and learned. (Verses 18–19)

By performing sacrifices (yajñas), one satisfies the gods; and through self-study and austerity (tapas), one pleases the sages."

(Verse 36)
"O Pṛthā (Kuntī)! It has been stated by Svāyambhuva Manu himself that even without one's own seed (virya), a man may obtain a noble son through the union of his wife with a superior man—and such a son brings the fruits of dharma."

(Verse 37)
"Therefore, O illustrious Kuntī! Since I am myself incapable of producing offspring, today I shall send you to another man. Do obtain a child from someone who is either like me or even superior to me."

Allegations-

King Pandu also ordered his wife Kunti to conceive children with the Sun god Surya, Mahabharata 1.123.1-9 "Vaisampayana said, 'O Janamejaya, when Gandhari's conception had been a full year old, it was then that Kunti summoned the eternal god of justice to obtain offspring from him. And she offered without loss of time, sacrifices unto the god and began to duly repeat the formula that Durvasa had imparted to her some time before. Then the god, overpowered by her incantations, arrived at the spot where Kunti was seated in his car resplendent as the Sun. Smiling, he asked, 'O Kunti, what am I to give thee?' And Kunti too smiling in her turn, replied, 'Thou must even give me offspring.' Then the handsome Kunti was united (in intercourse) with the god of justice in his spiritual form and obtained from him a son devoted to the good of all creatures. And she brought his excellent child, who lived to acquire a great fame...And this first child of Pandu shall be known by the name of Yudhishthira. Possessed of prowess and honesty of disposition, he shall be a famous king, known throughout the three worlds."

Vaishampayana said –
O Janamejaya! When Kuntī spoke in that manner, the dharma-knowing King Pāṇḍu again addressed her with these righteous words. (Verse 1)

Pāṇḍu said –
“Kuntī, what you have said is correct. In ancient times, King Vyushitāśva indeed did the same as you have described. O blessed one, he was as radiant as the gods.” (Verse 2)

“Now let me tell you the essence of dharma—listen carefully. This eternal dharma was directly realized by great sages well-versed in righteousness.” (Verse 3)

“This is what virtuous men call the ancient code of conduct. O royal maiden! Whatever a husband tells his wife—whether agreeable or disagreeable to her—must be carried out. This is the declaration of men learned in the Vedas. Especially, when a husband, though incapable of producing children himself, desires progeny, his words must be obeyed. (Verses 4–5)

O auspicious one with flawless limbs! Because I yearn to behold the face of a son, I now humbly raise to you this pair of hands, cupped in reverence near my forehead—hands adorned with red fingertips and shining like lotus petals. O beloved with beautiful hair! I ask you to unite with a worthy Brahmin, one accomplished in austerity, and beget a virtuous son by my command. (Verses 6–7)

O fair-hipped one! Through your effort, may I attain the fate of those blessed with sons—this is my heartfelt desire.” (Verse 8)

Vaishampayana said –
O Janamejaya! When King Pandu, the conqueror of enemy kingdoms, spoke thus, Kuntī, who was devoted to her husband’s welfare and desirous of fulfilling his wishes, replied with these words: (Verse 9)

“O best of the Bharatas! O foremost among Kshatriyas! It is improper for a wife to have to be repeatedly requested by her husband just to please him—for it is indeed the woman’s duty to always strive to please her husband. O mighty-armed one! Please hear what I have to say, for it will bring you great joy. (Verse 10)

In my youth, while I lived at my father's house, I was assigned the task of serving guests. There, I came across a stern and austere Brahmin named Durvāsā, whose ways and knowledge of dharma were unknown even to others. I served that great soul, who had mastery over his mind and observed strict vows, with the utmost care and devotion." (Verse 11)

The woman having intercourse with four different men is called a Swairini (heanton), while she having intercourse with five becometh a harlot. DID MATA KUNTI HAVE SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH DEVAS FOR BEGETTING PANDAVAS ?

Just like Karna was born to Mata Kunti from Surya Deva when Surya Deva impregnated her through the power of Yoga without violating her chastity in Mahabharat Vana

तदनन्तर योगमूर्ति धारण किये हुए धर्मके साथ समागम करके सुन्दरांगी कुन्तीने एक ऐसा पुत्र प्राप्त किया, जो समस्त प्राणियोंका हित करनेवाला था ॥ ५ ॥

Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva (Adhaya 122 sloka 5) : the verse states that Kuntī, “having united with Dharma in the form of a yogamūrti,” obtained a son. The word yogamūrti is critical—it means a manifestation assumed through yogic or mantra-based means, not an ordinary physical body. When samāgama (union) is qualified by yogamūrti, it signifies a non-carnal meeting effected through spiritual invocation. In the narrative, Kuntī uses the mantra granted by Durvāsā to invoke the deity; conception is described as the deity’s tejas (power/essence) entering the womb, an arrangement adopted precisely because ordinary intercourse was impossible in Pāṇḍu’s case. Crucially, the text avoids sexual vocabulary (maithuna, rati, kāma-vikāra) and instead uses terms of invocation and manifestation. Therefore, while Kuntī indeed conceived and bore sons, the mechanism presented is mantra-mediated and yogic—not sexual intercourse with the Devas.

Allegations-

Not to confuse this consensual sex with the rape. When Surya raped Kunti a son named Karna was born, see Devi Bhagavatam 2.6.36-48 and it happened before er marriage.

Matsya Purana 48.67-76 "After that, King Bali appeased that sage and was furious with his wife; and sent her again well-dressed, after her toilet, to the sage, when the seer said. "O. Devi! Cast off your bashfulness and then lick the whole of my body with your tongue, after rubbing it with salt, curds and honey; you will then attain your wish and get sons." The queen followed the directions of the seer, but omitted to lick the hind private parts. When the sage said; "O, blessed one! Your eldest son will be without that part of the body which you have omitted to lick." The queen said:- "Sire! It is not worthy of you to bless me with such an offspring. Be pleased at my devotion and show your mercy to me." Dirghatama said:- "

Refutation-

Here is Matsya Purana chapter 48 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications

Rishi Dirghatama was blind from birth due to a curse by Brihaspati ji and thus could not engage in direct intercourse as part of the niyoga arrangement with Queen Sudeshna for begetting progeny. However, due to his intense tapas and yogic powers, he advised the queen to perform a symbolic act—smearing his body with purifying substances like salt, mud, and honey, and licking it without disgust—as a ritual to receive the spiritual seed . This was not a carnal act but a yogic and dharmic method suitable to the circumstances. The queen's partial completion of the act led to the symbolic result that one son was born lacking a body part.

यह कहते ही बृहस्पति ने गर्भ को शाप देते कहा "तुम मेरे आनन्द अवसर पर मुझे निषेध कर रहे हो। ऐसी बातों के पाप से तुम बड़े समय तक अंधकार में रहोगे। इस शाप के कारण ममता के गर्भ से दीर्घतमा बालक पैदा हुआ। वह उशिज पुत्र तेजस्विता में बृहस्पतिवत् था।।४०-४२।

वह अखण्ड ब्रह्मचारी था। उशिजाश्रम में ही रहता था। उशिज ने वहीं रहते वृषभ से गो धर्म पढ़ा। भाई के आश्रम में रहते एक वृषभ वहां आया। वह यज्ञकार्यार्थ लाये कुश पर चलने-फिरने लगा। दीर्घतमा ने उस वृषभ के दोनों श्रृंग पकड़े। वृषभ एकदम वहीं जड़-सा हो गया। विवश हो उसने कहा "हे महाबली ! मुझे छोड़ो ।। ४३-४६ ।।

तात! आपके समान बली आज तक कोई नहीं मिला। मैं भी अद्वितीय बली रहा हूं। आपसे निवेदन है मुझे छोड़िये। मैं अति सन्तुष्ट हूं। बदले में वर ग्रहण करिये। तब दीर्घतमा ने कहा-मेरे जीवित रहते तुम कहां जा सकोगे? तुम जैसे पराये धन के भक्षक को कभी नहीं जाना। तुम चौपाय को नहीं छोडूंगा।।४७-४८।।

Verses 40–42:
At that moment, Bṛhaspati (the celestial preceptor) cursed the fetus and said:
"You are denying me at the most important moment.
Due to the sin of such an act, you shall remain in darkness (blindness) for a long time."
As a result of this curse, Dirghatama was born from the womb of Mamataa.
He was the son of Ushij and possessed brilliance equal to that of Bṛhaspati himself.

Verse 43:
He was a lifelong celibate (Akhaṇḍa Brahmachārī).
He resided in the ashram of Ushij, his father.

Verses 44–46:
While he was staying at his brother's hermitage, a bull arrived there (intended for a sacrificial ritual) and began roaming about on the sacred Kusha grass.
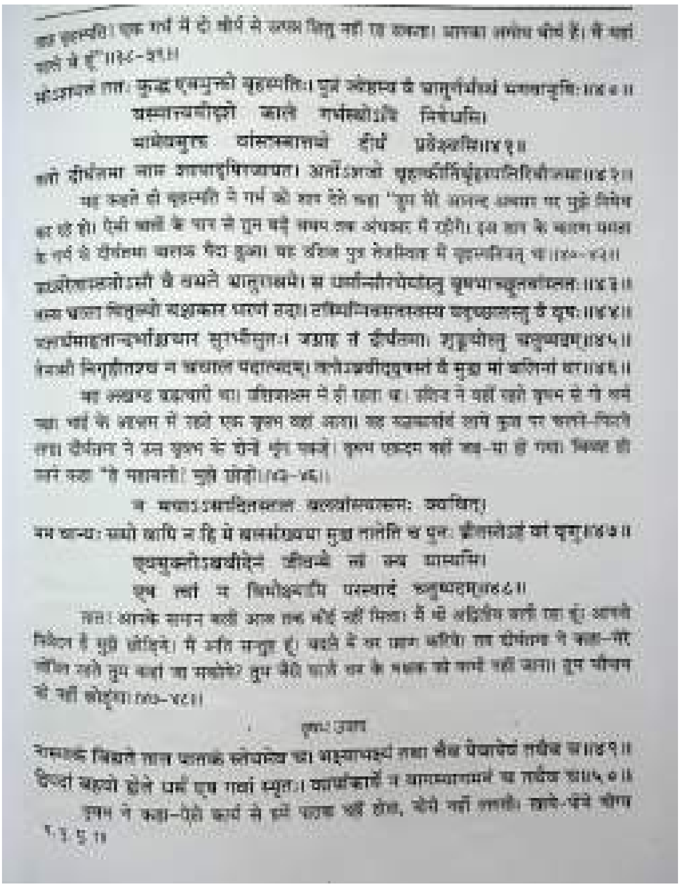
Dirghatama seized the bull by both its horns, and instantly, the bull became paralyzed and frozen in place.



बलि ने दीर्घतमा मुनि से पुत्र पाने हेतु वर मांगा कहा मेरी पत्नी के गर्भ से आप धर्मार्थ तत्वज्ञ पुत्र उत्पन्न हो ।।६०।।इस विनय निवेदन से बलि ने उनसे वर पाया, तब बलि ने वांछित सन्तानार्थ अपनी स्त्री सुदेष्णा को दीर्घतमा को दिया। पर वह ऋषि को अन्ध-वृद्ध जान उनके निकट नहीं गयी। उसने शूद्रकुलोत्पन्न घाय को उनके पास समागमार्थ भेजा। उस धाय से जितेन्द्रिय धार्मिक दीर्घतमा ने काक्षीवान् आदि कई पुत्र उत्पन्न किये, जिन्हें देख नृपति बलि ने दीर्घतमा से कहा।।६१-६३।।
राजोवाचराजा कहते हैं-क्या ऋषि धर्म चतुर समर्थ ब्रह्मवादी धार्मिक सदाचारी बुद्धिशाली सत्कर्मी पुत्र मेरा ही है? मुनि ने कहा-ये मेरे पुत्र हैं। हे दानवप्रवर! ये सभी अपनी सम्मति से शूद्रकुलोत्पन्न हैं। हे राजन्! सुदेष्णा ने अन्धा-बूढ़ा जान कर अपमानित किया। उसने शूद्रा धाय को मेरे पास भेजा।।६४-६६।।

King Bali requested a boon from Sage Dirghatama, asking: "May you bless me with a virtuous, wise son—born of my wife's womb."

Accepting his request, the sage agreed. King Bali then presented his wife Sudeshna to Dirghatama for the purpose of begetting a son. However, Sudeshna, perceiving the sage as blind and elderly, refused to approach him. Instead, she sent a maidservant of Shudra origin to him for physical union.

From this maidservant, the sage Dirghatama—self-controlled and righteous—fathered several sons, including Kakshivan and others. Upon seeing them, King Bali asked: "Are these wise, dharmic sons the ones destined to be mine?"

The sage replied: "These are my sons, O noble demon! They were born from the maidservant, with her consent. Your wife Sudeshna insulted me, thinking me blind and old, and sent a Shudra woman in her place."

ऋषि के वचन सुन कर बलि ने नाना विषय से उनको खुश किया। तब गृह आकर सुदेष्णा को बलि ने बहुत बुरा-भला कहा। तब पुनः वस्त्राभूषणों से अलंकृत करके ऋषि के पास मैथुनार्थ भेजा। ऋषि ने सुदेष्णा का पूर्व अपमानप्रद व्यवहार देख कर कहा- "अब तुम नमक, मिट्टी लगी तथा मधु लपेटे मेरे एड़ी से मस्तक तक के देह को बिना घृणा चाटो। तब मनोनुकूल सन्तान मिलेगी"।।६७-६९।।

सुदेष्णा ने दीर्घतमा का सब आदेश पूरा किया। बस चाटते समय अपान (गुदा) को घृणा से छोड़ दिया। तब ऋषि ने कहा-चाटते हुए तुमने इसे घृणा से छोड़ा है, अतः प्रथम वाला कुमार बिना अपान ही पैदा होगा।। ७०-७१।।

सुदेष्णा कहती है-हे महाभाग! अपान रहित सन्तान मुझे मत दीजिये। अपने व्यवहार से आपको पूरा सन्तुष्ट किया। आप प्रसन्न हों।। ७२।।

दीर्घतमा कहते हैं-तुम्हारी त्रुटि से यह हुआ है। मेरा वचन अन्यथा नहीं होगा। पर चलो, यह फल यह पुत्र नहीं भोगेगा। उसका पुत्र वह फल भोगेगा। उसके देह में अपान भले न हो, सर्व इन्द्रियां रहेंगी। पौत्र एक योग्य व्यक्ति होगा। यह कह ऋषि ने अन्य अंग को छूआ और कहा।।७३-७४।।

हे सुन्दरी ! तुमने गुह्य इन्द्रिय छोड़ कर सर्वांग चाटा है। अतः तुम्हारे गर्भ से पूर्ण चन्द्र से मनोहर बालक होंगे। वे अति सुरूप, यज्ञ कार्य वाले, तेजवान्, सत्कर्मी होंगे। वे ५ तथा धार्मिक होंगे।।७५-७६।।

After hearing Sage Dirghatama's words, King Bali pleased him with various offerings. Upon returning home, Bali reproached his wife Sudeshna for her earlier disrespect and then dressed her in fine garments and ornaments, sending her back to the sage for union.

Dirghatama, remembering her previous insult and rejection, said: "To be blessed with a child as desired, you must now lick my body—coated with salt, earth, and honey—from heel to head without any disgust."

Sudeshna obeyed the command, but skipped the anus out of distaste. The sage then said: "You left that part out of revulsion, so your first son will be born without an anus."

Sudeshna begged: "O noble one! Please do not give me a son without an anus. I have followed your instructions and honored you—please be kind."

The sage replied: "Due to your error, the child will be born as foretold. But he will not suffer—his son shall carry the karmic fruit instead. Though lacking an anus, your son will be fully endowed with all other senses and will become the father of a virtuous and capable grandson."

Then, Dirghatama touched another part of her body and continued: "O beautiful one! Because you licked all parts but avoided the private organ, your womb shall produce children as splendid as the full moon—handsome, ritual-oriented, radiant, and virtuous. There will be five such righteous sons."

Allegations-

When Parashurama the sixth avatar of Vishnu annihilated Kshatriya men 21 times, the female Kshatriyas went to Brahmins to contract Niyoga and begat progeny who was Kshatriyas as the law of Niyoga is that the son belongs to the deceased father but not to the biological father who contracted Niyoga. Kshatriya women contracted Niyoga with Brahmin twenty-one times,

Brahmanda Purana 2.3.46.29-33 "After killing all the Ksatriyas on the surface of the Earth, Rama became calm... Ksatriya kings were begotten of the widowed wives of those Ksatriyas by Brahmanas. Again he (Rama) killed hundreds and thousands of such kings. In two years, Rama made the Earth devoid of Ksatriyas once again...Again, O king, enlightened Ksatriyas were procreated by the Brahmanas. Rama killed them entirely like the god of death, the destroyer of the Earth."

Mahabharata 1.104.4-7 "And the illustrious scion of Bhrigu's race, by means of his swift arrows annihilated the Kshatriya tribe one and twenty times. "And when the earth was thus deprived of Kshatriyas by the great Rishi, the Kshatriya ladies all over the land had offspring raised by Brahmanas skilled in the Vedas. It has been said in the Vedas that the sons so raised belongeth to him that had married the mother. And the Kshatriya ladies went in unto the Brahamanas not lustfully but from motives of virtue. Indeed, it was thus that the Kshatriya race was revived."

Refutation-

Same Facts and explanation as above –

The Purpose of Niyoga was to save the family lineage from getting extinct and was practised only in these types of Extreme Situations

Niyoga was a practice that was allowed to make sure that woman experiences the pious feeling of becoming a mother during her lifetime.
Simply put, if a man failed in his responsibility to impregnate his wife, then-wife could seek permission from her husband to get impregnated by someone else. An exception was also made if the man died without becoming a father. Since humans are not perfect and Hindus know it from the beginning of time, various restrictions were laid to curtail the misuse of Niyoga.
WHEN YOU SHOULD DO NIYOG
Narada (12.82-88)-For this custom is practised only when the family threatens to become extinct, for the continuance of the lineage, and not from amorous desire.

WHAT IS NIYOG?

Niyoga was a practice that was allowed to make sure that woman experiences the pious feeling of becoming a mother during her lifetime.
Simply put, if a man failed in his responsibility to impregnate his wife, then-wife could seek permission from her husband to get impregnated by someone else. An exception was also made if the man died without becoming a father. WHEN YOU SHOULD DO NIYOG
Nārada (12.82-88)-For this custom is practised only when the family threatens to become extinct, for the continuance of the lineage, and not from amorous desire.

only direct intercourse is allowed no foreplay with body(kissing,hugging, limbs etc)
Narada (12.82-88). He shall approach the woman, free from passion, and without amorous desire. He must have anointed his limbs with clarified butter, or with oil which has not lost its natural condition, and must turn away his face from hers and avoid the contact of limb with limb. For this custom is practised only when the family threatens to become extinct, for the continuance of the lineage, and not from amorous desire. He must not approach a woman who is with child, or blameworthy, or not duly authorised by her relations. Should a woman procreate a son with her brother-in-law without having been authorised Yama (Vivādaratnākara, p. 446).-'When during her period, the woman has taken her bath, her brother-in-law, desiring an offspring for his deceased brother, may approach her during the dark night, with speech held in check, with a single cloth on, and his body anointed with clarified butter, and mind stricken with grief, avoiding the contact of his face and limbs with her face and limbs.'

After niyog he should never approach the women or her child again and should do penance

Yama (Vivādaratnākara, p. 446). A man desirous of securing offspring for bis dead brother, may beget a child on his widow; he shall leave her as soon as conception has taken place; he shall never approach her after she has got a child.'

Kātyāyana (Do., 449).-'After having carried out Niyoga, one should perform the prescribed penance for expiation.'

Sages Declare a window shouldn't do niyoga instead she should preserve her Chastity.

Parāśara (4.29). 'If, on the death of her husband, a woman remains firm in her chastity, she obtains heaven, on death, in the manner of the Religious Students.'

Do. (4.4.57-59).-'On the death of her husband, the chaste woman should either accompany him or observe the vows; she should not go to other houses; she should maintain chastity, control her passions and give up personal adornment.'

Yājñavalkya (1.87).-'She who is devoted to her husband's welfare, well-behaved, with senses under control, attains fame in this world and the supreme state, after death.'

This practice is criticized by rishi manu himself –

Manu Smriti 9.159

That woman, however, who from a longing for a child, disregards her husband, brings disgrace to herself in this world and falls off from her place in the other world.-(159).

Niyoga is banned in Kaliyuga Because of the chances of its Misuse for Lustful purposes like 'slamic Halala Brhaspati (25.12-14). The Niyoga (authorisation of a widow to raise offspring to her deceased husband), after having been declared by Manu, has been forbidden by himself; on account of the deterioration in the nature of the time-cycles, this cannot he done by all in the proper form. In the Krta, Treta and Dvāpara cycles, men were imbued with austerities and with knowledge; in the Kali cycle a deterioration in the capacity of men has been brought about. Therefore the sons that were obtained by various methods by the ancient sages cannot he obtained by men now, on account of their being without that capacity.'

It is quoted in Nrsimhaprasāda (Vyavahāra, 38a); in Smrticandrikā (Samskāra, p. 226), which says that this prohibition is meant for the Kali-age; and in Viramitrodaya (Vyavahāra, 186a).
Brahmapurāṇa (Aparārka, p. 97).-'On the death of her husband, or on her having abandoned her husband, a woman may beget a son from a man of her own caste. If she is a child-widow, or has been forcibly abandoned by her husband, she shall go through the sacrament of marriage again, with any other man. But this remarriage of women, or the begetting of a son from the brother-in-law, or the freedom of women, should not be permitted during the Kali age; as during this age, men are inclined to be sinful.'
Apastamba (2.27.2-4).-'A husband shall not make over his wife, who occupies the position of a gentilis, to others (than to his gentiles), in order to cause children to be begotten for himself. For they declare that a bride is given to the family of her husband (and not to the husband alone). This is forbidden for the present age, on account of the incapacity of men's senses.'
In simple words in Kaliyug Men will be lusty this practice may be misused, In the 3 yugas sages had capacity to impregnent women even without having sexual intercourse but in kaliyug men are not capable to doing these

Refutation-

Hinduism also allows Bestiality i.e. sex with animals. As I already mentioned, Shiva had raped Agni whilst Agni was in the form of a bird which is a case of bestiality, let me quote that passage again, Brahma Purana, Gautami-Mahatmya 58.16-24 "At the instance of Devas the fire-god assumed the form of a parrot and went to the place where the lord of the worlds was sporting with Uma…The lord of Devas called the fire-god moving about in front of him, in the form of a bird and said, "O Agni, you have been recognised through various ways. Do not speak anything. Open your mouth. Take this in and carry it with you." After saying this lord Sambhu discharged a great deal of semen into the mouth of fire-god.

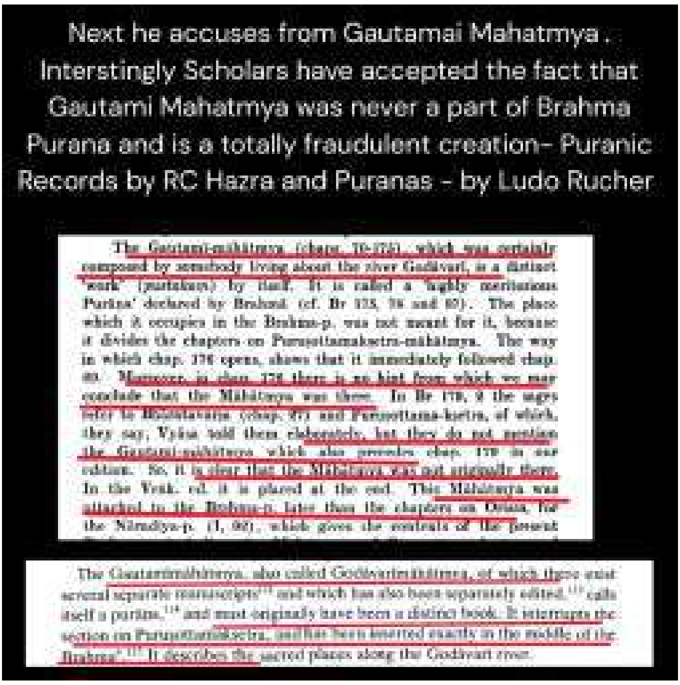
Refutation-

Next he accuses from Gautamai Mahatmya . Interstingly Scholars have accepted the fact that Gautami Mahatmya was never a part of Brahma Purana and is a totally fraudulent creation- Puranic Records by RC Hazra and Puranas – by Ludo Rucher



The Gautami-māhātmya (chaps. 70-175), which was certainly composed by somebody living about the river Godāvarī, is a distinct 'work' (purāṇa) by itself. It is called a 'highly meritorious Purāṇa' declared by Brahmā (cf. Br 175, 78 and 80). The place which it occupies in the Brahma-p. was not meant for it, because it divides the chapters on Puruṣottamakṣetra-māhātmya. The way in which chap. 176 opens, shows that it immediately followed chap. 69. Moreover, in chap. 178 there is no hint from which we may conclude that the Māhātmya was there. In Br 178, 9 the sages refer to Bhuktavarṇa (chap. 69) and Puruṣottama-kṣetra, of which, they say, Vyāsa told them elaborately, but they do not mention the Gautami-māhātmya which also precedes chap. 178 in our edition. So, it is clear that the Māhātmya was not originally there. In the Venk. ed. it is placed at the end. This Māhātmya was attached to the Brahma-p. later than the chapters on Orissa, for the Nāradīya-p. (1, 92), which gives the contents of the present

The Gautamīmāhātmya, also called Godāvarīmāhātmya, of which there exist several separate manuscripts[11] and which has also been separately edited,[11] calls itself a purāṇa,[11] and must originally have been a distinct book. It interrupts the section on Puruṣottamakṣetra, and has been inserted exactly in the middle of the Brahma".[11] It describes the sacred places along the Godāvarī river.

Shastras like the Mahabharata which is 5th Veda , Maheshwar Shiva is referred to as Urdhvareta Brahmachari, meaning that he has never wasted his Tejas– Mahabharat Anushashan chapter 17 Shiva Sahastranam

A passage from Mahabharata shows that a Rishi named Kindama used to have sex with other deer as he was uncomfortable having sex with humans, Mahabharata 1.118.5-38 “Vaisampayana said, ’O king, one day Pandu, while roaming about in the woods (on the southern slopes of the Himavat) that teemed with deer and wild animals of fierce disposition, saw a large deer, that seemed to be the leader of a herd, serving his mate. Beholding the animals, the monarch pierced them both with five of his sharp and swift arrows winged with golden feathers. O monarch, that was no deer that Pandu struck at, but a Rishi’s son of great ascetic merit who was enjoying his mate in the form of a deer. Pierced by Pandu, while engaged in the act of intercourse, he fell down to the ground, uttering cries that were of a man and began to weep bitterly…[Rishi in deer form said] The time of sexual intercourse is agreeable to every creature and productive of good to all. O king [Pandu], with this my mate I was engaged in the gratification of my sexual desire. But that effort of mine hath been rendered futile by thee…I am, O king [Pandu], a Muni who liveth on fruits and roots, though disguised as a deer…I was engaged in sexual intercourse with this deer, because my feelings of modesty did not permit me to indulge in such an act in human society. In the form of a deer I rove in the deep woods in the company of other deer. Thou hast slain me without knowing that I am a Brahmana, the sin of having slain a Brahmana shall not, therefore, be thine. But senseless man, as you have killed me, disguised as a deer, at such a time, thy fate shall certainly be even like mine.

As clearly stated in Slokas 7–8 of Mahabharata Adi Parva (Gita Press edition), Rishi Kindama and his wife had transformed themselves into a stag and a doe and were mating in deer form for the purpose of begetting progeny.

This does not fall under the definition of bestiality, which is sexual intercourse between a human and an animal. In this incident, both partners were originally human but had assumed animal forms; thus, it was intercourse between two beings of the same (transformed) species.

While they were in union, King Pandu shot arrows at the pair, fatally wounding them. Upon being struck, Rishi Kindama and his wife reverted to their human forms and, in their grief and anger, cursed King Pandu.

Synonyms of bestiality >

1 : sexual relations between a human being and a lower animal

In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Adhyāya 117, verses 7–8 describe a Rishi and his wife transformed into a deer and a doe, engaging in mating. Since they are humans in transformed forms, this act is not bestiality.

राजन् ! उस मृगके रूपमें एक महातेजस्वी तपोधन ऋषिपुत्र थे, जो अपनी मृगीरूपधारिणी पत्नीके साथ तेजस्वी मृग बनकर समागम कर रहे थे ।। ७ । वे उस मृगीसे सटे हुए ही मनुष्योंकी-सी बोली बोलते हुए क्षणभरमें पृथ्वीपर गिर पड़े। उनकी इन्द्रियाँ व्याकुल हो गयीं और वे विलाप करने लगे ।। ८ ।।

Verse 7:
O King! That deer was in fact a highly radiant sage's son, endowed with great spiritual power, who had assumed the form of a deer along with his wife, who had taken the form of a doe. They had transformed into these forms and were engaged in union.

Verse 8:
While still in union with the doe, the sage's son(in the form of a deer) , speaking in a human voice, suddenly fell to the ground. His senses were agitated, and he began to wail in distress.

स च राजन् महातेजा ऋषिपुत्रस्तपोधनः ।
भार्यया सह तेजस्वी मृगरूपेण संगतः ।। ७ ।।
राजन्! उस मृगके रूपमें एक महातेजस्वी तपोधन ऋषिपुत्र थे, जो अपनी मृगीरूपधारिणी पत्नीके साथ तेजस्वी मृग बनकर समागम कर रहे थे ।। ७ ।।
संसक्तश्च तया मृग्या मानुषीमीरयन् गिरम् ।
क्षणेन पतितो भूमौ विललापाकुलेन्द्रियः ।। ८ ।।
वे उस मृगीसे सटे हुए ही मनुष्योंकी-सी बोली बोलते हुए क्षणभरमें पृथ्वीपर गिर पड़े। उनकी इन्द्रियाँ व्याकुल हो गयीं और वे विलाप करने लगे ।। ८ ।।

Even Chatpgt says same thing in answer to this question regarding the same Story of Rishi Kindama

No, this is not bestiality.
Both the sage and his wife were humans who had consciously assumed animal forms through yogic or magical means. Their union was between two humans in animal form, not between species.

'Manu Smriti 10.72 "Since through their excellent energies (potency), seeds, cast in the wombs of beasts (by the holy sages), fructified in the shapes of human beings, who ecame honoured and commendable Rishis in life; the seed is commended (as of greater importance in an act of fecundation).”

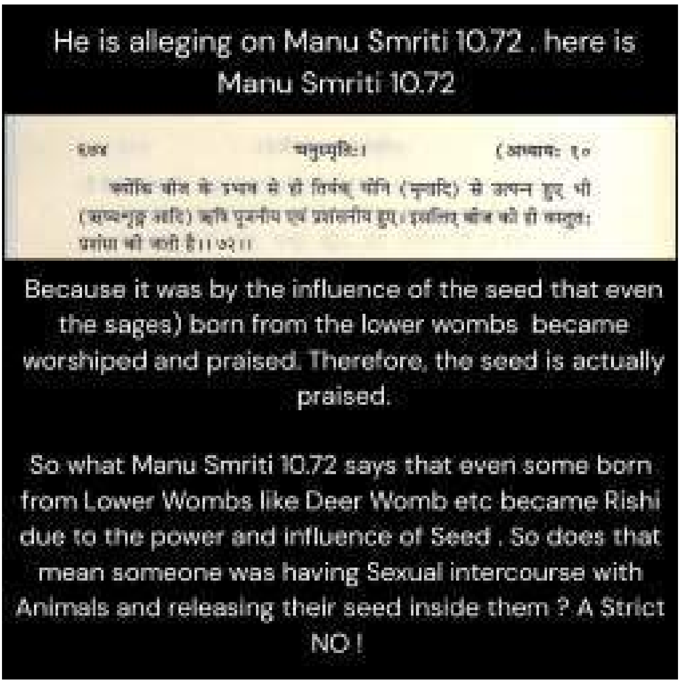
Refutation-

He is alleging on Manu Smriti 10.72 . here is Manu Smriti 10.72

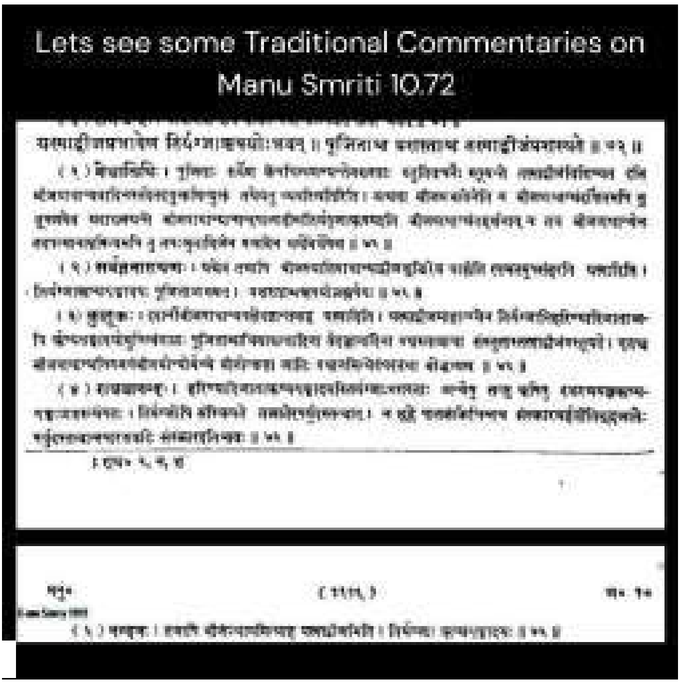
क्योंकि बीज के प्रभाव से ही तिर्यक् योनि (मृगादि) से उत्पन्न हुए भी (ऋष्यशृङ्ग आदि) ऋषि पूजनीय एवं प्रशंसनीय हुए। इसलिए बीज की ही वस्तुतः प्रशंसा की जाती है।। ७२

Because it was by the influence of the seed that even the sages) born from the lower wombs became worshiped and praised. Therefore, the seed is actually praised.

So what Manu Smriti 10.72 says that even some born from Lower Wombs like Deer Womb etc became Rishi due to the power and influence of Seed . So does that mean someone was having Sexual intercourse with Animals and releasing their seed inside them ? A Strict NO !



Lets see some Traditional Commentaries on Manu Smriti 10.72



Sarvagya Narayana Bhasya says – सर्वज्ञनारायणः । यद्येवं तथापि बीजस्यातिप्राधान्याद्बीजशुद्धिरेव ग्राह्येति स्वमतमुपसंहरति यस्मादिति । • तिर्यग्जाऋष्यश्वङ्गादयः पूजिताअभवन् । प्रशस्ताश्वऋषयोब्रह्मर्षयः ॥ ७२ ॥Even if that is so (i.e., even if tapas, śruta, etc., are important), still, due to the extreme importance given to seed (lineage), only purity of lineage (bīja-śuddhi) is to be accepted — thus is concluded by some, beginning with the phrase 'yasmat' (because). Beings such as Ṛṣyaśṛṅga and others, though born of non-human (animal) origin (tiryak-jā), were indeed respected. Similarly, respected and praised sages like the Brahmarṣis were born from pure lineage

Kulluka Bhatta bhasya says – कुल्लूकः । इदानींबीजशथान्यपक्षेदृष्टान्तमाह यस्मादिति । यस्माद्बीजमाहात्म्येन तिर्यग्जातिहरिण्यादिजाता-पि ऋष्यश्वादयोमुनित्वंप्राप्ताः पूजिताश्वाभिवाद्यत्वादिना वेदज्ञानादिना प्रशस्तावाचा संस्तुतास्तस्माद्बीजंप्रस्तूयते । एतच्च बीजप्राधान्यनिगमनं बीजयोन्योर्मध्ये बीजोत्कृष्टा जातिः प्रधानमित्येवंपरतया बोद्धव्यम् ॥ ७२ ॥ Now, in support of the doctrine that seed (lineage) is primary, an illustrative example is provided, beginning with 'yasmat' (because): Because, due to the greatness of the bīja (seed/lineage), even beings born from non-human species such as a deer (hariṇī), like Ṛṣyaśṛṅga and others, attained the status of sages (munitva), and were worshipped, honored with salutations, praised with refined speech, and possessed knowledge of the Vedas. Therefore, the seed is emphasized. This is the conclusion in favor of the primacy of bīja. Among bīja (seed) and yoni (womb), the bīja is considered superior, and thus the jāti (birth/class) is regarded as the chief factor — this is the intended meaning."

Raghavanda Bhasya says – राघवानन्दः । हरिण्यादिजाता ऋष्यश्वादयस्तिर्यग्जाः प्रशस्ताः अन्येषु सत्सु ऋषिषु दशरथयऋष्य-शृङ्गःप्राशस्त्यंगतः । तिर्यग्जोपि संस्क्रियते तज्जातेरपर्युदस्तत्वात् । न शुद्रे पातकंकिंचिन्नच संस्कारमर्हतीतिशुदजातेः पर्युदस्तत्वान्नपारशवादेः संस्कारइतिभावः ॥ ७२ Ṛṣyaśṛṅga and others, though born from a deer and hence of non-human origin (tiryak-jāti), were nonetheless revered sages. Among other noble sages, even Ṛṣyaśṛṅga, the son of Daśaratha, attained prominence and respect. Thus, even one born of non-human origin can undergo sanctification (saṁskāra), because such a birth is not excluded from eligibility (aparyudasta). On the other hand, a Śūdra, even though human, is considered to fall under sin (pātaka) and is therefore not eligible for saṁskāra. Hence, due to the exclusion of the Śūdra's birth from scriptural eligibility, saṁskāras like the Vedic upanayana are not performed for them."

Sarvagya Narayana Bhasya says – सर्वज्ञनारायणः । यद्येवं तथापि बीजस्यातिप्राधान्याद्बीजशुद्धिरेव ग्राह्येति स्वमतमुपसंहरति यस्मादिति । • तिर्यग्जाऋष्यश्रृङ्गादयः पूजिताअभवन् । प्रशस्ताश्चऋषयोब्रह्मर्षयः ॥ ७२ ॥

Even if that is so (i.e., even if tapas, śruta, etc., are important), still, due to the extreme importance given to seed (lineage), only purity of lineage (bīja-śuddhi) is to be accepted — thus is concluded by some, beginning with the phrase 'yasmat' (because). Traditional Acharyas like Raghvananda , Kulluka Bhatta and Sarvagya Narayana had quoted the example of Rishi Ṛṣyaśṛṅga explaining Manu 10.72 and the importance of Seed . So we shall see the story of Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to understand Manu 10.72

Traditional Acharyas like Raghvananda , Kulluka Bhatta and Sarvagya Narayana had quoted the example of Rishi

Ṛṣyaśṛṅga explaining Manu 10.72 and the importance of Seed .

According to the Mahabharata, Vibhandaka, a renowned sage and a son of Kashyapa, travels in Mahahrada, when he sees Urvashi, the most beautiful apsara (nymph). Aroused, he emits his seed, which fell into the river. A doe, who is a cursed apsara, swallows it and becomes pregnant due to the sage's miraculous powers. After she gives birth to a boy, she is liberated from the curse and returns to heaven. The boy is born with horns and because of which, he is named Rishyasringa. Vibhandaka decides to raise him isolated from society. Rishyasringa grows up in his father's ashram in the forest, unaware of existence of any female. He practices brahmacharya and acquires magical and miraculous powers due to his chastity

राजन्! एक दिन जब वे जलमें स्नान कर रहे थे, उर्वशी अप्सराको देखकर उनका वीर्य स्खलित हो गया। उसी समय प्याससे व्याकल हई एक मगी वहाँ आयी और पानीके साथ उस वीर्यको भी पी गयी। इससे उसके गर्भ रह गया। वह पूर्वजन्ममें एक देवकन्या थी। लोकस्रष्टा भगवान् ब्रह्माने उसे यह वचन दिया था कि तू मृगी होकर एक मुनिको जन्म देनेके पश्चात उस योनिसे मुक्त हो जायगी। ब्रह्माजीकी वाणी अमोघ है और दैवके विधानको कोई टाल नहीं सकता, इसलिये विभाण्डकके पुत्र महर्षि ऋष्यशृंगका जन्म मृगीके ही पेटसे हुआ। वे सदा तपस्यामें संलग्न रहकर वनमें ही निवास करते थे ।। ३५-३८ ।।

O King! One day when Rishi Vibhandaka was bathing in water, he saw Urvashi Apsara and his semen got discharged. At that time a deer, driven by thirst, came there and drank the semen along with the water. Due to this she became pregnant. She was a celestial maiden in her previous birth. The creator of the world, Lord Brahma had promised her that she would be freed from that birth after becoming a deer and giving birth to a sage. Brahma's words are infallible and no one can avert the law of the gods, that is why Vibhandak's son Maharishi Rishyashringa was born from the womb of a deer. He always lived in the forest, being engaged in penance. 35-38.

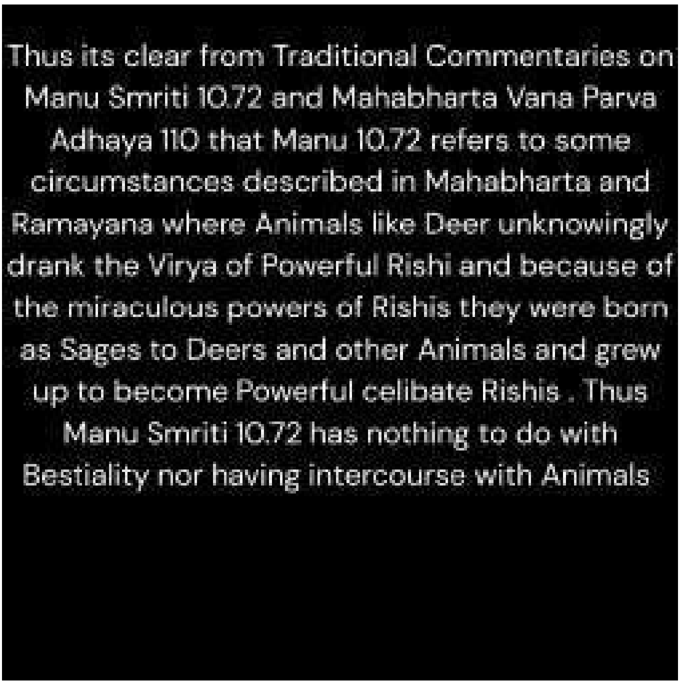
Thus its clear from Traditional Commentaries on Manu Smriti 10.72 and Mahabharta Vana Parva Adhaya 110 that Manu 10.72 refers to some circumstances described in Mahabharta and Ramayana where Animals like Deer unknowingly drank the Virya of Powerful Rishi and because of the miraculous powers of Rishis they were born as Sages to Deers and other Animals and grew up to become Powerful celibate Rishis . Thus Manu Smriti 10.72 has nothing to do with Bestiality nor having intercourse with Animals



Allegations-

Ved Vyasa was attracted to Apsara Ghritachi even after she had assumed the form of a parrot, Narada Purana II.58.18-25 "After having obtained that excellent boon from the Lord, Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, was one day engaged in churning the sacrificial sticks, with the desire of making a fire (for sacrificial purpose). At that time, the illustrious sage happened to see a heavenly damsel called Ghrtaci who, in consequence of her brilliant splendour, possessed excellent beauty. Seeing that celestial damsel, in that forest, the great sage Vyasa became instantly passionately enamoured of her. After making Vyasa deeply agitated with passion, the most beautiful Ghrtaci, transforming herself into a she-parrot, approached him. Even after seeing the celestial lady disguised in another form, he was overcome with cupid (passionate love) who spread in every part of his body...Due to the inevitablity of Destiny (lit.what was to happen) the heart of the sage was fascinated by the (beautiful) form (of Ghrtaci).

Refutation-

If one reads Narada Purana Purva, Book II, Chapter 58 in full, the context becomes clear and the allegation collapses. The chapter narrates that Vyāsa Deva undertook an intense and prolonged penance on Mount Meru to please Mahādeva, with the desire to be blessed with a son of extraordinary power and fame. Despite extreme hardships, Vyāsa steadfastly maintained his austerities and yoga practice until Mahādeva, moved by his devotion, granted him the boon: a son whose brilliance would be celebrated across the three worlds. Later, as destiny ordained under that very boon, Vyāsa was churning sacrificial sticks (araṇi) when the apsarā Ghṛtācī appeared before him in her celestial beauty. Overcome by the divine māyā that was part of the boon's fulfilment—not through any voluntary lapse—Vyāsa's seed fell onto the sacrificial sticks, from which his son Śuka (also called Sūta in some accounts) was miraculously born. There was no physical union, no act with an animal, and no moral breach—only the unfolding of a divine birth exactly as foreordained by Mahādeva's blessing.

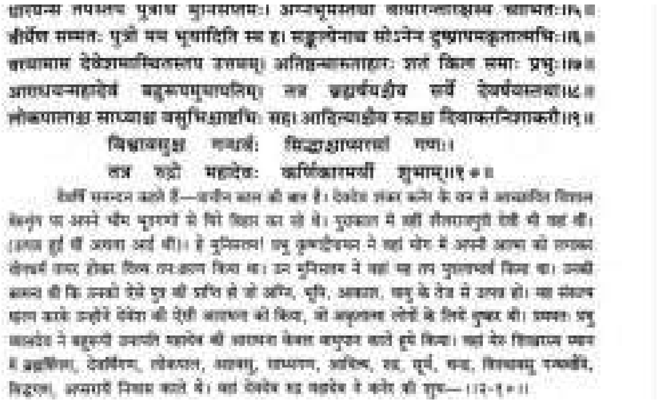
Narada Purana 2.58 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications

देवर्षि सनन्दन कहते हैं- प्राचीन काल की बात है। देवदेव शंकर कनेर के वन से आच्छादित विशाल मेरुशृंग पर अपने भौम भूतगणों से घिरे विहार कर रहे थे। पुराकाल में वहीं शैलराजपुत्री देवी भी वहां थीं। (उत्पन्न हुई थीं अथवा आई थीं)। हे मुनिसत्तम! प्रभु कृष्णद्वैपायन ने वहां योग में अपनी आत्मा को लगाकर योगधर्म तत्पर होकर दिव्य तपःश्चरण किया था। उन मुनिसत्तम ने वहां यह तप पुत्रलाभार्थ किया था। उनकी कामना थी कि उनको ऐसे पुत्र की प्राप्ति हो जो अग्नि, भूमि, आकाश, वायु के तेज से उत्पन्न हो। यह संकल्प धारण करके उन्होंने देवेश की ऐसी आराधना को किया, जो अकृतात्मा लोगों के लिये दुष्कर थी। प्रथमतः प्रभु व्यासदेव ने बहुरूपी उमापति महादेव की आराधना केवल वायुपान करते हुये किया। वहां मेरु शिखरस्थ स्थान में ब्रह्मर्षिगण, देवर्षिगण, लोकपाल, अष्टवसु, साध्यगण, आदित्य, रुद्र, सूर्य, चन्द्र, विश्वावसु गन्धर्वादि, सिद्धगण, अप्सरायें निवास करते थे। वहां देवदेव रुद्र महादेव ने कनेर की शुभ- ।।२-१०।।

Devarṣi Sanandana said)
In ancient times, Lord of the Devas, Mahadeva Shankara, was sporting upon the lofty peak of Mount Meru, which was covered with oleander groves, surrounded by His earthly attendants, the Bhūtaganas. In those primeval days, the daughter of the King of Mountains (Pārvatī Devī) was also present there (either born there or having arrived there). O foremost of sages! At that very place, Lord Krishna Dvaipāyana (Veda Vyāsa), absorbed in yoga, engaged himself in deep austerities for the purpose of obtaining a son. His wish was to have a son who would be endowed with the brilliance of fire, earth, sky, and wind. With this resolve, he worshipped the Lord of the Devas in a manner that is most difficult for those of undisciplined mind to perform. At first, Vyāsa worshipped the many-formed Umāpati Mahādeva subsisting only on air. On that peak of Meru resided the Brahmarṣis, Devarṣis, the Lokapālas, the eight Vasus, the Sādhyas, the Ādityas, the Rudras, the Sun, the Moon, the Gandharva Viśvāvasu and others, Siddhas, and Apsarās. There, Lord Rudra Mahādeva, adorned with a garland of auspicious oleander flowers, shone like the autumn full moon. In that divine and delightful forest, filled with the Lord and the Devarṣis, Vyāsa, endowed with supreme yoga, continued his worship for the sake of obtaining a son. During this period of austerity, his complexion did not become pale, nor did he feel any weariness. This was a wondrous event for the entire three worlds. Instead of fatigue or weakness, his matted locks blazed like tongues of fire, radiating the splendour of his great penance. O Nārada! By such austerity and devotion, Umāpati Maheśvara became exceedingly pleased and prepared to grant him a boon. Then Lord Tryambaka, smiling, spoke to Vyāsa. ।।2–10।।

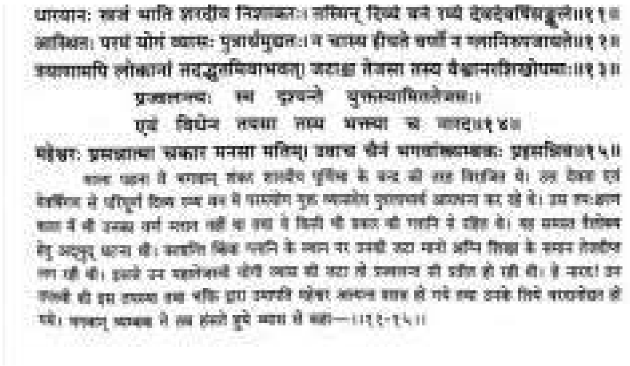


माला पहना वे भगवान् शंकर शारदीय पूर्णिमा के चन्द्र की तरह विराजित थे। उस देवता एवं देवर्षिगण से परिपूर्ण दिव्य रम्य वन में परमयोग युक्त व्यासदेव पुत्रलाभार्थ आराधना कर रहे थे। उस तपःश्चरण काल में भी उनका वर्ण म्लान नहीं था तथा वे किसी भी प्रकार की ग्लानि से रहित थे। यह समस्त त्रैलोक्य हेतु अद्भुद् घटना थी। क्लान्ति किंवा ग्लानि के स्थान पर उनकी जटा मानो अग्नि शिखा के समान तेजदीप्त लग रही थी। इससे उन महातेजस्वी योगी व्यास की जटा तो प्रज्वलन्त सी प्रतीत हो रही थी। हे नारद ! उन तपस्वी की इस तपस्या तथा भक्ति द्वारा उमापति महेश्वर अत्यन्त प्रसन्न हो गये तथा उनके लिये वरदानोद्यत हो गये। भगवान् त्र्यम्बक ने तब हंसते हुये व्यास से कहा- ।।११-१५।।

Wearing a garland, Lord Shankara shone like the moon of the Sharad Purnima. In that divine and delightful forest, filled with that deity and the Devarṣis, the supremely yogic Vyāsadeva was engaged in worship for the purpose of obtaining a son.

Even during that period of austerity, his complexion did not fade, nor was he afflicted by any weariness. This was a marvellous event for the entire three worlds. Instead of fatigue or weakness, his matted locks appeared to glow like tongues of fire, making the great and radiant yogi Vyāsa's hair seem ablaze.

O Nārada! By that austerity and devotion, Umāpati Maheśvara became exceedingly pleased and prepared to grant him a boon. Then Lord Tryambaka, smiling, spoke to Vyāsa. ।।11–15।।

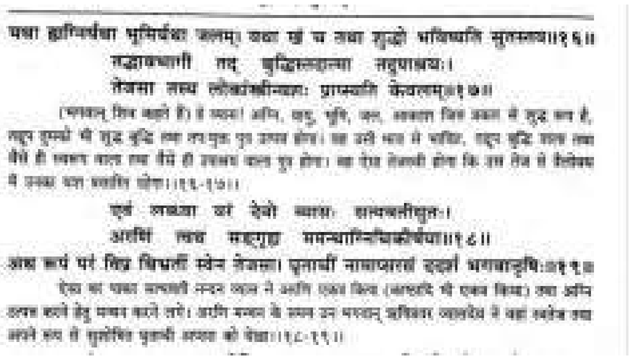


(भगवान् शिव कहते हैं) हे व्यास! अग्नि, वायु, भूमि, जल, आकाश जिस प्रकार से शुद्ध रूप है, तद्रूप तुमको भी शुद्ध बुद्धि तथा तपःयुक्त पुत्र उत्पन्न होगा। वह उसी भाव से भावित, तद्रूप बुद्धि वाला तथा वैसे ही स्वरूप वाला तथा वैसे ही उपाश्रय वाला पुत्र होगा। वह ऐसा तेजस्वी होगा कि उस तेज से त्रैलोक्य में उनका यश प्रसारित रहेगा।।१६-१७।।

ऐसा वर पाकर सत्यवती नन्दन व्यास ने अरणि एकत्र किया (काष्ठादि भी एकत्र किया) तथा अग्नि उत्पन्न करने हेतु मन्थन करने लगे। अरणि मन्थन के समय उन भगवान् ऋषिप्रवर व्यासदेव ने वहां स्वतेज तथा अपने रूप से सुशोभित घृताची अप्सरा को देखा।।१८-१९।।

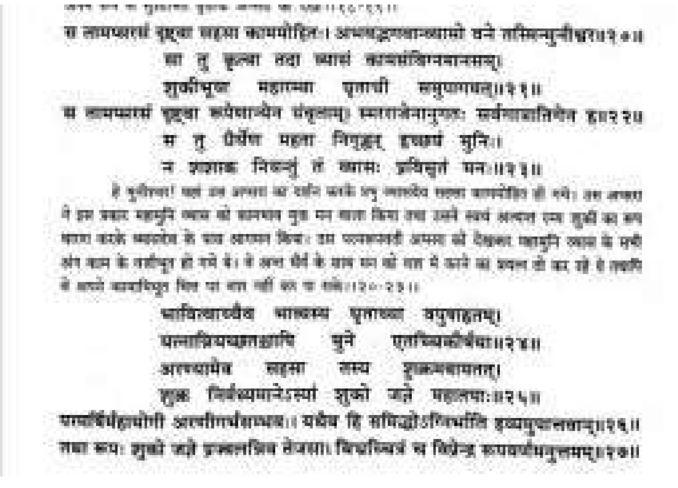
"O Vyāsa! Just as fire, air, earth, water, and space are pure in nature, in the same way you shall have a son who will be endowed with pure intellect and ascetic power. He will be of the same nature, the same intellect, the same form, and the same refuge as yourself. His brilliance will spread your fame throughout the three worlds." ।।16–17।।

Receiving this boon, Satyavatī's son Vyāsa gathered the araṇi sticks (and other materials) and began to churn them to produce fire. During this churning of the araṇi, the illustrious sage Vyāsa beheld the celestial apsarā Ghṛtācī, resplendent with her own beauty and radiance. ।।18–19।।



हे मुनीश्वर! वहां उस अप्सरा का दर्शन करके प्रभु व्यासदेव सहसा काममोहित हो गये। उस अप्सरा ने इस प्रकार महामुनि व्यास को कामभाव युक्त मन वाला किया तथा उसने स्वयं अत्यन्त रम्य शुकी का रूप धारण करके व्यासदेव के पास आगमन किया। उस परमरूपवती अप्सरा को देखकर महामुनि व्यास के सभी अंग काम के वशीभूत हो गये थे। वे अन्त धैर्य के साथ मन को वश में करने का प्रयत्न तो कर रहे थे तथापि वे अपने कामाभिभूत चित्त पर वश नहीं कर पा सके।।२०-२३।।

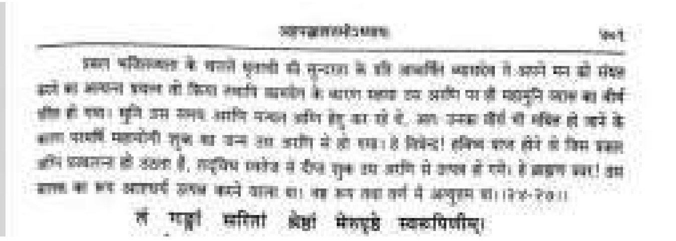
O foremost of sages! Seeing that apsarā, Lord Vyāsa was suddenly overcome with desire. That apsarā, thus arousing desire in the great sage, assumed the exceedingly beautiful form of a female parrot (śuki) and approached Vyāsa. Beholding her supreme beauty, all the limbs of the great sage Vyāsa became subject to passion. Though he tried with utmost patience to control his mind, he was unable to master his desire-filled heart. ।।20–23।।



प्रबल भवितव्यता के चलते घृताची की सुन्दरता के प्रति आकर्षित व्यासदेव ने अपने मन को संयत करने का अत्यन्त प्रयत्न तो किया तथापि कामवेग के कारण सहसा उस अरणि पर ही महामुनि व्यास का वीर्य पतित हो गया। मुनि उस समय अरणि मन्थन अग्नि हेतु कर रहे थे, अतः उनका वीर्य भी मथित हो जाने के कारण परमर्षि महायोगी शुक का जन्म उस अरणि से हो गया। हे विप्रेन्द्र ! हविष्य प्राप्त होने से जिस प्रकार अग्नि प्रज्वलन्त हो उठता है, तद्विध स्वतेज से दीप्त शुक उस अरणि से उत्पन्न हो गये। हे ब्राह्मण प्रवर ! उस बालक का रूप आश्चर्य उत्पन्न करने वाला था। वह रूप तथा वर्ण में अत्युत्तम था।।२४-२७।।

Due to the force of destiny, although Vyāsadeva was deeply attracted to Ghṛtācī's beauty and made the utmost effort to restrain his mind, the surge of passion suddenly caused his seed to be discharged right there upon the araṇi. At that time, the sage was churning the araṇi to produce fire, and because his seed too was churned in the process, the great ṛṣi and supreme yogi Śuka was born from that araṇi.

O foremost of Brāhmaṇas! Just as fire blazes forth upon receiving the offering (haviṣ), in the same way the self-radiant Śuka, glowing with his own brilliance, emerged from that araṇi. O best of Brāhmaṇas! The form of that boy was astonishing—most excellent in both form and complexion. ।। 24–27।।



उस समय यह स्थावर-जंगममय संसार शुकदेव के जन्म की घटना के कारण आनन्दाप्लुत हो गया था। महातेजस्वी महात्मा शंभु भी महाद्युति देवी के साथ प्रसन्न होकर वहां आ गये। हे मुनिवर ! उन्होंने स्वयं सद्यः उत्पन्न शुक का उपनयन कराया। देवराज इन्द्र ने उस बालक शुक को परमदिव्य अद्भुत दर्शन कमंडलु

At that moment, the entire world of moving and unmoving beings was filled with joy at the event of Śukadeva's birth. The great and radiant Mahātmā Śaṁbhu, along with the resplendent Goddess, came there in delight.

O great sage! He Himself performed the sacred thread ceremony (upanayana) of the newly-born Śuka. The King of the Devas, Indra, presented that boy Śuka with a supremely divine and wondrous water pot (darśana kamaṇḍalu).

"Although the context of the Nārada Purāṇa (2.58) itself makes the story of Śukadeva's birth clear, let us also consider the explanation of Paṇḍit Madhvācārya Śāstrī on this episode, as given in Purāṇa Digdarśana (p. 691/788)."

समाधान उक्त कथा में भी व्यास जी के अमोघवीर्य की ही महिमा लक्षित होती है । जब कि तप के प्रभाव से रजोवीर्य के त्रिना भी मानसी सन्तान का उत्पन्न हो जाना नेदादि शास्त्रों में लिखा है, तब स्थूल शरीर की कारण सामग्री से परिपूरित अमोध वीर्य के द्वारा पुत्र का उत्पन्न हो जाना किसी प्रकार भी असम्भव नहीं कहा जा सकता। मानसी किंवा तापसी सृष्टि का वर्णन वेदों में डंके की चोट किया है, यथा– (क) मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत् । (अथर्व १६ । ५२ । १) (ख) श्रद्धाया दुहिता तपसोऽधिजाता स्वसा ऋषीणां भूतकृतां बभूव । (अथर्व ६ । १३३।४) अर्थात् (क) सृष्टि के आरम्भ में 'मनसो रेतः' ही था। (ख) श्रद्धा की पुत्री तप से उत्पन्न हुई थी, सूत्रधार ऋषियों को बहिन लगती थी। मानसिक वीर्य जो कि सृष्टि के इसलिए ग्रास जी ने अपने अमोघवीर्यगत एक विशिष्ट कीटाणु को पूर्वप्रशित पद्धति के

अनुसार परिपुष्ट करके पुत्ररूप में परिणत कर लिया तो इसमें आश्चर्य की क्या बात हुई ?

Even in the cited narrative, the glory of Vyāsa Ji's infallible virility (amogha-vīrya) is clearly evident. The scriptures, including the Vedas and allied texts, affirm that through the power of austerity (tapas), even the subtlest reproductive essence (rajo-vīrya) can give rise to mental progeny (mānasa santāna). Therefore, the birth of a son through the fully potent, materially enriched amogha-vīrya cannot be deemed impossible by any means. The concept of mental or ascetic creation (mānasa or tāpasī sṛṣṭi) is boldly proclaimed in the Vedas, as seen in the following verses: (a) "The first seed of creation was born of the mind." — Atharva Veda 16.52.1 (b) "The daughter of Faith (śraddhā) was born of austerity; she became the sister of the sages, the creators of beings." — Atharva Veda 6.133.4

Thus, in the beginning, creation emerged from the mental seed (manaso retaḥ). The daughter of Faith, born of tapas, was considered the sister of the founding sages. Therefore, when Vyāsa Ji, through his amogha-vīrya, cultivated a specific germ using the method of pre-infusion (pūrvapraśita paddhati) and transformed it into a son, what is there to be surprised about?

समाधान

उक्त कथा से भी व्यास जी के अमोघवीर्य की ही महिमा लक्षित होती है। जब कि तप के प्रभाव से रजोवीर्य के बिना भी मानसी सन्तान का उत्पन्न हो जाना वेदादि शास्त्रों में लिखा है, तब स्थूल शरीर की कारण सामग्री से परिपुष्ट अमोघ वीर्य के द्वारा पुत्र का उत्पन्न हो जाना किसी प्रकार भी असम्भव नहीं कहा जा सकता। मानसी किंवा तापसी सृष्टि का वर्णन वेदों में डंके की चोट किया है, यथा—

(क) मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत्। (अथर्व १६।५२।१)

(ख) श्रद्धाया दुहिता तपसोऽधिजाता स्वसा ऋषीणां भूतकृतां बभूव। (अथर्व ६।१३३।४)

अर्थात्—(क) सृष्टि के आरम्भ में 'मनसो रेतः'—मानसिक वीर्य ही था। (ख) श्रद्धा की पुत्री तप से उत्पन्न हुई थी, जो कि सृष्टि के सूत्रधार ऋषियों की बहिन लगती थी।

इसलिए व्यास जी ने अपने अमोघवीर्य से एक विशिष्ट कीटाणु को पूर्वप्रश्रित पद्धति के अनुसार परिपुष्ट करके पुत्ररूप में परिणत कर लिया तो इसमें आश्चर्य की क्या बात हुई ?

A demon named Rambha was a devotee of the fire god Agni. Not to confuse this demon Rambha as the Apsara named Rambha. He was desirous of having progeny. Agni accepted his prayer and said that he should immediately copulate with any specie and he will get a progeny.

Srimad Devi Bhagavatam 5.2.27-31 "…Vyasa said :– O king! Hearing thus the sweet words of Fire, Rambha quitted the hold of his hairs and said :– O Lord of the Devas! If thou art pleased, grant my desired boon that a son be born unto me, who will destroy the forces of my enemy and who will conquer the three worlds. And that son be invincible in every way by the Devas, Danavas and men, very powerful, assuming forms at will, and respected by all. The Fire said :– O highly Fortunate! You will get your son, as you desire; therefore desist now from your attempting suicide. O highly fortunate Rambha! With any female of whichever species, you will co-habit, you will get a son, more powerful than you; there is no doubt in this. Vyasa said :– O king! Hearing thus the sweet words of the Fire as desired, Rambha, the chief of the Danavas, went, surrounded by Yaksas, to a beautiful place, adorned with picturesque sceneries; when one lovely she-buffalo, who was very maddened with passion, fell to the sight of Rambha. And he desired to have sexual intercourse with her, in preference to other women. The she-buffallo, too, gladly yielded to his purpose and Rambha had sexual intercourse with her, impelled as it were by the destiny. The she-buffalo became pregnant with his semen virile…"

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmad-bhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sat (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and there wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars, and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

Allegations-

There's a story in Vishnu Purana about King Satadhanu who had taken birth as a dog due to committing the 'sin' of speaking with an infidel. His wife after taking rebirth as the daughter of Kasi recognized her husband and married him while he was still a dog, Vishnu Purana 3.18.64-67 "With the eye of divine intelligence she knew that her own husband had been regenerate as a dog, and going once to the city of Vaidiśá she saw the dog, and recognised her former lord in him. Knowing that the animal was her husband, she placed upon his neck the bridal garland, accompanying it with the marriage rites and prayers…"

Refutation-

In the Vishnu Purana Amsa 3 Adhaya 18 Geeta Press Gorakhpur , there is no indication that Shaivya married a dog. Upon recognising her husband reborn as a dog, she simply treated him with respect, offered him food, and reminded him of the actions that led to his fall. The narrative then recounts his successive births as a dog, jackal, wolf, vulture, crow, and peacock, with Shaivya meeting him in each life and reminding him of his true identity. Only after he regained human form did their marriage take place, making the claim of a "dog marriage" unsupported by the source.

सुना जाता है, पूर्वकालमें पृथिवीतलपर शतधनु नामसे विख्यात एक राजा था। उसकी पत्नी शैव्या अत्यन्त धर्मपरायणा थी ॥ ५३ ॥ वह महाभागा पतिव्रता, सत्य, शौच और दयासे युक्त तथा विनय और नीति आदि सम्पूर्ण सुलक्षणोंसे सम्पन्ना थी ॥ ५४॥ उस महारानीके साथ राजा शतधनुने परम समाधिद्वारा सर्वव्यापक, देवदेव श्रीजनार्दनकी आराधना की ॥ ५५॥ वे प्रतिदिन तन्मय होकर अनन्यभावसे होम, जप, दान, उपवास और पूजन आदिद्वारा भगवान्‌की भक्तिपूर्वक आराधना करने लगे ॥ ५६ ॥ हे द्विज! एक दिन कार्तिकी पूर्णिमाको उपवास कर उन दोनों पति-पत्नियोंने श्रीगंगाजीमें एक साथ ही स्नान करनेके अनन्तर बाहर आनेपर एक पाखण्डीको सामने आता देखा ॥ ५७॥ यह ब्राह्मण इस महात्मा राजाके धनुर्वेदाचार्यका मित्र था; अतः आचार्यके गौरववश राजाने भी उससे मित्रवत् व्यवहार किया ॥ ५८ ॥ किन्तु उसकी पतिव्रता पत्नीने उसका कुछ

भी आदर नहीं किया; वह मौन रही और यह सोचकर कि मैं उपोषिता (उपवासयुक्त) हूँ उसे देखकर सूर्यका दर्शन किया ॥ ५९ ॥ हे द्विजोत्तम! फिर उन स्त्री-पुरुषोंने यथारीति आकर भगवान् विष्णुके पूजा आदिक सम्पूर्ण कर्म विधिपूर्वक किये ॥ ६० ॥ राजा शतधनुने उपवास-अवस्थामें पाखण्डीसे वार्तालाप किया था। अतः उस पापके कारण उसने कुत्तेका जन्म लिया ॥ ६२ ॥ तथा वह शुभलक्षणा काशीनरेशकी कन्या हुई, जो सब प्रकारके विज्ञानसे युक्त, सर्वलक्षणसम्पन्ना और जातिस्मरा (पूर्वजन्मका वृत्तान्त जाननेवाली) थी ॥ ६३ ॥ राजाने उसे किसी वरको देनेकी इच्छा की, किन्तु उस सुन्दरीके ही रोक देनेपर वह उसके विवाहादिसे उपरत हो गये ॥ ६४॥

तब उसने दिव्य दृष्टिसे अपने पतिको श्वान हुआ जान विदिशा नामक नगरमें जाकर उसे वहाँ कुत्तेकी अवस्थामें देखा ॥ ६५ ॥ अपने महाभाग पतिको श्वानरूपमें देखकर उस सुन्दरीने उसे सत्कारपूर्वक अति उत्तम भोजन कराया ॥ ६६ ॥ उसके दिये हुए उस अति मधुर और इच्छित अन्नको खाकर वह अपनी जातिके अनुकूल नाना प्रकारकी चाटुता प्रदर्शित करने लगा ॥ ६७ ॥ उसके चाटुता करनेसे अत्यन्त संकुचित हो उस बालिकाने कुत्सित योनिमें उत्पन्न हुए उस अपने प्रियतमको प्रणाम कर उससे इस प्रकार कहा- ॥ ६८ ॥ "महाराज ! आप अपनी उस उदारताका स्मरण कीजिये जिसके कारण आज आप श्वान-योनिको प्राप्त होकर मेरे चाटुकार हुए हैं॥ ६९ ॥ हे प्रभो! क्या आपको यह स्मरण नहीं है कि तीर्थस्नानके अनन्तर पाखण्डीसे वार्तालाप करनेके कारण ही आपको यह कुत्सित योनि मिली है?" ॥ ७० ॥

श्रीपराशरजी बोले- काशिराजसुताद्वारा इस प्रकार स्मरण कराये जानेपर उसने बहुत देरतक अपने पूर्वजन्मका चिन्तन किया। तब उसे अति दुर्लभ निर्वेद प्राप्त हुआ ॥ ७१ ॥ उसने अति उदास चित्तसे नगरके बाहर आ प्राण त्याग दिये और फिर शृगाल-योनिमें जन्म लिया ॥ ७२ ॥ तब काशिराजकन्या दिव्य दृष्टिसे उसे दूसरे जन्ममें शृगाल हुआ जान उसे देखनेके लिये कोलाहल पर्वतपर गयी ॥ ७३ ॥ वहाँ भी अपने पतिको शृगाल-योनिमें उत्पन्न हुआ देख वह सुन्दरी राजकन्या उससे बोली- ॥ ७४ ॥ " हे राजेन्द्र ! श्वान-योनिमें जन्म लेनेपर मैंने आपसे जो पाखण्डीसे वार्तालापविषयक पूर्वजन्मका वृत्तान्त कहा था क्या वह आपको स्मरण है?" ॥ ७५ ॥ तब सत्यनिष्ठोंमें श्रेष्ठ राजा शतधनुने उसके इस प्रकार कहनेपर सारा सत्य वृत्तान्त जानकर निराहार रह वनमें अपना शरीर छोड़ दिया ॥ ७६ ॥ फिर वह एक भेड़िया हुआ; उस समय भी अनिन्दिता राजकन्याने उस निर्जन वनमें जाकर अपने पतिको उसके पूर्वजन्मका वृत्तान्त स्मरण कराया ॥ ७७ ॥ [उसने कहा- "हे महाभाग ! तुम भेड़िया नहीं हो, तुम राजा शतधनु हो। तुम [अपने पूर्वजन्मोंमें] क्रमशः कुक्कुर और शृगाल होकर अब भेड़िया हुए हो" ॥ ७८ ॥ इस प्रकार उसके स्मरण करानेपर राजाने जब भेड़ियेके शरीरको छोड़ा तो गृध्र-योनिमें जन्म लिया। उस समय भी उसकी निष्पाप भार्याने उसे फिर बोध कराया ॥ ७९ ॥ 'हे नरेन्द्र ! तुम अपने स्वरूपका स्मरण करो; इन गृध्र-चेष्टाओंको छोड़ो। पाखण्डीके साथ वार्तालाप करनेके दोषसे ही तुम गृध्र हुए हो' ॥ ८० ॥

योनिमें भी पूर्वजन्मका स्मरण कराये जानेपर राजाने अपने फिर दूसरे जन्ममें काक-योनिको प्राप्त होनेपर भी अपने पतिको योगबलसे पाकर उस सुन्दरीने कहा- ॥ ८१ ॥ "हे प्रभो! जिनके वशीभूत होकर सम्पूर्ण सामन्तगण नाना प्रकारकी वस्तुएँ भेंट करते थे वही आप आज काक-योनिको प्राप्त होकर बलिभोजी हुए हैं"॥ ८२ ॥ इसी प्रकार काक-प्राण छोड़ दिये और फिर मयूर-योनिमें जन्म लिया ॥ ८३ ॥

महायज्ञका अनुष्ठान किया; उस यज्ञमें अवभृथ-स्नानके मयूरावस्थामें भी काशिराजकी कन्या उसे क्षण-क्षणमें अति सुन्दर मयूरोचित आहार देती हुई उसकी टहल करने लगी ॥ ८४ ॥ उस समय राजा जनकने अश्वमेध नामक समय उस मयूरको स्नान कराया ॥ ८५ ॥ तब उस सुन्दरीने स्वयं भी स्नान कर राजाको यह स्मरण कराया कि किस प्रकार उसने श्वान और शृगाल आदि योनियाँ ग्रहण की थीं ॥ ८६ ॥ अपनी जन्म-परम्पराका स्मरण होनेपर उसने ही पुत्ररूपसे जन्म लिया ॥ ८७ ॥ अपना शरीर त्याग दिया और फिर महात्मा जनकजीके यहाँ

तब उस सुन्दरीने अपने पिताको विवाहके लिये प्रेरित किया। उसकी प्रेरणासे राजाने उसके स्वयंवरका आयोजन किया ॥ ८८ ॥ स्वयंवर होनेपर उस राजकन्याने स्वयंवरमें आये हुए अपने उस पतिको फिर पतिभावसे वरण कर लिया ॥ ८९ ॥ उस राजकुमारने काशिराजसुताके साथ नाना प्रकारके भोग भोगे और फिर पिताके परलोकवासी होनेपर विदेहनगरका राज्य किया ॥ ९० ॥ उसने बहुत-से यज्ञ किये, याचकोंको नाना प्रकारसे दान दिये, बहुत-से पुत्र उत्पन्न किये और शत्रुओंके साथ अनेकों युद्ध किये ॥ ९१ ॥ इस प्रकार उस राजाने पृथिवीका न्यायानुकूल पालन करते हुए राज्य-भोग किया और अन्तमें अपने प्रिय प्राणोंको धर्मयुद्धमें छोड़ा ॥ ९२ ॥ तब उस सुलोचनाने पहलेके समान फिर अपने चितारूढ तिका विधिपूर्वक प्रसन्न मनसे अनुगमन किया ॥ ९३॥ इससे वह राजा उस

राजकन्याके सहित इन्द्रलोकसे भी उत्कृष्ट अक्षय लोकोंको प्राप्त हुआ ॥ ९४ ॥ हे द्विजश्रेष्ठ ! इस प्रकार शुद्ध हो जानेपर उसने अतुलनीय अक्षय स्वर्ग, अति दुर्लभ दाम्पत्य और अपने पूर्वार्जित पुण्यका फल प्राप्त कर लिया ॥ ९५ ॥
हे द्विज ! इस प्रकार मैंने तुमसे पाखण्डीसे सम्भाषण करनेका दोष और अश्वमेध यज्ञमें स्नान करनेका माहात्म्य वर्णन कर दिया ॥ ९६ ॥ इसलिये पाखण्डी और पापाचारियोंसे कभी वार्तालाप और स्पर्श न करे; विशेषतः नित्य-नैमित्तिक कर्मोंके समय और जो यज्ञादि क्रियाओंके लिये दीक्षित हो उसे तो उनका संसर्ग त्यागना अत्यन्त आवश्यक है ॥ ९७ ॥ जिसके घरमें एक मासतक नित्यकर्मोंका अनुष्ठान न हुआ हो उसको देख लेनेपर बुद्धिमान् मनुष्य सूर्यका दर्शन करे ॥ ९८ ॥ फिर जिन्होंने वेदत्रयीका सर्वथा त्याग कर दिया है तथा जो पाखण्डियोंका अन्न खाते और वैदिक मतका विरोध करते हैं उन पापात्माओंके दर्शनादि करनेपर तो कहना ही क्या है ? ॥ ९९ ॥ इन दुराचारी पाखण्डियोंके साथ वार्तालाप करने, सम्पर्क रखने और उठने-बैठनेमें महान् पाप होता है; इसलिये इन सब बातोंका त्याग करे ॥ १०० ॥ पाखण्डी, विकर्मी, विडाल-व्रतवाले, दुष्ट, स्वार्थी और बगुला-भक्त लोगोंका वाणीसे भी आदर न करे ॥ १०१ ॥ इन पाखण्डी, दुराचारी और अति पापियोंका संसर्ग दूरहीसे त्यागने योग्य है। इसलिये इनका सर्वदा त्याग करे ॥ १०२ ॥

It is said that in ancient times there was a king on earth named Shatadhanu. His wife, Shaivya, was extremely devoted to righteousness—truthful, pure, compassionate, humble, wise, and adorned with every noble quality. Together they worshipped the all-pervading Lord of the gods, Shri Janardana, through deep meditation.

Day after day, absorbed in devotion, they performed homa, japa, charity, fasting, and worship with unwavering love for the Lord. One day, on the full moon of Kartika, they both fasted and bathed together in the holy Ganga. Upon coming out of the water, they saw a heretic. This man was a friend of the king's archery teacher, and so, out of respect for the teacher, the king treated him warmly. But Shaivya, being chaste and observing a fast, did not honor him—she remained silent and, after seeing him, turned her gaze to the sun.

Afterwards, the couple performed their worship of Vishnu. Yet, because the king had conversed with the heretic while fasting, he incurred sin and was reborn as a dog. The queen, however, was reborn as the daughter of the king of Kashi, blessed with beauty, learning, all auspicious qualities, and the gift of remembering past lives. When her father wished to marry her off, she refused, knowing her true husband's fate.

Through divine vision, she saw her husband living as a dog in Vidisha. She went there and fed him excellent food. The dog showed her affection according to his nature, and she, distressed, bowed to him and reminded him of his past—how speaking with a heretic after a holy bath had brought him to such a birth.

The dog remembered and, filled with detachment, left the city and died, being born again as a jackal. The princess found him again and repeated the reminder. He died in the forest and became a wolf. She sought him out once more and told him of his past births as dog and jackal. He died and was born as a vulture, then as a crow, then as a peacock—each time found and reminded by the faithful princess, who fed and cared for him.

During King Janaka's Ashvamedha sacrifice, the peacock was bathed, and the princess again reminded him of all his former lives. Then he was reborn as her own son, born in King Janaka's household. When he came of age, the princess had her father arrange her svayamvara, and she chose him once more as her husband.

He enjoyed royal pleasures with her, inherited the throne of Videha, performed many sacrifices, gave gifts, fathered many sons, and fought many battles. In the end, he died in a righteous war, and the princess, as before, mounted his funeral pyre and followed him.

Thus purified, they both attained an eternal realm even higher than Indra's heaven, enjoying the rare bliss of perfect union.

From this, it is taught that conversing with heretics is a grave sin, especially during sacred duties and rites, and that their association should be avoided altogether. One should never show them honor or keep their company, for such contact brings great spiritual harm.

राजा शतधनुने उपवास-अवस्थामें पाखण्डीसे वार्तालाप किया था। अतः उस पापके कारण उसने कुत्तेका जन्म लिया॥ ६२॥ तथा वह शुभलक्षणा काशीनरेशकी कन्या हुई, जो सब प्रकारके विज्ञानसे युक्त, सर्वलक्षणसम्पन्ना और जातिस्मरा (पूर्वजन्मका वृत्तान्त जाननेवाली) थी॥ ६३॥ राजाने उसे किसी वरको देनेकी इच्छा की, किन्तु उस सुन्दरीके ही रोक देनेसे वह उसके विवाहादिसे उपरत हो गये॥ ६४॥

तब उसने दिव्य दृष्टिसे अपने पतिको श्वान हुआ जान विदिशा नामक नगरमें जाकर उसे वहाँ कुत्तेकी अवस्थामें देखा॥ ६५॥ अपने महाभाग पतिको श्वानरूपमें देखकर उस सुन्दरीने उसे सत्कारपूर्वक अति उत्तम भोजन कराया॥ ६६॥ उसके दिये हुए उस अति मधुर और इच्छित अन्नको खाकर वह अपनी जातिके अनुकूल नाना प्रकारकी चाटुता प्रदर्शित करने लगा॥ ६७॥ उसके चाटुता करनेसे अत्यन्त संकुचित हो उस बालिकाने कुत्सित योनिमें उत्पन्न हुए उस अपने प्रियतमको प्रणाम कर उससे इस प्रकार कहा—॥ ६८॥ "महाराज! आप अपनी उस उदारताका स्मरण कीजिये जिसके कारण आज आप श्वान-योनिको प्राप्त होकर मेरे चाटुकार हुए हैं॥ ६९॥ हे प्रभो! क्या आपको यह स्मरण नहीं है कि तीर्थस्नानके अनन्तर पाखण्डीसे वार्तालाप करनेके कारण ही आपको यह कुत्सित योनि मिली है?"॥ ७०॥

श्रीपराशरजी बोले—काशिराजसुताद्वारा इस प्रकार स्मरण कराये जानेपर उसने बहुत देरतक अपने पूर्वजन्मका चिन्तन किया। तब उसे अति दुर्लभ निर्वेद प्राप्त हुआ॥ ७१॥ उसने अति उदास चित्तसे नगरके बाहर आ प्राण त्याग दिये और फिर शृगाल-योनिमें जन्म लिया॥ ७२॥ तब काशिराजकन्या दिव्य दृष्टिसे उसे दूसरे जन्ममें शृगाल हुआ जान उसे देखनेके लिये कोलाहल पर्वतपर गयी॥ ७३॥ वहाँ भी अपने पतिको शृगाल-योनिमें उत्पन्न हुआ देख वह सुन्दरी राजकन्या उससे बोली—॥ ७४॥ "हे राजेन्द्र! श्वान-योनिमें जन्म लेनेपर मैंने आपसे जो पाखण्डीसे वार्तालापविषयक पूर्वजन्मका वृत्तान्त कहा था क्या वह आपको स्मरण है?"॥ ७५॥ तब सत्यनिष्ठोंमें श्रेष्ठ राजा शतधनुने उसके इस प्रकार कहनेपर सारा सत्य वृत्तान्त जानकर निराहार रह वनमें अपना शरीर छोड़ दिया॥ ७६॥

फिर वह एक भेड़िया हुआ; उस समय भी अनिन्दिता राजकन्याने उस निर्जन वनमें जाकर अपने पतिको उसके पूर्वजन्मका वृत्तान्त स्मरण कराया॥ ७७॥ [उसने कहा—] "हे महाभाग! तुम भेड़िया नहीं हो, तुम राजा शतधनु हो। तुम [अपने पूर्वजन्मोंमें] क्रमशः कुक्कुर और शृगाल होकर अब भेड़िया हुए हो"॥ ७८॥ इस प्रकार उसके स्मरण करानेपर राजाने जब भेड़ियेके शरीरको छोड़ा तो गृध्र-योनिमें जन्म लिया। उस समय भी उसकी निष्पाप भार्याने उसे फिर बोध कराया॥ ७९॥ "हे नरेन्द्र! तुम अपने स्वरूपका स्मरण करो; इन गृध्र-चेष्टाओंको छोड़ो। पाखण्डीके साथ वार्तालाप करनेके दोषसे ही तुम गृध्र हुए हो"॥ ८०॥

तब उस सुन्दरीने अपने पिताको विवाहके लिये प्रेरित किया। उसकी प्रेरणासे राजाने उसके स्वयंवरका आयोजन किया॥ ८८॥ स्वयंवर होनेपर उस राजकन्याने स्वयंवरमें आये हुए अपने उस पतिको फिर पतिभावसे वरण कर लिया॥ ८९॥ उस राजकुमारने काशिराजसुताके साथ नाना प्रकारके भोग भोगे और फिर पिताके परलोकवासी होनेपर विदेहनगरका राज्य किया॥ ९०॥ उसने बहुत-से यज्ञ किये, याचकोंको नाना प्रकारसे दान दिये, बहुत-से पुत्र उत्पन्न किये और शत्रुओंके साथ अनेकों युद्ध किये॥ ९१॥ इस प्रकार उस राजाने पृथिवीका न्यायानुकूल पालन करते हुए राज्य-भोग किया और अन्तमें अपने प्रिय प्राणोंको धर्मयुद्धमें छोड़ा॥ ९२॥

Allegations-

Hinduism also encourages Ashwamedha Yagna, let's not go into details of this ritual. This ritual was performed by the king and his wives and also had the involvement of priests to chant Mantras. This ritual involved killing the horse, the chief queen would then place the penis of the dead horse in her vagina, and she would ask the dead horse to release semen in her. This ritual was done in front of the king and priests. Ram's mother Kaushalya is said to have spent a night with the dead horse. Refutation-

Pandit Nath Sharma Shastri Saraswat explained in his book " Sanatan Dharmaloka Volume 5 page 798 " answering these controversial objections on Ashwamedha Yagya

English Translation

"'Purnamasi bhavati' (Shatapatha 13.4.1.4):
On the full moon of the Phalguna month, during the occasion of Holika, verses from the Ashvamedha Yajna used to be recited. As a result of this tradition, even today, the style of suggestive and humorous banter (obscene jests) is found in Holi celebrations. We will explain this further in the section on 'Holika-Vijnana' (the science/philosophy behind Holika). This affirms the Vedic roots of the festival.

(6) Regarding those critics who have misunderstood this (thinking that there was a sexual union between the queen nd the horse), their error stems from the belief that the horse was alive at that time. However, such an event is not possible even during the horse's lifetime — a horse cannot have intercourse with a human, nor can a human conceive from the horse's semen. Hence, this belief of the critics is a great delusion.

At the time of the Ashvamedha sacrifice, the horse is sanjñapta (i.e., dead). Its body parts are separated and purified before being laid down. Earlier, we have already quoted from the Shatapatha Brahmana: 'saṁjñapteṣu paśuṣu' — sanjñapta means 'dead.' Refer to Vedic grammar (Vedanga Vyakarana) and the Dhatu Patha of sage Panini. In that, for roots with the prefix mit-sañjñaka, the root 'jñā' (ज्ञा) primarily means 'to kill'. In the grammatical commentary Vayyakarana Siddhanta Kaumudi, the same meaning is given: 'jñāpa mitch' — the meaning of 'jñā' is communication or killing, etc. The commentary Tattvabodhini says, 'paśuṁ sañjñapayati' means 'he kills the animal'. Likewise, Bala Manorama explains it as: 'paśuṁ sañjñapayati — he kills the uninjured animal'. This is also clearly stated in the Dhatu Patha published by Swami Dayananda Saraswati (page 12): 'jñā — in the sense of killing, pleasing, and observing'. Thus, the primary meaning of the root 'jñā' is killing. Swami Dayananda also affirms this in his Akhyatika Bhvadi-Gana (page 83).

If the opponents do not believe in the authority of Vedanga grammar, then we offer the direct evidence from the Brahmana portion of the Vedas:
'ghnanti vai etat paśum, yad enam sañjñapayanti' (Shatapatha 13.2.8.2) — "They indeed kill the animal when they declare it sanjñapta."
So, when the animal (horse) is dead at that time, how can the malicious interpretation of the opponents be logically sustained?

(7) When the queen (Mahishi) is made to lie beside the horse, the horse is already dead — we have already provided scriptural (Brahmana) testimony for this. Now let the readers consider the evidence from historical tradition as well.

(a) From the Valmiki Ramayana:

To perform the Putreshti Yajna (sacrifice for begetting sons), an Ashvamedha Yajna was first performed to atone for sins (from previous lives) that obstructed the desired results of actions. The description from the Ramayana says:

> "Kausalya tam iyam tatra paricarya (parikramya) samantataḥ, kr̥pāṇair viśaśāsainaṁ tribhiḥ paramayā mudā" > (Valmiki Ramayana 1.14.33)

Translation:
"Kausalya (the chief queen) circumambulated the horse from all sides and, with great joy, slaughtered it with three knives."

This corresponds with the Shatapatha Brahmana 13.2.8.4) statement:

> "patnyaḥ enaṁ triḥ pariyanti" — "The wives circumambulate it (the horse) three times."

And according to Shatapatha Brahmana 13.2.8.2, the horse is to be slain by Kausalya.

Further in the Ramayana:

> "Patatriṇā tadā sārdhaṁ susthitena ca cetasā, > avasad rajanim ekām Kausalya dharmakāmyayā"
> (1.14.34)

Translation:
"Kausalya, with a composed mind and accompanied by a bird (symbolic or a priest), spent one night beside the horse out of religious duty (dharmakāma), not out of carnal desire."

Thus, staying beside the horse was for dharmic reasons, not for sexual union. The horse was already dead, and the presence beside it was ritualistic, symbolic, and spiritual.

(b) In Taittiriya Brahmana Commentary:

The commentator Bhattabhaskara explains similarly:

> "Tap eva santāpahetutvāt asyā (mahiṣyā)"
> (Taittiriya Brahmana 3.6.6.26)

Meaning:
The queen (Mahishi) endures the heat (tapas) of the ritual due to the pain caused by the spiritual austerity, not due to physical contact. This again confirms that the horse was dead during the ritual.

(c) Supporting evidence from the Mahabharata:

> "Tataḥ sañjñapya turagaṁ vidhivad yājakas tadā, > upāsaṁveśayan rājan! tataḥ tāṁ Drupadātmajām" > (Ashvamedhika Parva, 86.12)

Translation:
"Then the priest, having ritually slain the horse (sañjñapya), made Draupadi (daughter of Drupada) sit beside it according to proper procedure."

This again shows that the horse was already dead, and Draupadi merely sat beside it, following ritual norms — not for any physical act.

Refutation of Misinterpretations:

Critics argue that commentators have interpreted Ashwamedha Yagya in a vulgar or obscene manner (i.e., suggesting sexual union).
But this criticism is refuted here by clearly showing:

- The horse was dead (sanjñapta).

- It was invoked symbolically as Ganapati, the deity of multitudes, not a literal horse.
- The ritual involves symbolic offerings like śiśna , retas , but these are metaphorical and refer to Ganapati, not the dead horse.

In Vedic mantras, like:

> "Havāmahe" — "We invoke…"

…such calls are addressed to conscious deities, not to physical or dead beings. So, retas and related symbols belong to Ganapati, not to a lifeless horse.

Thus, the entire act is highly symbolic, and those who misinterpret it as literal or obscene are gravely mistaken.

Final Thought:

If critics would understand the references to "Ganapati", especially in the context of the mantra:

> "Gaṇānāṁ tvā gaṇapatiṁ havāmahe…"

…as being directed toward the divine leader Ganapati, and not a physical horse, they would not fall into such misinterpretations or make accusations.

This perspective also aligns with the Arya Samaj's printed editions of the Yajurveda, where the deity of this mantra is accepted as Ganapati.

When such a prayer cannot even logically apply to a living horse—since a living horse can neither be a lord of wealth (nidhīpati), nor a beloved lord (priyapati), nor the lord of the hosts (Gana-pati)—then how can such a prayer be applicable to a dead horse?

A living horse cannot be invoked in this manner. There is no biological or ritual connection between a horse's semen and conception in a human woman, nor is there any legitimate basis for an actual union between a horse and a human.

Hence, this entire misunderstanding arises from the distorted minds of those critics who project their own perverse imaginings onto the Vedic texts. These ideas have no connection whatsoever with the ancient scriptures.

In reality, the invocation in the Ashvamedha sacrifice is directed not to a horse, but to the Prajapati-Ganapati (the cosmic deity of creation), symbolically represented in the form of a horse. As the Shatapatha Brahmana (13.3.3.4) says:

> "Prājāpatyo vai aśvaḥ"
> "The horse is indeed Prajapatya (of Prajapati)."

Thus, the prayer is addressed to Ganapati, who, according to the earlier sections of the Mayūkha text, is none other than Vighneshwara (Remover of Obstacles) and Sarveshwara (Lord of All)—

- the protector of people (praja-pati),
- the guardian of wealth (nidhi-pati),
- the lord of the ganas (like Vasus, Kushmandas, Sadhyas, etc.),
- the lord of Padma, Mahapadma and other treasures,
- and also the lord of everything beloved, like sons, life, wealth, and so on.

He alone, by virtue of his all-pervasive presence in the universe, is addressed as Vasu. A dead horse cannot be so addressed. The dead horse is merely a symbolic ritual object, like an idol in image worship (murtipuja), where the invocation is not to the stone image, but to the divine power that resides in it.

In the same way, in the Ashvamedha ritual, the invocation is made not to the horse, but to Ganapati, the divine being represented through the ritual horse. Hence, the mantra:

> "Gaṇānāṁ tvā Gaṇapatiṁ havāmahe"
> (Yajurveda 23.16)
> "We invoke you, O Ganapati, the lord of hosts…"

The next part of the same mantra is:

> "Vaso! mama āhamajāni garbhadhāma tvamajāsi garbhadhām"

Explanation:

- Garbhadhāma = the womb-holder, or source of conception
- Aham ā-ajāni = "I draw forth (the seed)"
- Tvam ajāsi garbhadhām = "You also draw forth (the seed) into the womb"

Now, people create a huge controversy over the commentary of Mahīdhara, interpreting "retas" (semen) as something obscene. But Mahīdhara simply explains:

> "Garbhadhām = retas . I draw it forth; you too draw it forth."

This is in fact in alignment with the Vedas themselves, which explicitly declare:

> "Vṛṣā vājī retodhā reto dadhātu"
> (Yajurveda 23.20)
> "Let the powerful stallion (vājī), bearer of retodhā , deposit the retas ."

Thus, the term "retas" (semen/seed) is not hidden by the Vedas—it is clearly mentioned and understood symbolically, referring not to physical horse semen, but to cosmic creative potency represented by Ganapati or Prajapati.

In conclusion, this passage argues that:

- The ritual is symbolic and divine, not literal or carnal.
- Misinterpretations come from projecting modern materialistic views onto ancient spiritual symbols.
- The invocation is to Ganapati, a deity, not to any actual horse, whether dead or alive.

If the objector interprets the word "retas" (रेतः) as simply meaning "strength" (bal), then it should be remembered that even the word "vīrya" (वीर्य, semen) also fundamentally means "strength"—and hence, both imply "tejas" (spiritual or vital energy).

Then with what face can Mahīdhara be blamed or maligned? The meaning and intent of the Vedic mantra "vājī reto dadhātu" (Let the stallion deposit the seed) is the same as that of Mahīdhara's commentary. Why is this not acknowledged?

Now let the readers themselves consider the deeper meaning. In reference to "garbhadhām" (source of conception), the Shatapatha Brāhmaṇa (13.2.2.5) says:

> "Prajā vai paśavo garbhaḥ, prajāṁ vai paśūn ātman dhatte"
> "All living beings (paśu) are indeed progeny (garbha), and the self bears that progeny within."

This Vedic statement clarifies that the word "garbha" (womb/progeny) refers to both offspring and animals (beings). Hence, the "garbhadhām" in the mantra is not referring to some physical womb or carnal conception, but to the divine seed of life, that is, the divine energy (retas/tejas) of Ganapati being invoked to attract and sustain cosmic progeny—not any material semen of a physical horse.

After all, how could there possibly be a relationship between the semen of a dead horse and the conception in a human woman? Is it even conceivable that the semen of a dead creature still exists?

In fact, death itself occurs due to the drying up of "virility" or "vital force" (vīrya), so the notion of any remaining fertile potency in a dead horse is both scientifically and scripturally absurd.

(b) Do the objectors' own maidens or women pray in this way: "Vīryam asi, vīrya mayi gṛhi" — "You are vigor; place that vigor within me" (Yajurveda 16.6)? Or "Agniḥ prajāṁ bahulāṁ me karotu, annaṁ payo reto 'smāsu dhatta" (Yajurveda 16.48)?
Do they truly believe that these women are praying for a physical deposition of semen or retas (seed) into themselves?

(c) According to Āryābhivinaya (p. 46), women pray: "Enter into our hearts with love" (Ṛgveda 1.161.13).
So, are these women—of the objectors themselves—also praying for physical semen and carnal union, as these critics are suggesting here?

(d) In the marriage ritual detailed in the Sanskaravidhi by Swami Dayananda (Swa. 60), the following mantra is used:
"I unite your womb (upastha) with sweetness (madhu)"
Should it then be understood that the objectors are themselves sanctifying the woman's genital organ with "sweetness" in a vulgar sense?
If so, then why do they object when someone else interprets with dignity?

(e) The Shatapatha Brāhmaṇa (2.4.2.3) says:
"Atha enaṁ manuṣyāḥ upasthaṁ kṛtvā upāsīdan"
— "Then the men, having prepared the lower part (upastha), sat down."
Shall we say here that people exposed their private parts in front of Prajāpati?
If not, then how can the meanings of "vīrya" or "upastha" used by Mahīdhara be condemned while accepting the same words elsewhere?

(g) The Bhagavad Gītā verse says:
"Mama yoniḥ mahad brahma tasmin garbhaṁ dhāmy aham" (Gītā 14.3)
"My womb is the great Brahman; into that I cast the seed."
And in the Yajurveda (31.16): "Tasya yoniṁ paripaśyanti dhīrāḥ" —
"The wise behold His womb."
Should the word "yoni" here too be interpreted in a vulgar, sexualized sense?

Likewise, in Ṛgveda 10.125.7:
"Mama yoniḥ apsv antaḥ samudre"
"My womb is in the cosmic waters, in the ocean" — spoken by the female seer Vāk Ambhṛṇī.
And in Prādhānika Rahasya (verse 5):
"Nāgaṁ yoniṁ ca liṅgaṁ ca bibhṛtī nṛpa ! mūrdhani" —
"Durga Devī holds the womb and the Linga symbol on her head."
Are these also to be interpreted lewdly?

(h) If not, then even in Vedic ritual, no such obscene meaning should be implied.
In the Ashvamedha, the horse is dead, and the mantra "meḍhū te śundhāmi" (Yajurveda 6.14) says the horse's organs are purified and ritually separated—how, then, could there be any question of sexual union?

(i) The objectors say that the Yajurveda mantra "Gaṇānāṁ tvā gaṇapatiṁ havāmahe" refers to Bṛhaspati, based on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, where "Gaṇapati" is glossed as "Brahmaṇaspati".
But they don't realize: that is the Ṛgveda mantra, not the Yajurveda one. The Yajurvedic mantra, which includes "garbhadhām", does not appear in the Ṛgvedic Brāhmaṇa, nor is it explained there.
So those who don't even distinguish between the Vedas, come forward to criticize Mahīdhara's interpretations?

Even if the Gaṇapati in both Ṛgveda and Yajurveda is the same divine being, and one explains the other, then too, our position is established—that in the Ashvamedha ritual, the invocation is addressed to Gaṇapati, and it is a prayer to attract His divine energy (retas/tejas)—not to a physical horse or its biological semen.

In the phrase "ā ajāsi", the root "aj" (from aj gati-kṣepaṇayoḥ — meaning "to move" or "to hurl/throw") originally has the contextual sense of "projection" or "impulsion". However, the objectors cleverly modify the meaning to "ā samantāt jānāsi"—"you know completely"—just to save their position.
If that much interpretive flexibility is permitted, then why object to Mahīdhara's interpretation, whose intent can also be understood in a meaningful and symbolic sense?

Therefore,the phrases like:

- "garbhadham retaḥ sva-yonyau sthāpayati"
- "aśva-śiśnam upasthe kurute"

...should be understood to mean the following:
The woman is concentrating upon attracting the divine energy (tejas) of Gaṇapati, the deity who carries the power of divine procreation, in the form of soma . As said in the Veda (Yajurveda 23.62):

> "Ayathaṁ somo vṛṣṇo 'śvasya retaḥ"
> — "As Soma is the seed (retaḥ) of the mighty horse."

Thus, the inner prayerful intent is to draw that divine energy into herself, so that, as a result of that spiritual conception, she may give birth to a chakravartin (universal emperor) son.

In the marriage ritual, Swami 060 has written in his Saṁskāra Vidhi (pp. 154–155) the mantra:

> "Indrāgnī... Bṛhaspatir-Maruto Brahma Soma imāṁ nārīṁ prajayā vardhayantu" > — "May Indra and Agni... Bṛhaspati, the Maruts, Brahma, and Soma increase this woman (the bride) with progeny."

He interprets "Bṛhaspati" as "king," "Maruts" as "noble men (sabhyamānavāḥ)," and explains the mantra as a statement by the groom:

> "These (king and noble men) will cause this my wife to grow (prosper) with progeny."

Then the question arises: Does this mean the king and other men have sexual relations with the bride? Obviously not. This is clearly an auspicious blessing (āśīrvāda) for the bride to be prosperous in terms of family and offspring.

Similarly, in the Ashvamedha context (or in the mantra involving "aśva-śiśnam upasthe kurute"), it should be understood not as a physical act but as an inner devotional and symbolic gesture—a prayer to attract the divine energy (tejas) of Gaṇapati, the Lord of hosts.

Now consider the inner meaning:

- "Aśvasya": The word aśva means "that which pervades or moves through all" (ashnute sarvaṁ jagad), i.e., that which pervades the universe—a symbol of omnipresence.
- "Gaṇapati": According to the Gaṇapati Upaniṣad, "Namaste Gaṇapataye… tvam eva sarvaṁ khalvidaṁ brahmāsi" – "Salutations to Gaṇapati… You alone are indeed all this (Brahman)."
  So, here Gaṇapati is Brahman itself—all-pervading divine power.
- "Śiśnaṁ": Interpreted from the Nirukta (4.16.6):
  - From the root śnathate — "to strike, to injure": thus, that which destroys obstacles (vighna).
  - From śeṣate — "to obstruct": so it means that which removes obstructions.
  - From śaś, pluna-gatau — "to move swiftly or flow", hence that which pervades or penetrates.
  - From śinoti — "to sharpen", signifying tejas (brilliance, energy).

Thus, "śiśnaṁ" here is not a vulgar or sexual reference, but a symbolic representation of observing and accepting divine energy, or tejas of Gaṇapati, that destroys inner ignorance and obstacles, and initiates creative or spiritual fertility.

Hence, when it is said that the woman draws this Gaṇapati-tejas into her "yoni", it means:

> She spiritually attracts the universal creative force of Gaṇapati (symbolized in soma, the divine vitality), and holds it in her subtle body, in the karmic or metaphysical womb—the inner source from which the fruit of spiritual or noble progeny arises.

Thus, the vajī (horse) here symbolizes:

> Vigorous, swift, potent, and spiritually dynamic force, not a literal beast or sexual agent.

Among fruits, Vaṣukaḥ; among progenitors, Gaṇapati; may he place his tejas in me."

The Queen (Mahishī) here prays to Gaṇapati for his divine energy (tejas) and expresses a devotional longing to attract that tejas into herself.

Just as the Vedic mantras say:

- "Vīryam asi, vīryaṁ mayi ghehi" – "You are virility; may that virility enter into me." (Yajurveda 16.6)
- "Reto asmāsu ghatt" – "Let the seed be poured into us." (Yajurveda 16.48)

The women of the sacrificers (ācheptā) chant such mantras to invoke the infusion of divine virility (vīrya) into themselves — not physical semen, but spiritual or cosmic vitality.

Alternatively, from the perspective of the Bhagavad Gītā (14.3):

> "Mama yonir mahad brahma, tasmin garbha dhāmy aham"
> "My womb is the great Brahman (Prakṛti); into it I place the embryo (conscious reflection)."

In this sense, the wife (queen), who represents Prakṛti (nature), invokes Gaṇapati, the supreme consciousness, to implant the embryo of divine awareness (cid-ābhāsa) into her spiritual womb. The rest of the meaning follows as before.

Now, it must be stressed that in this ritual:

- The horse (aśva) is dead — hence, no question of sexual union arises.
- Even with a living being, such an act would be strictly forbidden.
- And in a Vedic sacrifice, where even lustful contact with one's own husband is prohibited, how can any act of sexual desire with a dead horse be even conceived?

Therefore, the earlier interpretation, where the horse is symbolic, and the real intent is a devotional invocation of divine energy, is the authentic meaning.

The use of terms like "śiśna" etc., are parokṣa-vṛtti — indirect, symbolic expressions common in Vedic style.

After all, would the wives of the objectors (ākṣepakās) ever have intercourse with their dead husbands?
If not, how can they accuse the Veda of prescribing intercourse with a dead horse?

Hence, it is only Gaṇapati's tejas (spiritual power) that is prayed for and invoked here.

At this moment in the ritual, the Queen circumambulates the horse three times, as mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (13.2.8.4) and Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra (20.6.13). Such circumambulation (parikrama) is always a part of divine worship (devapūjā).

Therefore, this whole act is evidently a form of worship, not any literal or physical activity.

As a result of attracting this divine energy, the Queen gives birth to a universal sovereign (cakravartin putra)—a son destined for greatness.

Even in the Karma-kāṇḍa (ritualistic portion of the Vedas), in the episode of the Aśvamedha (horse sacrifice) involving the queen and the horse, there is no reference to any actual sexual intercourse. The horse is dead, and thus, only touching its separated and sanctified body parts—and placing them near or upon oneself (such as in the lap, on the chest, or limbs)—is what is prescribed.

There is no indulgence, no lasciviousness; and since the intention is pure, there is no question of a violation of marital chastity (pātivratya). Moreover, this is done in accordance with the husband's command and for the fulfillment of his sacrificial rite, as laid down in the Vedic branches (śākhās).

Take for example: when men touch the udders of a cow or the genital area of a cow during treatment or milking, do they begin to think about sexual desire toward the cow? Do they develop lustful feelings from such touch?
If not, then how can it be claimed that a woman, by merely touching the organ of a dead horse, would develop lustful thoughts? Is she not a rational human being?

If the opponents do feel such lust, the real cause is that their minds have been corrupted by the propagation of licentious ideas

These very critics promote systems where, under Halala divorced woman is touched by another man, but even sensual union is sanctioned—yet they raise no concern about the woman's pātivratya (chastity) being compromised.
If in their own shāstra-based frameworks, they feel no violation occurs, then why raise objections in this Vedic rite, which is entirely symbolic and devotional?

To mock the Vedic ritual (like they do) is to expose themselves to equal ridicule in their own practices like Halala , if assessed critically.
Upon thoughtful reflection, all these objections collapse.

Even during childbirth, doctors touch a woman's private parts—even insert their hands for medical reasons. Does that mean the woman's marital chastity is violated?
Or, consider marriage itself: in the ritual of garbhādhāna (conception rite), there is inherent reference to intercourse. But since it is performed according to śāstra, it is regarded as dharma, not vulgarity.

In the Aśvamedha, however, there is neither sensual pleasure, nor lust, nor any actual intercourse.
Therefore, to forcibly interpret this act as sexual union is nothing but a projection of the critics' own corrupted minds.
In the actual Vedic context, no such perverse intent exists.

पूर्णमासी भवति' (शतपथ० ६।२।४।१४)। फाल्गुनकी पूर्णिमामें होलिकाके अवसरपर अश्वमेध-यज्ञमें कहे जाते थे, इसी परम्पराके फल-स्वरूप होलियोंमें अश्लील-परिहास की शैली अब भी मिलती है। इसे हम 'होलिका-विज्ञान' में स्पष्ट करेंगे। इससे इसकी वैदिकता सिद्ध हो रही है।

(ढ) इन आक्षेप्ताओंको जो कि यह (रानीसे घोड़ेके मैथुनका) भ्रम हुआ है, उसका कारण यह है कि—वे लोग उस समय घोड़ेको जीवित समझते हैं, यद्यपि वह घोड़ेके जीवनमें भी उपपन्न नहीं हो सकता। क्योंकि घोड़ेका मानुषीसे समागम तथा घोड़ेके वीर्यसे मानुषीमें गर्भ उपपन्न नहीं। अतः आक्षेप्ताओंका यह महामोह है। उस समय अश्वमेधका अश्व संज्ञप्त (मृतक) है; उसके अङ्ग भी पृथक्-पृथक् संशोधित होकर पड़े होते हैं। हम पहले शतपथका पाठ लिख चुके हैं कि—'संज्ञप्तेषु पशुषु'। 'संज्ञप्त' का अर्थ 'मृतक' है। देखो—वेदाङ्ग-व्याकरण, श्रीपाणिनिमुनिका धातुपाठ। उसमें 'मारणतोषणनिशामनेषु ज्ञा' (८११) यहां मित्संज्ञक धातुओंमें 'ज्ञा' धातुका अर्थ 'मारना' सबसे पूर्व लिखा है। 'वैयाकरणसिद्धान्तकौमुदी' में भी यही है। इतना अधिक लिखा है—'ज्ञप मिच्च' इति चुरादौ। ज्ञापनं मारणादिकं च तस्यार्थः'। वहां 'तत्त्वबोधिनी'में लिखा है—'पशुं संज्ञपयति-मारयति इत्यर्थः'। 'बालमनोरमा'में भी यही लिखा है—'पशुं संज्ञपयति-अयतं मारयतीत्यर्थः'। यही स्वा० द० संगृहीत 'धातुपाठ'में लिखा है—'मारणतोषण-निशामनेषु ज्ञा' (पृ० १२) यहां मित्संज्ञक 'ज्ञा'

धातुका पहला अर्थ मारण है। यही बात स्वामी दयानन्दके आख्यातिक व्याकिरण (पृ० ८३) में लिखी है। यदि प्रतिपक्षियोंको वेदाङ्गपर विश्वास न हो; तो हम 'संज्ञप्त' शब्दपर वेदभाग 'ब्राह्मण' की सम्मति देते हैं; देखिये—'नन्ति वै एतत् पशुम्, यद् एनत् संज्ञपयन्ति' (शत० १३।२।८।२)। तो जब पशु उस समय संज्ञप्त (मृतक) है; तो उस समय प्रतिपक्षियोंका दुरभिप्राय कैसे सङ्गत हो सकता है?

(ञ) जब घोड़ेके पास महिषीको रखा जाता है; उस समय अश्व मृतक होता है—इस विषयकी ब्राह्मणभागकी साक्षी हम दे चुके। अब इसमें इतिहासकी साक्षी भी पाठकगण देखें—

(क) वाल्मीकि-रामायणमें पुत्रेष्टियज्ञ करनेके लिए इष्टकामनायुक्त, कार्य-प्रतिबन्धक पापके क्षयार्थ पहले अश्वमेध-यज्ञ किया गया था। उस समयका वहां वर्णन है—'कौसल्या तं हयं तत्र परिचर्य (परिक्रम्य) समन्ततः। कृपाणैर्विशशासैनं त्रिभिः परमया मुदा' (१।१४।३३) यहां अश्वकी 'पत्न्यः एनं त्रिः परियन्ति' (शत० १३।२।८।४) इस कथनसे परिक्रमा और (शत० १३।२।८।२ के अनुसार) कौसल्या-द्वारा अश्वका विशसन (हनन) कहा है। फिर आगे लिखा है—'पतत्रिणा तदा सार्धं सुस्थितेन च चेतसा। अवसद् रजनीमेकां कौसल्या धर्मकाम्यया' (१४।३४) यहां पर मृतक-घोड़ेके पास रहना धर्मेच्छासे कहा है, सम्भोगेच्छासे नहीं।

(ख) इसी प्रकरणके तैत्तिरीयब्राह्मणके भाष्यमें श्रीभट्टभास्करने भी यही भाष्य किया है—'वप एव सन्तापहेतुत्वात् अस्या (महिष्या)

पत्नाः तपस्यानीयं यद् मृतेन अश्विमुनीभवनम् [सह-उपवेशनम्]' (३।४।६।२६) यहां भी अश्वकी मृतकता स्पष्ट है। (ग) अब इसकी अन्य साक्षी महाभारतमें देखें—'ततः संज्ञप्य तुरगं विधिवद् याजकास्तदा। उपसंवेशयन् राजन्! ततस्तां द्रुपदात्मजाम्' (आश्वमेधिकपर्व ८८।२) यहां भी मृतक-घोड़ेके साथ द्रौपदीको बैठाया गया है। जब अश्व मृतक है; तब यहां आक्षेप्ताओंके आक्षेप व्यर्थ हैं। जैसे कि—'वेदोंका सार्वभौम सन्देश' (पृ० ३६) में उसके व्याख्याताका यह कहना कि—महीधरके अपने-वेदभाष्यमें किये अर्थ स्पष्टतया अश्लील अन्यधर्म (संभोगादि)-परक हैं; यह निष्पक्ष विद्वानोंको लज्जाके साथ स्वीकार करना पड़ेगा' इत्यादि निराकृत हो गया।

यहां बतलाया जा चुका है कि अश्व मृतक है, और उसे गणपतिदेवके रूपमें आहुत किया गया है, जैसा कि इस आरम्भिक-मयूखमें विस्तारसे बता चुके हैं। 'हवामहे' ऐसा आह्वान भी वैदिक-शैलीसे चेतन-देवताका होता है; उसमें प्राकृत अश्व, उसमें भी मृतकका आह्वान नहीं हुआ करता। सो 'शिश्न' वा 'रेत' एवं वीर्य उसी गणपतिदेवका इष्ट है, मृतक-अश्वका नहीं। इस बात पर न विचारनेसे ही प्रतिपक्षी भ्रमकूपमें गिरे हुए हैं। यदि यहां प्रतिपक्षी भी प्राकृत अश्वका वर्णन न समझकर 'गणपति' देवका वर्णन समझ लें, क्योंकि—'गणानां त्वा' मन्त्रका देवता आर्यसमाज

* 'मिथुनीभवनम्'का अर्थ इकट्ठा होना है। वेदादि-शास्त्रोंमें भाई-बहिनके जोड़ेको भी 'मिथुन' कहा जाता है। जैसे कि—निरुक्त (३।४।२)में।

की बनाई हुई यजुर्वेदकी संहितानुसार भी 'गणपति' है; तब उन्हें यह भ्रम वा दूसरोंपर आक्षेप करनेका अवसर ही न रहे। जब जीवित-अश्वसे भी यह प्रार्थना सङ्गत नहीं हो सकती, जीवित-अश्व भी न निधिपति, न प्रियपति, और न गणपति बन सकता है, न उसका आह्वान ही उपपन्न हो सकता है; न उसके वीर्यका मनुष्योंमें गर्भ करनेसे कोई सम्बन्ध है, न अश्वका मनुष्योंसे सन्तानमें कोई सम्बन्ध है; तब मृतक-घोड़ेसे यह प्रार्थना सङ्गत कैसे हो सकती है? तब वादियोंकी यह अपने नियोग आदिकी कल्पनासे विकृत हुए मस्तिष्ककी उपज है, प्राचीन-ग्रन्थोंसे इसका कोई भी सम्बन्ध नहीं। अतः यहां अश्वरूपमें प्रजापति-गणपतिकी ही प्रार्थना है, जैसे कि शतपथमें कहा है—'प्राजापत्यो वै अश्वः' (शतपथ० १३।३।३।४) 'प्रजापतिर्देवता अस्य—इति प्राजापत्यः, अश्वः। वही गणपतिदेव आरम्भिक-मयूखमें निदर्शित की हुई सरणिसे विघ्नेश्वर एवं सर्वेश्वर होनेसे प्रजाके पति-रक्षक, हमारी निधिके रक्षक, वसु आदि वा कूष्माण्ड-आदि गणों तथा साध्य आदि गणदेवताओंके पति, पद्म-महापद्म आदि निधियोंके पति, पति-पुत्र, प्राण-मन आदि प्रिय वस्तुओंके भी पति होते हैं। वही सम्पूर्ण-जगत्में व्यापकतासे निवास करनेसे 'वसु' नामसे सम्बोधित किये जाते हैं, मरा हुआ अश्व सम्बोधित नहीं किया जाता। यह मृतक-अश्व तो केवल मूर्तिपूजाकी मूर्तिकी तरह सम्बोधन वा अर्चनका साधन है, मूर्तिपूजामें पत्थरकी मूर्तिका आह्वान न करके मूर्तिस्थित देवताशक्तिको आहूत किया जाता है। इसी प्रकार यज्ञके वाचक

अश्वमें भी गणपति-देवताको ही आहूत किया जाता है कि—'गणानां त्वा गणपतिᳲ हवामहे, (यजुः २३।१९)। अब इस मन्त्र का शेष भाग है—'वसो ! मम आहमजानि गर्भधमा त्वमजासि गर्भधम्'।

यहां पर 'गर्भधं—गर्भं दधातीति गर्भधं रेतः अहम् आ अजानि —आकृष्य क्षिपामि, त्वम् गर्भधं रेत आ अजासि—आकृष्य क्षिपसि' इस महीधरकी व्याख्यापर बिना-विचारके ही बड़ा होहल्ला मचाया जाता है। यहां 'रेतः'का अर्थ 'वीर्य' किया जाता है; सो अश्वके जिस रेतः (वीर्य)को प्राप्त करना श्रीमहीधरने लिखा है, वही वेदने स्वयं कहा है, देखिये—'वृषा वाजी रेतोधा रेतो दधातु' (यजुः २३।२०) यहां 'रेतः'का अर्थ छिपा लिया जाता है। यदि आक्षेप्ता 'रेतः'का 'बल' अर्थ करते हैं; तो 'वीर्य'का भी 'बल'ही अर्थ होता है; वही 'तेज'का आशय निकला। फिर किस मुंहसे महीधरको बदनाम किया जाता है ? जो 'वाजी रेतो दधातु' वाले मन्त्रका अर्थ एवं आशय है, वही महीधरके भाष्यका भी है—यह क्यों नहीं सोचा जाता ? अब इस विषयमें पाठकगण देखें—

(क) 'गर्भधं' पर 'शतपथब्राह्मण'में लिखा है—'प्रजा वै पशवो गर्भः, प्रजां वै पशून् आत्मन् धत्ते' (१३।२।२।५) इस श्रुतिसे 'गर्भ' शब्द यहां प्रजा एवं पशु-वाचक है। उस प्रजा-पशुरूप गर्भके धारण करनेवाले दैवी रेतः—गणपतिदेवके तेजके आकर्षणकी प्रार्थना की गई है, प्राकृत-घोड़ेके प्राकृत-वीर्यकी नहीं; क्योंकि—अश्वके वीर्यका और फिर उसमें मृतक-अश्वके वीर्यका मानुषी-स्त्रीमें गर्भसे सम्बन्ध ही

भला क्या हो सकता है ? क्या मृतकका वीर्य भी रह जाता है ? वीर्य की शुष्कतासे ही तो मृत्यु होती है।

(ख) आक्षेप्ताओंकी कुमारियां वा स्त्रियां प्रार्थना करती हैं—'वीर्यमसि वीर्यं मयि धेहि' (यजुः १९।९) 'अग्निः प्रजां बहुलां मे करोतु, अन्नं पयो रेतो अस्मासु धत्त' (यजुः १९।४८) इत्यादि मन्त्रोंसे वे कुमारियें वा स्त्रियें अपनेमें रेतः वा वीर्यके आधानकी प्रार्थना करती हैं क्या ?

(ग) 'आर्याभिविनय' (पृ० ५६)के अनुसार वे प्रार्थना करती हैं—'हमारे हृदयमें रमण कीजिये' (ऋ० १।९१।१३); तो क्या वे आक्षेप्ताओंकी स्त्रियें उसी 'प्राकृत वीर्य' तथा 'रमण'की प्रार्थना कर रही होती हैं, जिसे प्रतिपक्षी यहाँ बताते हैं ?

(घ) 'इमं ते उपस्थं मधुना सᳲसृजामि' इस स्वा० द० जीकी संस्कारविधिमें लिखे, विवाहकालीन-मन्त्रमें भी आक्षेप्तागण क्या स्त्रीके उसी उपस्थको मधुसे युक्त कर रहे होते हैं ? यदि ऐसा है; तो दूसरों पर आक्षेप क्यों ?

(ङ) 'अर्धेनं मनुष्याः उपस्थं कृत्वा उपासीदन्' (शतपथ २।४।२।३) यहाँ क्या प्रजापतिके सामने मनुष्योंका गुप्त-अङ्ग निकालना माना जावेगा ? जो अर्थ 'वीर्य, उपस्थ' आदिका प्रतिपक्षी यहाँ करेंगे, वही महीधरभाष्यमें भी हो जायगा ?

(च) परमैश्वर्यकेलिए वैश्यसे, वेदोंसे भोग करें' [उपयोग लें] (यजुः २१।६०) यह स्वा० द० जीका किया अर्थ है; तब क्या आक्षेप्ताओं-की वेद पढ़नेवाली स्त्रियोंका वैश्यसे और उनका स्वयं वेदोंसे भोग

या उपयोग होना यही तथाकथित अश्वके भोग या उपयोग जैसा माना जावेगा या नहीं ?

(छ) 'मम योनिर्महद् ब्रह्म तस्मिन् गर्भं दधाम्यहम्' (१४।३) इस गीताके पद्यमें भी योनिमें गर्भ-धारण करनेका 'तस्य योनिं परिपश्यन्ति धीराः' (यजुः ३१।१९) यहां भी क्या योनिका यही अश्लील अर्थ किया जावेगा ? 'मम योनिरप्स्वन्तः समुद्रे' (ऋ० १०।१२५।७) यहाँ वागाम्भृणी-ऋषिकाकी योनि, 'तासां योनिं च लिङ्गं च बिभ्रती नृप ! मूर्त्तयः' (प्राधानिकरहस्य ५) क्या यहां भी श्रीदुर्गादेवीकी योनिका यही अश्लील अर्थ किया जावेगा ?

(ज) यदि नहीं; तो याज्ञिक-प्रक्रियामें भी ऐसी बात नहीं; वहां-पर अश्व सूचक है, 'मेढ्रं ते शुन्धामि' (यजुः ६।१४) उसके अंग पृथक्-पृथक् शोधित कर रखे हैं; उससे मैथुन हो ही कैसे सकता है ? 'गणानां त्वा' इस यजुर्वेदके मन्त्रका ऐतरेय-ब्राह्मणसे 'ब्राह्मणस्पत्यम्' यह जो आक्षेपकों-द्वारा अर्थ बताया जाता है, उन लोगोंको यह पता नहीं कि—यह याजुष-मन्त्रका अर्थ नहीं, किन्तु ऋग्वेदके 'गणानां' इस ब्रह्मणस्पतिवाले मन्त्रका अर्थ है। उसमें 'गर्भध' आदि याजुषमन्त्रके पदोंकी व्याख्या है ही नहीं। जिन्हें यह पता नहीं; वे चले हैं महीधरके अर्थपर आक्षेप करने। यदि दोनों ऋग्वेद एवं यजुर्वेदके गणपति एक हैं; इसलिए याजुष-मन्त्रका ऋग्वेदके ऐतरेय-ब्राह्मणसे अर्थ किया जाता है; तब भी हमारा ही पक्ष सिद्ध हुआ कि अश्वमें उसी गणपति-देवताका आह्वान किया जा रहा है; उसी गणपतिदेवके तेजके आकर्षणार्थ प्रार्थना है; तब

भी हमारा ही पक्ष सिद्ध हुआ। 'आ अजासि' में 'अज' धातुका 'क्षेपण' ('अज गतिक्षेपणयोः' इस धातुके अनुकूल) अर्थ प्राकरणिक था; पर आक्षेपकों-द्वारा 'आ समन्तात्प्रजानासि' यह अर्थ बदलकर अपनी जान बचा ली जाती है। इस प्रकार श्रीमहीधरके अर्थका आशय भी जान लिया जा सकता है; तब उसपर आक्षेप क्यों ?

(९) प्रतिपक्षिगण अश्वके...डरते हैं; और उससे स्त्रीके जीवित न रहनेकी शङ्का प्रकट करते हैं; पर उपवेद-आयुर्वेद पुरुषको ही 'वाजीकरण' ओषधि देकर स्त्रीकेलिए 'अश्व' बनाना चाहता है; और वेद भी पुरुषके अंगको 'अश्वका अङ्ग' बनाना चाहता है। देखिये—'यावदङ्गीनं पारस्वतं हास्तिनं गार्दभं च यत्। यावद् अश्वस्य वाजिनः तावत् ते (पुरुषस्य) वर्धतां पसः, (अथर्व० ६।७२।३) पस 'शिश्न' को कहते हैं; देखिये इसपर स्वा० द०जीका यजुर्वेदभाष्य (२०।९)। तो क्या स्त्री उस पुरुषके अश्वके शिश्नसे जीवित रह सकेगी, जिसका वेद विधान कर रहा है ? यदि वहां प्रतिपक्षी 'अश्व'का साक्षात् 'अश्व' अर्थ नहीं लेते; वैसे यहां पर भी वे 'अश्वशिश्न' खास अर्थ कैसे करते हैं ?

(१०) यह स्पष्ट किया जा चुका है कि—जो अर्थ श्रीमहीधराचार्यने किया है; वह शतपथब्राह्मणसे लिया है। सो जो तात्पर्य शतपथमें होगा, महीधरभाष्यमें भी वही तात्पर्य होगा। सो 'गर्भधं रेतः स्वयोनौ स्थापयति, अश्वशिश्नस्तुल्यं कुरुते' आदिका अर्थ भी वही जान लेना चाहिये कि—स्त्री प्रजा-पशुरूप गर्भको धारण करनेवाले

गणपतिदेवके सोमरूप तेजको—जैसे कि वेदमें कहा है—'आयं सोमो वृष्णोऽश्वस्य रेतः' (यजुः २३।६२)—प्रार्थित करके उसे अपने भीतर आकर्षित करनेकी भावना करती है। इसी भावनाके फलस्वरूप उसे चक्रवर्ती पुत्र पैदा होता है।

विवाह-संस्कारमें स्वा० द०ने संस्कारविधिमें 'इन्द्राग्नी... बृहस्पतिर्मरुतो ब्रह्म सोम इमां नारीं प्रजया वर्धयन्तु' (पृ० १५४-१५५) यह मन्त्र लिखा है। उसका अर्थ किया है—बृहस्पतिः—राजा, मरुतः—सभ्य मनुष्य...इस मेरी स्त्रीको प्रजासे बढ़ाया करते हैं' यह वरकी उक्ति है। तो क्या वरकी स्त्रीमें राजा और सभ्य मनुष्य मैथुन करते हैं? यदि नहीं, यह केवल आशीर्वादमात्र है, वैसे यहां भी गणपतिके तेजके आकर्षणकी भावनामात्र है। सो यहां अर्थ यह है—

'अश्वस्य—अश्नुते व्याप्नोति सर्वं जगद्—इति अश्वः, गणपतिदेवः (नमस्ते गणपतये...त्वमेव सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्मासि' इति गणपत्युपनिषदुक्तेः) तस्य गणपतिदेवस्य शिश्नम्—'शिश्नं श्नथतेः' (निरुक्त ४।१९।६) श्नथयति—बाधयति हिनस्ति वा विघ्नरूपं तम् इति शिश्नम्, शेपति—हिनस्ति वा प्रतिबन्धकतामिति वा शिश्नम्, शश प्लुतगतौ-शशति शीघ्रं व्याप्नोति इति वा शिश्नम्, शिनोति-तीक्ष्णीकरोति इति वा शिश्नम्' (सर्वत्र पृषोदरादिः (६।३।१०६) शिश्नं-तेज इत्यर्थः) तद् व्यापकं गणपति-तेज आकृत्य भक्त्या स्वयोनौ—कर्मफलोत्पादके कारणभूतस्वसूक्ष्मशरीरान्तः फलोत्पादनपर्यन्तं सूक्ष्मरूपेण धारयति। वाजी—वेगवान् बलवान् वृषा-

अथवा—'मम योनिर्महद् ब्रह्म तस्मिन् गर्भं दधाम्यहम्' (गीता १४।३)के अनुसार प्रकृतिरूप-पत्नीमें चिदाभासरूप गर्भका आधान करनेवाले गणपतिदेवका मैं आह्वान करती हूं, यह अर्थ है, शेष पूर्ववत्।

यहां अश्वके मृतक होनेसे उससे मैथुन असम्भव है; जबकि जीवितके साथ भी वैसा नहीं हो सकता। तब जिस-यज्ञमें अपने पतिसे भी कामवासना आदिका निषेध होता है, उसीमें मृत-अश्वके साथ वासनारूप-ग्राम्यधर्म कैसे हो सकता है? तब यहां पूर्व कहा हुआ अर्थ ही वास्तविक है। उक्त शब्द परोक्ष-वृत्तिसे कहे गये हैं। क्या कभी आर्यसमाजियोंकी स्त्रियां अपने मृतक-पतिसे मैथुन कर सकती हैं? यदि नहीं; तब मृतक-अश्वसे ही वैसे कैसे हो सकता है? अतः गणपतिदेवका तेज ही यहां प्रार्थित किया गया है। इस अवसरपर अश्वकी तीन-परिक्रमा शतपथ (१३।२।८।४) और कात्यायनश्रौतसूत्र (२०।६।१३) के अनुसार की जाती है, परिक्रमा देवपूजामें ही हुआ करती है; सो यह स्पष्ट देवपूजा ही है। इसी देवी तेजके आकर्षणके फलस्वरूप महिषीका चक्रवर्ती-बालकका उत्पन्न

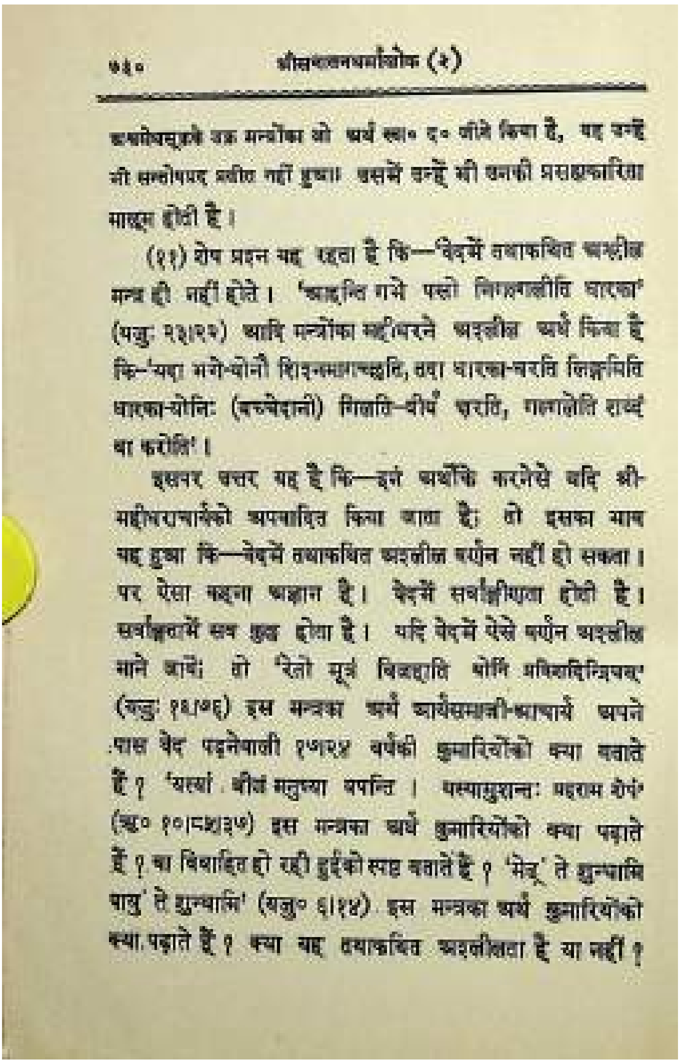
होता है।

कर्मकाण्डमें भी अश्वमहिषी-प्रसङ्गमें कोई सम्भोगका सम्बन्ध नहीं दीखता; क्योंकि अश्व मृतक है; तब केवल मृतक-अश्वके पृथग्भूत और संशोधित अङ्गका स्पर्शमात्र, उपस्थ (उत्सङ्ग, गोदमें, अथवा अपने अङ्गपर) स्थापनमात्र ही इष्ट है; वहाँ विलासिता न होनेसे तथा भावना दूषित न होनेसे पातिव्रत्य-भंगकी आशङ्का भी नहीं होती, क्योंकि-यह भी शास्त्राज्ञानुसार पतिकी आज्ञासे उसके यज्ञको पूर्णार्थ किया जाता है। गायके स्तन या मूत्रस्थानका पुरुष स्पर्श करते हैं; तो क्या वहाँ पुरुषोंको स्त्रीके अङ्गोंके स्पर्शका विचार आ जाता है? या उन्हें उससे काम-वासना हो जाती है? यदि नहीं; तब स्त्रीको ही घोड़ेके अङ्गके स्पर्शमात्रसे काम-वासना कैसे उत्पन्न हो जावेगी? क्या वह मनुष्य है? प्रतिपक्षियोंको जो ऐसी-वासना उत्पन्न हो जाती है; उसका कारण नियोग आदिकी अनुकूलताके प्रचारसे मस्तिष्कमें विकृतिका उत्पन्न हो जाना है। प्रतिपक्षी लोग नियोगसे वा विधवा-विवाहसे मृतककी पत्नीके अङ्गमें अन्य पुरुषके अङ्गका स्पर्शमात्र तो क्या; उसमें तो विलास भी करवाते हैं; वहाँ उनको उस पत्नीके पातिव्रत्य-भङ्गकी शङ्का ही नहीं होती। यदि वे उसे अपने अभिमत-शास्त्रके अर्थके अनुसार व्यवहार करानेसे उसके पातिव्रत्यके भङ्गकी शङ्का नहीं करते; तब इस-कर्मकाण्डमें शङ्का करना अपने नियोग या विधवा-विवाहसे आँख मूँद लेना है। जिस प्रकार आप लोग यहाँ उपहास

उपस्थके उत्सङ्ग-अर्थमें शतपथ-ब्राह्मणकी साक्षी हम दे चुके हैं।

करते हैं; वैसे नियोगमें आप लोगोंका भी उपहास होता है, पर विचार करनेसे यह सब आक्षेप कट जाते हैं। प्रसव करनेमें डाक्टर भी स्त्रीकी योनिका स्पर्श कर रहे होते हैं। उसमें हाथ भी डाल रहे होते हैं; इससे क्या उस स्त्रीका आप पतिव्रत्यभङ्ग मान लेंगे? विवाहको ही ले लीजिये; इसके अङ्ग-गर्भाधानमें ही क्या अश्लीलता नहीं है? पर शास्त्रानुसार व्यवहारसे वहाँ धर्म्यता मान ली जाती है; अश्वमेधमें तो न कोई कामवासना है, न ही विलास वा सम्भोग ही; तब बलात् यहाँ समागम या सम्भोग बताना प्रतिपक्षियोंका अपने कलुषित-हृदयका ही यह कलुषित-विचार है, प्रकृतमें ऐसी कोई बात नहीं।

यदि वादी ऐसा मानते हैं; और अपनेको वेद-प्रेमी मानते हैं; तो वे जरा अथर्ववेदके कुन्तापसूक्तपर दृष्टि डालें। उसमें मन्त्र है- 'महानग्नी उपब्रूते अश्वस्य आवेशितं पसः' (२०।१३६।५) इस मन्त्रमें महानग्नी स्त्रीमें 'अश्वस्य पस आवेशितम्'का अर्थ क्या करेंगे? इन्हीं अश्वमेधके मन्त्रों तथा कुन्तापसूक्तोंसे त्रस्त होकर आर्यसमाज के एक अन्वेषक-विद्वान्‌ने अपने काँगड़ी वेद-सम्मेलनके सभापति-भाषण (११ अप्रैल १९५०)के ४२ पृष्ठमें कहा है—'प्रतिवर्ष भारतके भिन्न-भिन्न प्रदेशोंके वेदोंके विद्वान् एक केन्द्रिय-स्थानपर एकत्रित हों,"'अश्वमेधसूक्त, कुन्तापसूक्त, तथा 'श्रीणि शता श्री सहस्राणि अग्निं त्रिंशच्च देवाः' 'इन्द्रो दधीचो अस्थिभिः' इत्यादि मन्त्रोंमें विशेषरूपसे विचार किया जाए, जो वेदोंका अनुशीलन करने वालोंकेलिए विशेष कठिनाई उपस्थित करते हैं'। इससे स्पष्ट है कि—



७६० श्रीसनातनधर्मालोक (२)

ऋग्वेदसूक्तके उक्त मन्त्रोंका जो अर्थ स्वा० द० जीने किया है, वह उन्हें भी सन्तोषप्रद प्रतीत नहीं हुआ। इसमें उन्हें भी उनकी प्रमादकारिता मालूम होती है।

(११) शेष प्रश्न यह रहता है कि—वेदमें तथाकथित अश्लील मन्त्र ही नहीं होते। 'आहन्ति गभे पसो निगल्गलीति धारका' (यजु: २३।२२) आदि मन्त्रोंका महीधरने अश्लील अर्थ किया है कि—'यदा भगे-योनौ शिश्नमाहन्ति, तदा धारका-धरति लिङ्गमिति धारका-योनिः (वडवेदानी) निगलति-वीर्यं धरति, गल्गलेति शब्दं वा करोति'।

इसपर उत्तर यह है कि—इन अर्थोंके करनेसे यदि श्रीमहीधराचार्यको अपवादित किया जाता है; तो इसका भाव यह हुआ कि—वेदमें तथाकथित अश्लील वर्णन नहीं हो सकता। पर ऐसा कहना अज्ञान है। वेदमें सर्वाङ्गीणता होती है। सर्वाङ्गतामें सब कुछ होता है। यदि वेदमें ऐसे वर्णन अश्लील माने जावें; तो 'रेतो मूत्रं विजहाति योनिं प्रविशदिन्द्रियम्' (यजु: १९।७६) इस मन्त्रका अर्थ आर्यसमाजी-आचार्य अपने पास वेद पढ़नेवाली १७।२४ वर्षकी कुमारियोंको क्या बताते हैं? 'यस्यां बीजं मनुष्या वपन्ति। यस्यामुशन्तः प्रहराम शेपं' (ऋ० १०।८५।३७) इस मन्त्रका अर्थ कुमारियोंको क्या पढ़ाते हैं? या विवाहित हो रही हुईको स्पष्ट बताते हैं? 'मेढ्रं ते शुन्धामि पायुं ते शुन्धामि' (यजु० ६।१४) इस मन्त्रका अर्थ कुमारियोंको क्या पढ़ाते हैं? क्या यह तथाकथित अश्लीलता है या नहीं?

Sex Positions

Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 6.4.9-10 "If a man desires his wife with the thought: "May she enjoy love with me." Then, after inserting the member in her, joining mouth to mouth and stroking her organ, he should utter the following mantra "O semen, you have been produced from my every limb...Bring this women under my control, like a deer pierced by a poisoned arrow." Now, the wife whome he desires with the thought: "May she not conceive"- after inserting the member in her and joining mouth to mouth, she should inhale and exhale, repeating the following mantra: "with power, with semen, I reclaim the semen from you." Thus she comes to be without semen."

There is another verse in Brihadaranyaka Upanishad which is based on Vedas,

Atharva Veda 14.2.71 "O bride, I am Amah and you are Saa I am Saman and you are Rik and I am sun and you earth. Let both of us unite together and procreate progeny."

Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 6.4.20-22 Then he embraces her, repeating the following mantra: I am the vital breath and you are speech. You are speech and I am the vital breath. I am Saman and you are Rig; I am heaven and you are earth. Come, let us strive together so that we may have a male child." Then he spreads apart her thighs, repeating the following mantra: "Spread yourselves apart, Heaven and Earth." Inserting the member in her and joining mouth to mouth, he strokes her three times from head to foot, repeating the following mantra:" Let Vishnu make the womb capable of bearing a son! Let Tvashtra shape the various limbs of the child! Let Prajapati pour in the semen! Let Dhatra support the embryo! O Sinivali, make her conceive; O goddess whose glory is widespread, make her conceive! May the two Atvins, garlanded with lotuses, support the embryo! "Let the two Atvins chum the womb with the two golden arani sticks! I am placing a seed in your womb to be delivered in the tenth month. As the earth has fire in its womb, as heaven is pregnant with the sun, as the quarters are impregnated by air, so I am impregnating you by placing this seed in your womb." After the reciting of the mantra, he utters his own name and that of his wife and places the seed."

The Padma Purana also shows vulgarity,

Padma Purana II.53.98-109 "...O messenger, the organs of generation of the male and also of the female throb. Then the male and the female, being inflamed with passion, unite. The body (of the male) is rubbed with the body (of the female). Due to coitus a momentary pleasure is produced..."

Padma Purana V.100.59b-77 "...O king, there is the itching for sex in all beings. The penis of the man expands, so also the vulva of the woman. The woman and the man, getting mad, are then united. Due to rubbing of one body with another, there is a momentary pleasure..."

Refutation-

Addressing the allegations regarding Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 6.4.9–10 and 6.4.20–22 — the context in these passages is clearly about the Garbhādhāna Saṃskāra (conception rite) and the process of reproduction aimed at obtaining progeny. As I have already established earlier in this article, Sanātana Dharma permits sexual intercourse solely for the purpose of begetting children in accordance with dharmic injunctions, and never as an act driven by lustful desires or mere sensual gratification.

Srimad Bhagvatam 11.5.13

The smelling of wine (in the Sautrāmani sacrifice) is laid down as its intake (and no drinking of liquor is permitted); a beast is to be (symbolically) offered to the deities (by touching it) in sacrifices, but no killing for meat-eating is allowed; simi-larly, sexual intercourse (with one's wife) is to be indulged in for procreation but not for sexual enjoyment. But people do not understand this pure course of their own dharma.

Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 6th Adhaya 4th Brahmana Geeta Press Gorakhpur

जिस प्रकार जन्म लेनेवाला, जिस विधिसे उत्पन्न किया हुआ अथवा जिन गुणोंसे विशिष्टताको प्राप्त हुआ पुत्र अपने तथा पिताके लिये लोक-परलोकमें हितकारी होता है; वैसे पुत्रकी उत्पत्ति कैसे हो? यह बतानेके लिये अथवा ऐसे पुत्रकी प्राप्तिके उपायका सम्पादन करनेके लिये यह चतुर्थ ब्राह्मण प्रारम्भकिया जाता है। जिस प्राणोपासक पुरुषने श्रीमन्थ-कर्मका सम्पादन कर लिया है, उसीका पुत्रमन्थ कर्ममें अधिकार है। साधक जब पुत्रमन्थ करना चाहता है तब वह श्रीमन्थ-कर्मका अनुष्ठान करके पत्नीके ऋतुकालकी प्रतीक्षा करता है; यह बात रेतस् (शुक्र) को ओषधि आदिका रसतम (सारतम) बताकर उसकी प्रशंसा करनेसे जानी जाती है

Just as a son—by the manner in which he is born, the method by which he is begotten, or the qualities with which he is endowed—becomes beneficial for both himself and his father in this world and the next, so too arises the question: How should such a son be brought into being? In order to explain this, or to set forth the means for obtaining such a son, this fourth Brāhmaṇa is begun.

Only the son of a Prāṇopāsaka (one devoted to the worship of prāṇa) who has completed the Śrīmantha-karma is entitled to perform the Putramantha-karma. When the aspirant wishes to perform the Putramantha, he first undertakes the Śrīmantha-karma and then waits for his wife's ṛtukāla (the fertile period). This is understood from the praise of retas (semen), which is described as the very essence (sāratama) of plants, herbs, and the like.

Thus, the significance of begetting progeny in Sanātana Dharma stands clearly established.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 6.4.4 — Sexual union, when undertaken for the purpose of begetting progeny, is regarded as a yajña (sacred offering), not as an act for satisfying lust.

निश्चय ही इस मैथुनकर्मको वाजपेयसम्पन्न जाननेवाले अरुणनन्दन उद्दालक कहते हैं, इसे उस रूपमें जाननेवाले मुद्गलपुत्र नाक कहते हैं तथा इसे उक्त रूपमें जाननेवाले कुमारहारित मुनि भी कहते हैं कि 'बहुत-से ऐसे मरणधर्मा नाममात्रके ब्राह्मण हैं, जो निरिन्द्रिय, सुकृतहीन और मैथुन-विज्ञानसे अपरिचित होकर भी मैथुनकर्ममें आसक्तिपूर्वक प्रवृत्त होते हैं, वे परलोकसे भ्रष्ट हो जाते हैं। यदि पत्नीका ऋतुकाल प्राप्त होनेसे पूर्व इस प्राणोपासकका वीर्य अधिक या कम सोते समय अथवा जागते समय गिर जाता है (तो उसे निम्नाङ्कित प्रायश्चित्त करना चाहिये) ॥ ४ ॥

Indeed, this act of intercourse is described by Aruṇānandana Uddālaka, who knows it in the form connected with the Vājapeya (sacrifice); it is described in that form by Naka, son of Mudgala; and in the same way by the sage Kumārahārita. They say: 'There are many such Brahmins, merely so in name, who are subject to death, devoid of the senses (through negligence), devoid of merit, and ignorant of the knowledge of intercourse, yet engage in the act of intercourse with attachment—they become degraded in the next world. If, before the wife's ṛtukāla (fertile period) has arrived, the semen of this worshipper of life (prāṇopāsaka) is discharged—whether in greater or lesser quantity—while sleeping or while awake, (then he should perform the following expiations as prescribed).' ” (Verse 4)

One of the most important rites is the Garbhādhāraṇa Saṃskāra. In Sanātana Dharma, there are sixteen saṃskāras for a human being, among which Garbhādhāraṇa is performed before conceiving a child. This means that during the actual union, this sacrament is carried out with the chanting of mantras to invoke the blessings of God and to obtain virtuous, desired progeny.

यदि माता-पिता केवल कामवासना रक्खेंगे तो उनकी सन्तान भी वैसी ही कामी होगी। अतः गर्भाधानके समय शरीरकी नीरोगताके साथ माता-पिताका मन भी स्वस्थ और धर्मान्वित हो-यह आवश्यक है। तब माता-पिताके विचार गर्भ-समयमें जैसे होंगे – उनका पुत्र भी वैसा ही होगा। जैसे कि सुश्रुतसंहिता शारीर-

"Garbhādhānam prathamatah" (Vyāsa Smṛti 1.16) —
This sacrament is performed for the repayment of the debt to the ancestors (pitṛ-ṛṇa) and for the begetting of a righteous progeny. By this rite, the impurity connected with the seed (bīja) and the womb (garbha) is removed, and the kṣetra (the field — the wife's body) is sanctified. In this, the attitude is not one of lust, but of dharma. It is not a sacrament for the child already born, but a sacrament for the becoming of the child. If care is not taken in this rite, the future of the child is destroyed. From intercourse based on lust, lustful progeny is born; in such a child there is also the danger of future adultery.

When garbhādhāna is performed as a rite according to the law, then —
"Amāvāsyām aṣṭamīṃ ca paurṇamāsīṃ caturdaśīm |
Brahmacārī bhaven nityam apy uta snātako dvijaḥ"
(Manu 4.128)
("Even when his wife's ṛtukāla has arrived, the twice-born who has completed his studentship should observe celibacy on the amāvāsyā (new moon), aṣṭamī (8th lunar day), pūrṇimā (full moon), and caturdaśī (14th lunar day).")

The obligatory observance of such rules of continence during amāvāsyā, aṣṭamī, pūrṇimā, and caturdaśī brings harmony with dharma.

"I am desire (kāma) in beings which is not opposed to dharma, O best of the Bharatas." (Bhagavad Gītā 7.11)
"I am Kandarpa (the god of love) who causes generation according to the injunctions of the scriptures." (Bhagavad Gītā 10.28)

Thus, when it is not opposed to dharma, that very kāma becomes a form of the Lord. This is precisely the time to lay the foundation of the future child's life. At this time, the more pure and holy the mental and physical state of the parents, the more will the child's mind and body be influenced likewise.

If the parents maintain only lust, then their offspring will also be lustful. Therefore, at the time of garbhādhāna, along with the physical health of the body, the parents' mind must also be sound and dharmically oriented — this is essential. Then, whatever the parents' thoughts are during pregnancy, so will be the nature of their son.

Pandit Dinanath Shastri ji in his book Sanatan Dharmlok adds few important points that must be noted and followed while Garbhadhaaran sanskaar otherwise it could affect the future of child.

Coming to Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 6.4.9-10

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 6.4.9–10 forms part of the instructions for Garbhādhāna Saṃskāra, the first of the Vedic conception rites performed to beget righteous and virtuous progeny . In this sacred context, the described physical acts are not for sensual gratification but are procedural elements of a yajña-like union, accompanied by mantras invoking divine blessings for marital harmony and progeny of noble qualities. The imagery, such as the "deer pierced by a poisoned arrow," poetically conveys unwavering affection between husband and wife, essential for the child's upbringing, while verse 10 prescribes a regulated, mantra-based method to avoid conception during in auspicious times. Sanātana Dharma's injunctions — from the Vedas to the Bhagavad Gītā — permit intercourse solely within dharma for progeny, never for lust; thus, interpreting these verses as erotic is a gross misreading that strips them of their ritual, moral, and piritual significance.

Coming to Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 6.4.20-22

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 6.4.20–22 is a detailed liturgical guide for the Garbhādhāna Saṃskāra, the Vedic conception rite performed to beget virtuous progeny, not an erotic manual.. In Sanātana Dharma, as affirmed in Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 11.5.13, Manusmṛti 2.27, and Bhagavad Gītā 7.11, sexual union is sanctioned only within marriage and only for procreation, never for lustful indulgence. These verses meticulously combine ritual actions with sacred mantras — invoking Viṣṇu, Sūrya, Prajāpati, Dhātā, Sinīvālī, and the Aśvins — to sanctify the womb, harmonize the couple with cosmic forces, and ensure auspicious conception. The occasional mention of bodily gestures is procedural, just as other Vedic rites describe physical acts for offering or worship, and gains meaning only within the yajña-like context of the saṃskāra. Misinterpreting these sacramental passages as "sex positions" is a modern distortion that ignores their sacred intent, replacing their spiritual, moral, and ritual depth with a crude, sensationalized reading that demeans a solemn dharmic ceremony.

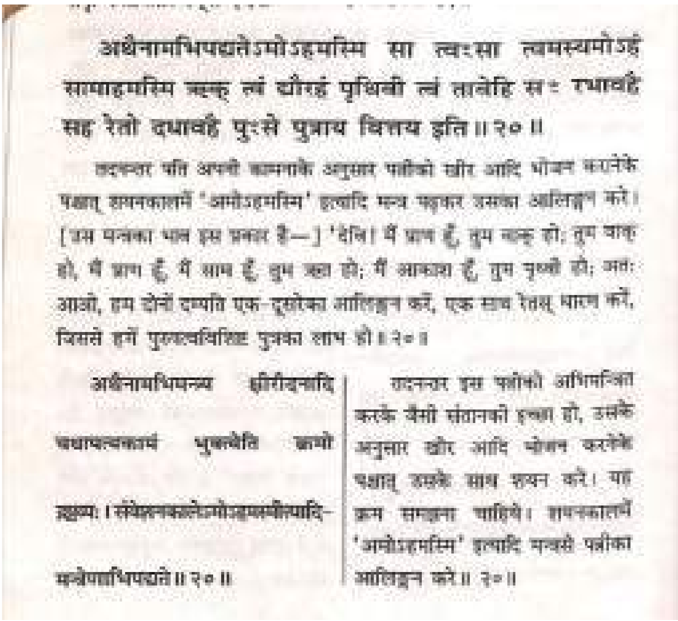
Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 6.4.20-22 Geeta Press Gorakhpur hindi translation-

तदनन्तर पति अपनी कामनाके अनुसार पत्नीको खीर आदि भोजन करानेके पश्चात् शयनकालमें 'अमोऽहमस्मि' इत्यादि मन्त्र पढ़कर उसका आलिङ्गन करे। [उस मन्त्रका भाव इस प्रकार है-] 'देवि! मैं प्राण हूँ, तुम वाक् हो; तुम वाक् हो, मैं प्राण हूँ, मैं साम हूँ, तुम ऋत हो; मैं आकाश हूँ, तुम पृथ्वी हो; अतः आओ, हम दोनों दम्पति एक-दूसरेका आलिङ्गन करें, एक साथ रेतस् धारण करें, जिससे हमें पुरुषत्वविशिष्ट पुत्रका लाभ हो ॥ २० ॥

After that, the husband, according to his wish, should feed his wife with kheer or similar food, and at bedtime, reciting the mantra beginning with "Amo'hamasmi," should embrace her.
[The meaning of that mantra is as follows:]
"O Devi! I am prāṇa (vital breath), you are vāk (speech); you are vāk, I am prāṇa; I am sāma (the Sāma Veda), you are ṛta (cosmic order); I am the sky, you are the earth. Therefore, come, O wife, let us both embrace one another, let us together hold the seed (retas), so that we may obtain a son endowed with manliness." (Verse 20)



अथैनामभिपद्यतेऽमोऽहमस्मि सा त्वं सा त्वमस्यमोऽहं सामाहमस्मि ऋक्त्वं द्यौरहं पृथिवी त्वं तावेहि संरभावहै सह रेतो दधावहै पुंसे पुत्राय वित्तय इति ॥ २० ॥

तदनन्तर इस पत्नीको अभिमन्त्रित करके जैसी संतानकी इच्छा हो, उसके अनुसार खीर आदि भोजन कराके पश्चात् उसके साथ शयन करे। यह क्रम समझना चाहिये। शयनकालमें 'अमोऽहमस्मि' इत्यादि मन्त्रसे पत्नीका आलिङ्गन करे ॥ २० ॥

After that, he should separate the wife's two thighs from each other.
[At that time, he should recite the mantra "Vijihīthāṃ dyāvāpṛthivī iti" — "O Heaven and Earth, in the form of thighs! You two be separated." Then, placing his organ in the wife's vagina, joining his mouth with her mouth, he should, in regular order, stroke the entire body of the wife — from head to feet — three times.]
During the stroking, he should recite the mantra beginning with "Viṣṇur yoniṃ kalpayatu," the meaning of which is as follows:

"O beloved! May the all-pervading Lord Viṣṇu make your generative organ fit for producing a son. May the Sun God form and strengthen the limbs of both you and the child to be born, making them well-shaped and pleasing. May the Cosmic Person, Lord Prajāpati, abiding as one with me, deposit the seed in you. May Lord Dhātā, abiding as one with me, uphold and nourish your embryo. O Devi! You who are Sinīvālī, much praised (the lunar day of Amāvāsyā, when only one digit of the moon remains), sustain this embryo, sustain it. May the twin Aśvins, divine physicians, adorned with garlands of lotus-like rays (of Sun and Moon), abiding as one with me, deposit the embryo in you." (Verse 21)

In ancient times there were radiant, golden araṇis (sacrificial fire-sticks), with which the twin Aśvins churned. From that churning emerged the ambrosia-like embryo. That very ambrosia-like embryo we now place within your womb, so that you may bring it forth in the tenth month. Just as the womb of the earth contains fire, just as the heavenly region is made pregnant by Indra, just as the womb of the quarters contains wind — in the same way, O (name of the) Devi, I place within you the embryo in the form of a son. Moreover, there is no place for "sex positions" or similar notions in Sanatan Dharma, as lust-driven intercourse is clearly condemned in the Shastras. Lust is described as a gateway to hell, leading to moral downfall and spiritual ruin. Sexual union is sanctioned solely for the sacred purpose of conceiving progeny, not for gratifying sensual desire.

The smelling of wine (in the Sautrāmani sacrifice) is laid down as its intake (and no drinking of liquor is permitted); a beast is to be (symbolically) offered to the deities (by touching it) in sacrifices, but no killing for meat-eating is allowed; simi-larly, sexual intercourse (with one's wife) is to be indulged in for procreation but not for sexual enjoyment. But people do not understand this pure course of their own dharma.

Coming on to Allegations on Padma Purana II.53.98-109

The passage from Padma Purāṇa II.53.98-109, when read in full, is not obscene nor intended to depict a “sex position” for titillation; it is part of a moral discourse in Bhūmi-khaṇḍa warning about the fleeting nature of worldly pleasures. The brief, matter-of-fact description of physical union is simply a biological reference used to illustrate that sexual pleasure is momentary, insignificant, and inevitably followed by suffering, decay, and death. Immediately afterward, the text dismisses such enjoyment as trivial compared to the higher pursuit of dharma and liberation, urging detachment from sensual indulgence. Isolating a couple of lines without this context is a deliberate misrepresentation of a philosophical teaching on renunciation.

(89) After that, the body becomes filled with worms and foul odor. Lice and other worms are produced in it.
(90) Those worms cause terrible wounds and itching in the body. The lice cause pain all over the body, making it restless.
(91-92) When scratched with nails, that itching is soothed. Listen—this beautiful body, endowed with such faults, is enjoyed by a man in abundance. The vital wind (prāṇa-vāyu) takes food to the place of digestion.
(93) O messenger! The being carries the food he has eaten to the place of digestion, and the wind turns all that into waste matter.
(94) The essence of it (the food and drink) becomes blood. The pure essence of that blood becomes semen, which goes to the Brahma-sthāna.
(95) Being drawn by the samāna-vāyu, and not obtaining a stable place through that vāyu, it becomes restless.
(96) There are five worms in the cheeks of living beings.

They reside at the root of the two ears, and the remaining are in the eye sockets.

(97-98) O lady! They are the size of the little finger, and their tails are red; those of butter-like color have black tails. O messenger! I shall tell you their names—those in the root of the ears are called Piṅgalī and Śṛṅkhalī.

(99) Those in the tip of the nose are called Capala and Pippala. Śṛṅgalī and Jaṅgalī dwell inside the eyes.

(100) In the same way, about five thousand small worms, the size of mustard seeds, reside inside the forehead.

(101-102) They cause all humans to suffer from head diseases. Two hairs grow inside the mouth. If, even in the Prajāpatya place, hairs grow inside the mouth of a living being, his death is certain.

(103) The semen of that being falls in the mouth in the form of fluid, and he drinks that semen with his mouth. By that, he becomes intoxicated.

(104) Due to restlessness, it remains in the middle of the palate. There, the three nāḍīs called Iḍā, Piṅgalā, and Suṣumṇā are situated.

(105) O messenger! Because of its great strength, all beings experience lust (kāma-kaṇḍūti) in their nāḍīs (subtle channels).

(106) O messenger! Because of it, the male organ and the female organ begin to throb. Because of it, man and woman become agitated, and then they unite.

(107) Due to that union, the body of one rubs against the body of the other, and from that, pleasure arises in the body. After that, the same kind of itching is produced.

(108) O messenger! This same condition is seen everywhere. Now, you may go to your own place. There is nothing extraordinary or novel here. There is nothing unique in me, nor can I produce anything unique.

Allegations-

There is a story of the sun god raping his wife by inserting his male organ into her mouth,

Brahma Purana 4.42-43 "The Lord assumed the form of a horse and approached her as she grazed about fearlessly in the form of a mare. It was in her mouth that he had his sexual intercourse, as she began fidgeting due to her suspicion that he might be a person other than her own husband. She let out the semen of Vivasvat through her nostrils." Tr. Board of Scholars, Edited by J.L. Shastri

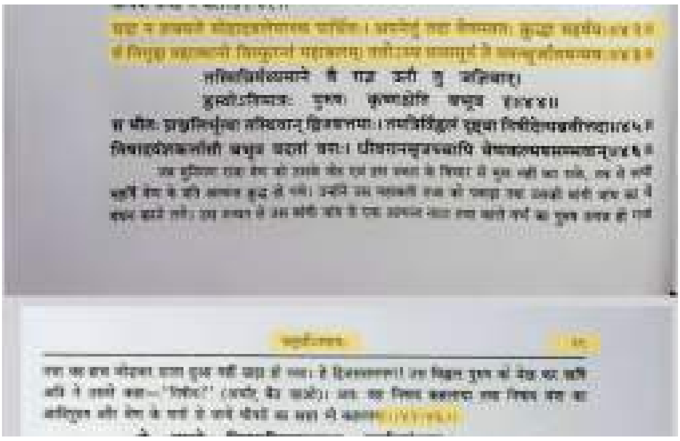
This story is also mentioned in Matsya Purana 11.34-37 and Brahmanda Purana 2.3.59.74-76. This is also mentioned in Nirukta and Vedas although it doesn't give much detail

Refutation-

Here is Brahma Purana 4.42-43 hindi translation by Chaukhamba Publications

जब मुनिगण राजा वेण को उसके मोह एवं इस प्रकार के विचार से मुक्त नहीं कर सके, तब वे सभी महर्षि वेण के प्रति अत्यन्त क्रुद्ध हो गये। उन्होंने उस महाबली राजा को पकड़ा तथा उसकी बांयी जांघ का वे मंथन करने लगे। उस मन्थन से उस बांयी जांघ से एक अत्यन्त नाटा तथा काले वर्ण का पुरुष उत्पन्न हो गया तथा वह हाथ जोड़कर डरता हुआ वहीं खड़ा हो गया। हे द्विजसत्तमगण! उस विह्वल पुरुष को देख कर ऋषि अत्रि ने उससे कहा- "निषीद!" (अर्थात् बैठ जाओ)। अतः वह निषाद कहलाया तथा निषाद वंश का आदिपुरुष और वेण के पापों से जन्मे धीवरों का स्रष्टा भी कहलाया।।४२-४६।।

When the assembly of sages could not free King Veṇa from his attachment and such thoughts, all the great sages became extremely angry with him. They seized the mighty king and began churning his left thigh. From that churning of his left thigh, a very short man of dark complexion emerged, who stood there folding his hands in fear. O best of the twice-born! Seeing this distressed man, Sage Atri said to him: "Nishīd!" (meaning, "Sit down!"). Hence, he was called Nishad, and he became the progenitor of the Nishad lineage as well as the creator of the fishermen, born from the sins of Veṇa.



This is also mentioned in Shiva Purana,

Shiva Purana, UmaSamhita 5.35.32-34 "He assumed the form of a horse and approached her for sexual indulgence with her who could not be overwhelmed by any living being due to her lustre and observance of restraint. O sage, in the course of the sexual activity she suspected him to be another man. Hence she received the semen through the mouth into the nostril.

Refutation-

Coming on to Shiva Purana, UmaSamhita 5.35.32-34 –

According to R.C. Hazra, the Uma Saṁhitā of the Shiva Purāṇa is a very late addition. He notes that it draws heavily from the Jñāna Saṁhitā, which itself is dated to around 950 CE. Based on this, it can be reasonably inferred that the Uma Saṁhitā was incorporated into the Shiva Purāṇa sometime after the 10th century CE.

IV. The Bhaumasaṃhitā,[99] also called Auma/Umāsaṃhitā, is represented in the class B editions only. The text introduces Kṛṣṇa on a visit to Kailāsa and performing penance there to Śiva, in order to obtain a son. He meets Upamanyu, and requests him to tell him about the greatness of Śiva. Upamanyu complies, and praises Śiva and his trident; he extols Śiva's power to save his devotees from hell. This discussion leads into several chapters on different types of sins, and on the description of hell and the suffering in it. Ways to avoid this suffering include gifts of food, performing penance, listening to the purāṇas, etc. The saṃhitā subsequently describes the seven dvīpas of the earth, and other component parts of the universe. It ends with discourses on a variety of topics, such as the development of man, from the foetus, through childhood, youth, marriage, old age, etc.; creation and manvantaras, etc. In Hazra's opinion the text borrows most of its chapters from the Jñānasaṃhitā.

XIII. The Jñānasaṃhitā[illegible] has already been referred to on several occasions in this description of the Śiva°, because, in Hazra's opinion, other saṃhitās borrowed verses and even chapters from it. The text recognizes the Vedas as the highest authority, but it was Śiva, as [illegible], who communicated them to Viṣṇu. Śiva shall be worshiped with Vedic mantras, even though the saṃhitā does not, therefore, reject the authority of the Tantras and eventual Śiva worship with Āgamic rather than Vedic mantras. The nirguṇa Śiva is identical with the parabrahma; in his saguṇa form he manifests himself as Rudra. Prakṛti was born from Śiva's wish, and, from her, were born the other gods including Brahmā and Viṣṇu. This saṃhitā, like some of those discussed earlier, strongly encourages liṅga worship as the ideal way to worship Śiva himself. It urges worship under the guidance of a competent teacher; worship will lead to bhakti, then to jñāna, and, ultimately, to vijñāna, i.e. the realization that the only real thing is Śiva. Hazra points out that the text was influenced by the Kumārasambhava, Raghuvaṃśa, and Kirātārjunīya. He surmises that it may have been composed in Banaras, by someone who was also familiar with the banks of the Narmadā, not before A.D. 950.

The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript (Including Uma Samhita) are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Uma Saṁhitā.

त्वष्टाद्वारा संज्ञाका पता बतला दिये जानेपर वे देवेश्वर भगवान् सूर्य भूलोकमें जा पहुँचे। वहाँ उनके द्वारा संज्ञासे अश्विनीकुमारोंकी उत्पत्ति हुई- यह एकदम तथ्य बात है। संज्ञाकी नासिकाके अग्रभागसे उत्पन्न होनेके कारण वे दोनों नासत्य और दस्त्र नामसे भी विख्यात हुए। कुछ दिनोंके पश्चात् अश्वरूपधारी सूर्यदेवको पहचानकर त्वाष्ट्री (संज्ञा) परम सन्तुष्ट हुई और हर्षपूर्ण चित्तसे पतिके साथ विमानपर बैठकर स्वर्गलोक (आकाश) को चली गयी। (छायाकी संतानोंमें) तपोधन सावर्णि मनु आज भी सुमेरुगिरिपर विराजमान हैं। शनिने अपनी तपस्याके प्रभावसे ग्रहोंकी समता प्राप्त की।

After Tvaṣṭṛ revealed the identity, the lord of the gods, Surya, reached the earthly realm. There, through her, the Ashvini Kumāras were born—this is an established fact. Since they emerged from the front part of her nose, they also became famous by the names Nāstya and Dāstra. After a few days, recognizing the horse-shaped Surya Deva, Tvaṣṭṛ's daughter (Sanjñā) was fully satisfied, and with a joyful heart, she boarded a celestial vehicle with her husband and went to Svarga-loka (heaven). Among the children of Chhāyā, Tapodhana Sāvarṇi Manu still reigns on Mount Sumeru. Shani attained equality among the planets through the influence of his penance.

In Nirukta 12.10 (Hindi translation, Chaukhamba Publications), the birth of the Ashvinī Kumāras is described from the Ashva-rūpa Āditya (Sun) and Saraṇyū. The text itself defines Saraṇyū not as a mortal woman, but as a personification of a cosmic phenomenon—specifically, the shadow or night that follows when Prabhā (light) departs from the Earth. It states that the period of Saraṇyū lies between Vṛṣākapāyī and Uṣā, meaning after the evening twilight and before the morning twilight. Āditya here refers to the Sun, which is also a celestial deity, not a human being. This makes it absolutely clear that the account is symbolic and cosmological, involving deified natural forces—not a literal human relationship—thus the vulgar interpretations pushed by detractors are baseless distortions of Vedic metaphor.

They hide the reddish light of dawn (called Vṛṣākapāyinī) — the early light seen at sunrise.

From whom is it hidden?
From humans — meaning, ordinary people can't see or grasp that divine light clearly.

Later, another form, similar in color and name, was made — called Saraṇyū. When the reddish dawn (Aruṇa) appears, the light of Saraṇyū is given again by the sun's rays, making it more visible.

That light is then carried by the Ashvin twins, not in a physical way, but meaning they hold within themselves both darkness and light — they are a balance of night and day.

That reddish form of dawn gradually becomes more and more bright as the sun rises.

Now, the two twins (male and female — Yama and Yamī) represent this dual nature, and even middle speech (the kind of speech that exists between thought and voice) is connected with this form. So, this reddish form includes three things: form, duality, and speech.

In this Vedic verse (ṛc), Tvaṣṭā is in the middle portion (madhyamastama-bhāgaḥ – middle-most part), and his daughter is Uṣas (the dawn).
Since she is born at sunrise, she is carried or enters (vahati) into the Sun (āditya) — thus the 'marriage' is symbolic of union.

The Sun (Tvaṣṭā or Vivasvat), by entering the night (his daughter in the form of darkness or Uṣas), 'performs the act' (karoti) — this represents the transition between night and day.

Therefore, this entire world (sarvaṁ bhūtajātaṁ) comes together (sameti) and unites with its respective actions (svaiḥ karmabhiḥ saṁbadhyate).
As the dawn rises, darkness fades; hence at sunrise (udite uṣasi), darkness (tam) disappears, and the Sun rises (udeti ādityaḥ).

This belief or metaphysical understanding leads all living beings (sarvaprāṇinaḥ) to begin performing their natural duties or actions (svakarmāṇi).
That is the meaning here: the cosmic process inspires action.

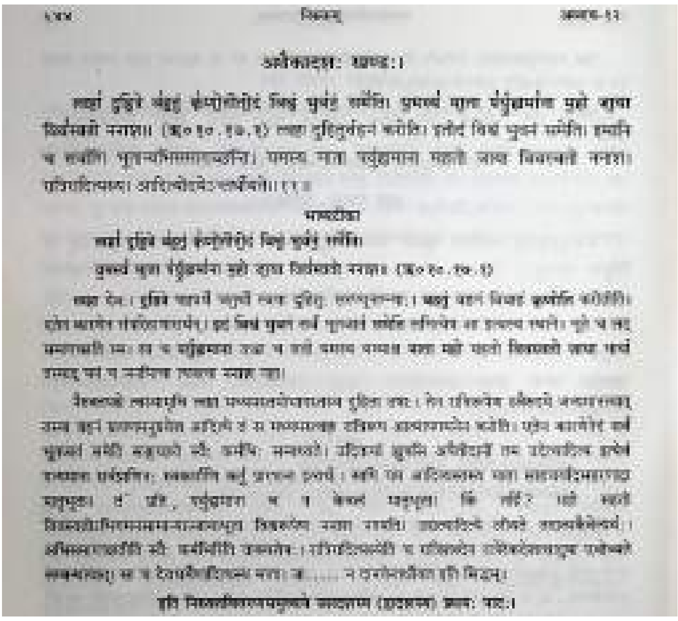
Thus, the Sun (Yama āditya) has his 'mother' in this symbolic relationship — either due to companionship (sāhacaryāt) or the act of essence transfer (rasa-haraṇa – absorption of essence).
She becomes his 'mother', but not only in that sense.

What more?
Because of shared union (abhigamana-sāmānyāt) with Vivasvat, she becomes his wife (jāyā) — and, as Viśvarūpā (universal form), she disappears (nanāśa), gets dissolved.
When the Sun rises, she merges into it — meaning she dissolves into that very form.

"Abhisamāgacchatīti svaiḥ karmabhiriti vākyasheṣaḥ" – She enters or unites, the sentence implies, with her own natural actions.

Also: "rātriḥ ādityasya" — the night is said to belong to the Sun, and by the term 'rātri' (night), since Uṣas (dawn) is a part of it (eka-deśa), she is being referred to here.
Owing to this relationship, she is called his mother by divine law (deva-dharma).

She is born… (ja—) but not to be given as a gift (na dāna-yena antar-dhīyata) – i.e., she is not transferred in the ordinary worldly sense, hence her transcendental or divine nature is established (iti siddham).



Surya (Sun) is called Ashwaroop in Shastras as the rays of Sun travel fastly like Ashwa. Rig Veda 1/50/8 says Sun travels by 7 Horses kama Sutra 2.9 When, holding the man's lingam with his hand, and placing it between his lips, the eunuch moves about his mouth, it is called the 'nominal congress'. When, covering the end of the lingam with his fingers collected together like the bud of a plant or flower, the eunuch presses the sides of it with his lips, using his teeth also, it is called 'biting the sides'. When, being desired to proceed, the eunuch presses the end of the lingam with his lips closed together, and kisses it as if he were drawing it out, it is called the 'outside pressing'. When, being asked to go on, he puts the lingam further into his mouth, and presses it with his lips and then takes it out, it is called the 'inside press

Refutation-

The Kamasutra is not a dharmic text. Its primary focus is on sexual activity, disregarding the principles of Dharma. According to the Shastras, sexual intercourse is prescribed not for mere pleasure or recreation, but solely for the purpose of procreation. In contrast, texts like the Kamasutra reduce sexual activity to acts of lust and indulgence, promoting pleasure as an end in itself rather than fulfilling dharmic duties.

Srimad Bhagvatam 11.5.13

The smelling of wine (in the Sautrāmani sacrifice) is laid down as its intake (and no drinking of liquor is permitted); a beast is to be (symbolically) offered to the deities (by touching it) in sacrifices, but no killing for meat-eating is allowed; simi-larly, sexual intercourse (with one's wife) is to be indulged in for procreation but not for sexual enjoyment. But people do not understand this pure course of their own dharma.

Oral/anal sex (with wife), releasing semen in other jātīs or animals is punished in Yamaloka by having to drink semen for '000s of years

Brihannardiyapuranam, Purvabhaga, Chapter 15 slokas 93-94 –

जो मनुष्य अयोनि, वियोनि और पशुयोनि में वीर्य त्याग करता है। वह हापापो उसी वीर्य को पीता है। तदन्तर वसा कूप नरक में जाकर देवताओं के वर्ष के प्रमाण से सात वर्ष तक हता है। फिर वीर्यभोजो मनुष्य होकर सब लोकों में निन्दित होता है।

जो महापापी अयोनि (योनिसे भिन्न स्थान), वियोनि (विजातीय योनि) और पशुयोनिमें वीर्यत्याग करता है, वह यमलोकमें वीर्य ही भोजनके लिये पाता है। तत्पश्चात् चर्बीसे भरे हुए कुएँमें डाला जाकर वहाँ सात दिव्य वर्षोंतक केवल वीर्य भोजन करके रहता है। उसके बाद मनुष्य होकर सम्पूर्ण लोकोंमें निन्दाका पात्र बनता है। राजन्!

The great sinner who releases semen in the ayoni (place different from the vagina), the viyoni and the animal vagina, finds only semen for food in Yamaloka. Then he is thrown into a well filled with fat and remains there for seven divine years eating only semen. After that, he becomes a human being and becomes the object of condemnation in all the worlds

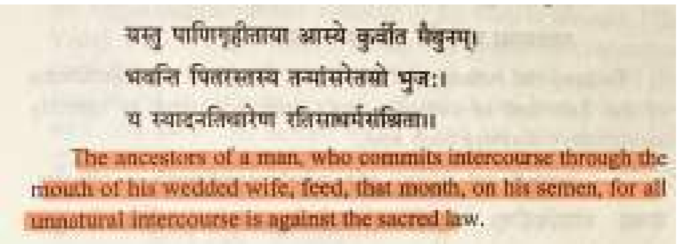
If a man performs sex in his wife’s mouth, then his ancestors have to drink semen during that month.

Vasiṣṭha Smṛti, 12.21-22

The ancestors of a man, who commits intercourse through the mouth of his wedded wife, feed, that month, on his semen, for all unnatural intercourse is against the sacred law.

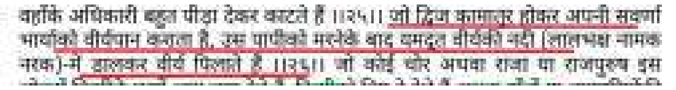


The ancestors of a man, who commits intercourse through the mouth of his wedded wife, feed, that month, on his semen, for all unnatural intercourse is against the sacred law.

Srimad Bhagvatam 5.26.26

जो द्विज कामातूर होकर अपनी सवर्णा भार्याको वीर्यपान कराता है, उस पापीको मरनेके बाद यमदूत वीर्यकी नदी (लालभक्ष नामक नरक) में डालकर वीर्य पिलाते हैं ।।२६

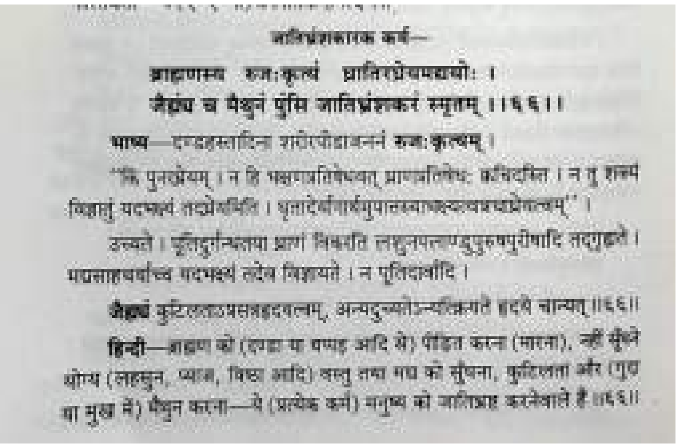
"A twice-born man who, driven by lust, causes his same-caste wife to drink his semen — after death, the messengers of Yama cast that sinner into the hell called Lālabhakṣa, a river of semen, where he is forced to drink semen as punishment."



Manu Smriti 11.66

हिन्दी-ब्राह्मण को (दण्डा या थप्पड़ आदि से) पीड़ित करना (मारना), नहीं सूँघने योग्य (लहसुन, प्याज, विष्ठा आदि) वस्तु तथा मद्य को सुँघना, कुटिलता और (गुदा या मुख में) मैथुन करना-ये (प्रत्येक कर्म) मनुष्य को जातिभ्रष्ट करनेवाले हैं ।।।६६

"To cause harm (such as by stick or slap) to a Brahmana, to smell items that are considered unsmellable (like garlic, onion, feces, etc.), to smell intoxicating drinks, to engage in deceit, and to perform intercourse via the anus or mouth — each of these actions causes a person to lose their caste (i.e., leads to social/religious degradation or loss of purity)." ॥66॥



Mahanirvana Tantra 11.44 states that punishment for un-natural intercourse with woman is death sentence –

गच्छतां कामतः पुंसः स्त्रियाः पायुं दुरात्मनाम् । वध एव विधातव्यो भूभृता शम्भुशासनात् ॥४४॥

The punishment of those wicked men who have un-natural intercourse with a woman is death; this is the injunction of Shambhu (44).

The punishment of those wicked men who have unnatural intercourse' with a woman is death; this is the injunction of Shambhu (44).

Baudhayana Dharamsutra 3.7.2

One who does not have sex with his wife during her season, and one who has sex with her outside her season, as also one who deposits his semen in a place other than the vagina --they all incur the same guilt.

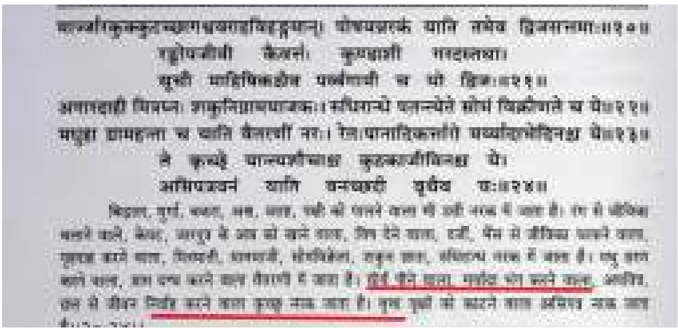
Apastamba Dharmasutra 1.19.15

A man who ejaculates his semen in any place other than the vagina becomes equal to a thief, equal to a murderer of a Brahmin

Brahma Purana Purvabhag Chapter 22 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications slokas 20-24

वीर्य पीने वाला, मर्यादा भंग करने वाला, अपवित्र, छल से जीवन निर्वाह करने वाला कृच्छ्र नरक जाता है।

“One who drinks semen, violates moral boundaries, is impure, and lives by deceit goes to Kṛcchra hell.”



Allegations-

Masturbation

The Padma Purana clearly shows how a woman masturbates, but why the word of god should do that?

Padma Purana V.112.23a-33a “On the death of the husband before (her death) she should not enter fire (with the thought) 'In my widowhood, all this wealth will be useful for my religious merit.' Resolving like this with (i.e. in) her mind, when widowhood has come, she, when she gets and itching of the vulva (i.e. has a desire for sex) by day or at night, she said (i.e. would say), after having gone to a lonely place and after having uncovered (i.e. taken off) her garment, to her vulva these words, through grief, and with her hand on her generative organ: "O vulva, what have you done? What sin have you committed? Or is it the sin of the penis due to having got into you? Or is it the sin of the doer due to avoiding service like me?" Even then when the itch is produced, she would put her finger (into her vulva); and due to the feeling of the itch she would do strange movements after that. Having rubbed it with her hands, having struck it and having expanded it, she, being extremely pained, repeatedly shook her feet. She, after having embraced the (piece of) wood of the cot, and pressed her breasts (against it) as she liked, became sad due to peculiar disposition of her mind…" Tr. Board of Scholars; G.V. Tagare

Mahabharata 3.224.7 "Markandeya continued, 'Then Agni, filled with great joy and delight, married Swaha in the guise of Siva, and that lady joyfully cohabiting with him, held the semen virile in her hands." Tr. K.M. Ganguli

Kama Sutra 5.6 The women of the royal harem cannot see or meet any men on account of their being strictly guarded, neither do they have their desires satisfied, because their only husband is common to many wives. For this reason among themselves they give pleasure to each other in various ways as now described. Having dressed the daughters of their nurses, or their female friends, or their female attendants, like men, they accomplish their object by means of bulbs, roots, and fruits having the form of the lingam, or they lie down upon the statue of a male figure, in which the lingam is visible and erect.

Refutation-

Here is Padma Purana Patala Khanda Chapter 112 hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications

This passage does not promote masturbation or sexual indulgence in any form. Instead, it is a stern moral narrative that condemns the behavior of a lustful, adulterous woman who, driven by unrestrained desires and attachment to wealth, abandons dharma (righteous conduct).

The vivid descriptions within the passage are not prescriptions or endorsements — rather, they are deliberate literary devices used to highlight the consequences of uncontrolled lust, betrayal, and moral downfall. These depictions aim to:

- Show how unchecked desire can lead to the breakdown of trust in marriage.
- Expose how wealth and independence, when not guided by restraint or ethics, may lead to deviant behavior.
- Critique the destructive cycle of infidelity, deceit, and loss of honor in society.
- Emphasize that such women ultimately fall into self-degradation, shame, and social ruin.

Specifically:

- Acts like touching or rubbing the yoni, or using fingers, are portrayed with disgust and pity, not as expressions of liberation or sexuality.
- These are shown as symptoms of despair and internal torment, not as healthy or acceptable behaviors.
- The passage ultimately calls out such women as dhṛṣṭāḥ (shameless) and vyabhicāriṇī (adulteresses) who lose their place in both domestic life and dharmic society.

The story culminates with Shoṇa rejecting the woman, symbolizing society's disapproval, and the demon Mārīcha's deception showing how such women become vulnerable to demonic (adharmic) influences.

सदा सावधान रहने वाले आपका महा अनर्थ भी हो सकता है। देखा जाता है कि जिस मनुष्य के पास धन होता है, उसको भोग प्राप्त करने का लालच बढ़ जाती है ॥१३॥ एक भोग को प्राप्त करने के बाद दूसरे भोग को प्राप्त करने की इच्छा होने लगती है। उससे समस्त अनुष्ठानों का नाश हो जाता है। यदि नारी उसको अपने भाग्ययोम से प्राप्त जान लेती हैं तो फिर नारी स्वतंत्र बन जाती है और क्रोध के द्वारा प्राप्त अर्थ का प्रचार करने लग जाती है। रोष होने पर उस पर विश्वास होता है और उसके बाद उसमें पूर्वोक्त दोष आ जाते हैं ।।१४-१५॥ विश्वास युक्त नारी पर पुरुष का विश्वास हो जाता है, और वह प्रवास में चला जाता है अथवा उसका मन अन्य में लग जाता है। विश्वास करने के कारण नारियाँ अनेक प्रकार की बुरी चेष्टायें करने लग जाती हैं ।॥१६॥ वह जिस किसी भी युवक पुरुष को देखकर उसके साथ प्रेम करने लगती हैं। प्रेम के कारण दोनों का मिलन होता है और मिलने के बाद वह उसके साथ मैथुन करने लग जाती है ।।१७।। निरन्तर मैथुन करने पर विश्वास में अन्तर आ जाता है। आपने भी वैसा पहले भोग किया है और इस समय उसका भोग कर रहे हैं ॥१८॥ उसके कारण वह पति की प्रतीक्षा नहीं करती है, अथवा किसे में भी (पति का) प्रेम नहीं होता है। चतुर नारियों का कोई भी स्नेहिल नहीं होती है, वह अपने पुरुष के अतिरिक्त दूसरे पुरुष के साथ चलने लगती हैं ।। १९। जिन वाक्यों को आपने मुझसे कहा है उस वाक्य को कोई भी अपनी स्त्री को कहता है। मैं वैसी ही बातें कह रही हूँ, मैं कोई इधर-उधर की बात (फालतूबात) नहीं कह रही हूँ ॥२०॥ इस तरह से नारी धृष्ठ (ढीठ) हो जाती है अथवा दूसरे प्रकार से वह धृष्ट हो जाती है। वह कुछ धन लेकर स्वतन्त्र बन जाती है ॥२१॥ वह जिसके साथ व्यवहार करती है वह उसको मारकर उसके द्रव्य को लेकर उसको कहीं फेंक देता है। यदि पहले पति मर जाता है तो अग्नि में प्रवेश नहीं करती है ।। २२।। वह सोचती है कि विधवा हो जाने पर सारा मेरा धन धर्मार्थ हो जायेगा। विधवा हो जाने पर इस तरह से मन में निश्चित करके वह दिन अथवा रात में योनि रूपी कुण्ड को प्राप्त करके वह दिन अथवा रात्रि में एकान्त में जाकर अपने वस्त्र तथा योनि को खोलकर ।।२३-२४।। योनि पर हाथ रखकर दुःखी होकर कहती है कि अरे योनि तुमने कैसा कर्म किया है ? तुमने भयङ्कर पाप किया है ॥२५॥ क्योंकि तुमने दूसरे शिश्न को अपने भीतर प्रवेश कराया है। इस पाप कार्य को करने वाले ने मेरी सेवा भी नहीं की ॥२६॥ इतना होने पर भी यदि उसकी योनि में खुजली पैदा होती है तो वह अपनी अङ्गुलि को अपनी योनि में डाल देती है और वह खुजली की बुद्धि से विचित्र प्रकार के चेष्टायें करती हैं ।॥ २७॥ वह योनि को दोनों हाथों से फैलाकार उसको रगड़ती है। अत्यन्त दुःखी होकर वह अपने मुख को खोलकर बार-बार अपने दोनों पैरों को पटकती है ॥२८॥ वह काठ अथवा खाट को पकड़ कर अपनी इच्छा भर स्तनों को दबाती है। उसके पश्चात् चित्त में विकार आ जाने पर वह व्यभिचारिणी हो जाती है ॥ २९॥ अथवा दिन में किसी पुरुष के साथ बातें करती है, घर में रात्रि में या संध्या के समय, या विशिखाओं (गलियों) में अपना दूसरा वेष बदलकर जिस किसी व्यक्ति के द्वारा उपभोग की जाती है। अथवा वाच्य (निन्दा) के प्रभाव से शङ्कित होकर वह योग्य व्यक्ति को अपने घर लाती है ॥३०-३१॥ वह अज्ञात घर में जाकर निश्चित रूप से उसके साथ रमण करती है। नारी के सामने धन प्राप्त होने पर ये ही सारी बातें होती हैं ।।॥३२॥ अतएव मेरे साथ आपको विचार करने की कोई आवश्यकता नहीं है। शोण ने कहा- निस्सन्देह तुम्हारी बातें सत्य हैं। तुम यहाँ से दूर चली जाओ ।॥३३॥ अब मैं यहाँ ठहर कर बाद में मलमूत्र का त्याग करने के लिए जाऊँगा। उसके चले जाने पर शोण ने अपने कपड़े के टुकड़े कर दिए ॥३४॥ वह एक-एक टुकड़े मे बहुत अधिक धन ले लिया। उसने बालु में घुटने-घुटने पर कई स्थानों पर गढा बनाया ॥३५॥ उसमें धन को गाड़ करके उसको रखकर उसके ऊपर विष्ठा कर दिया । उसके बाद जिस घड़े में धन था उसको कहीं फेंक दिया ॥३६॥ इन समस्त कार्यों को अज्ञात के समान करके वह स्नान करने के लिए चला गया। उसकी पत्नी तब तक स्नान करके तथा पार्वतीजी की पूजा करके आयी ॥३७॥ उसको पति ने कहा कि तुम जाओ और वह अपने घर चली गयी। उसको अकेली समझकर मारीच नामक राक्षस ॥३८॥ उसके पति का रूप बनाकर कला से कहा। मारीच ने कहा-सप्त गोदावरी नदी के तट पर पापों को विनष्ट करने वाला पवित्र द्राक्षाराम है। वहाँ पर भीम नामक शङ्करजी का लिङ्ग स्वयं स्थित है। वह मनुष्यों को भोग तथा मोक्ष प्रदान करने वाले हैं तथा स्मरण करने मात्र से पापों का विनाश करने वाले हैं ॥ ३९-४०।। हम दोनों वहाँ शीघ्र चलें, हे सुन्दरि ! तुम आगे निकलो। कला ने कहा- अभी तुम अभिषेक करने वाले थे और अभिषेक भी नहीं किए ॥४१॥ ऐसा अपने पहले कभी नहीं कहा था आज आप ऐसा क्यों कह रहे हैं? उत्तम पुरुषों का कहना है कि प्रकृत का परित्याग करने से उत्पात होता है ॥४२॥ मारीच ने कहा- नारीयों

का यही धर्म है कि वे कभी भी पति के मन के प्रतिकूल कार्य न करें। प्रतिकूल हो अथवा अनुकूल हो मुझको शीघ्र बतलाओ ।।।४३।। उसके बाद

The one who is always cautious may also experience great misfortune. It is seen that when a person has wealth, the desire to enjoy pleasures increases. (Verse 13)
After obtaining one pleasure, the desire for another arises. This leads to the destruction of all rituals and duties. If a woman considers a man to be destined for her due to fate, she becomes independent and begins to openly declare the wealth acquired through anger. (Verses 14–15)
Due to her trust, the man believes in her and either goes away or loses interest in her. Because of the trust placed in them, women begin to engage in many improper activities. (Verse 16)
She falls in love with any young man she sees. Because of love, they unite, and after uniting, they engage in sexual intercourse. (Verse 17)
With continued intercourse, the trust begins to break down. You too have had such enjoyment before, and even now you are enjoying it. (Verse 18)
As a result, the woman no longer waits for her husband nor feels love for anyone. Clever women are never affectionate—they start associating with other men besides their own. (Verse 19)
The words you said to me are the same that any man would say to his wife. I am only speaking such things—I am not saying anything irrelevant or senseless. (Verse 20)
Thus, a woman becomes bold (or shameless), or she becomes bold in another way. She takes some money and becomes independent. (Verse 21)
She interacts with someone who then kills her, takes her wealth, and throws her somewhere. If her first husband dies, she does not enter the fire (with his corpse). (Verse 22)
She thinks—"If I become a widow, all my wealth will go to charity." So thinking this, whether day or night, she secretly goes to a place resembling a yoni (vaginal-shaped pit), disrobes, and exposes her private parts. (Verses 23–24)
She places her hand over her yoni and says in anguish, "O yoni! What deed have you done? You have committed a terrible sin!" (Verse 25)
"For you have allowed another man's organ to enter you. The one who did this sinful act didn't even care for me." (Verse 26)
Even after all this, if itching arises in her private part, she inserts her finger into it and performs strange acts to relieve it. (Verse 27)
She spreads her private part with both hands and rubs it. Overwhelmed with pain, she opens her mouth and repeatedly strikes her legs. (Verse 28)
She holds onto a cot or a piece of wood and squeezes her breasts to her desire. After her mind becomes agitated, she turns to adultery. (Verse 29)
Or, during the day she talks to some man; at night or in the evening, or in secret alleys, she changes her appearance and lets herself be enjoyed by some man. Or, fearing slander, she brings a suitable man into her home. (Verses 30–31)
She goes to an unknown house and certainly copulates with him. When women have access to wealth, these things happen. (Verse 32)
Therefore, there is no need for you to think further about me. Shoṇa said—"Indeed, what you've said is true. Now go far away from here." (Verse 33)

"Now I will remain here and later go to relieve myself." After she left, Shoṇa tore pieces of his cloth. (Verse 34)
In each piece, he took a lot of money and dug several knee-deep pits in the sand. (Verse 35)
He buried the money in those pits, covered them with excrement, and then threw away the pot that held the money. (Verse 36)
Doing all of this as if in secrecy, he went to bathe. Meanwhile, his wife had bathed and completed her worship of Goddess Pārvatī. (Verse 37)
Her husband told her to go home, and she returned home. Thinking she was alone, the demon Mārīcha, (Verse 38) disguised in her husband's form, said to Kalā, "On the banks of the sacred Seven Godāvarī Rivers lies the holy Drākṣārāma, destroyer of sins. There stands the self-manifested Liṅga of Lord Shiva named Bhīma, who grants both pleasure and liberation to humans and destroys sins merely by remembrance." (Verses 39–40)
"Let us quickly go there together. O beautiful one, you lead the way."
Kalā replied—"You were just about to perform the sacred bath, but you haven't done it yet." (Verse 41)
"You have never spoken like this before. Why are you saying this now? It is said by noble people that abandoning one's natural behavior causes upheaval." (Verse 42)
Mārīcha said—"It is the dharma of women that they never go against the wishes of their husbands. Whether it is agreeable or not, tell me quickly." (Verse 43)

Further Maheshwar Tejas is not Mortal Human semen either –

Is Maheshwar Shiva Tejas mortal Human Semen . No ! First of all Shastras itself describe about the body of Maheshwar Shiva as the cosmic universe itself not a human like body – Srimad Bhagvatam 8/7/27-30

Kataka Commentary on Valmiki Ramayana Bala Kanda Sarga 36 sloka 12 too says that Tejas of Shiva is the Energy of Shiva and Uma which is held within the Aditya Mandala (Constellation of the Sun)which if released unnecessarily could destroy the universe . Whereas mortal human semen is made and stored in blood muscles and veins . This also proves that Maheshwar Shiva Tejas is his Divine Energy and not mortal human semen

Then what should be done? The gods advise Siva to perform the Brahma tapas along with Uma. What is the use of the Brahma tapas and why should Siva perform it? Because he might be able to secure his seed. In the beginning of conception we have an embryo. The semen remains over all parts of the body and soul. "Hold your mercurial semen within the sahaja eight-fold yoga" said the gods. But then the question arises about the effect of holding the semen through sahaja yoga in the body? The answer is it will save the world. It is said that the semen, of the Brahman is held within the Aditya mandala (in the constellation of the Sun) and it saves the worlds. If it is released, like Siva's semen the worlds will be destroyed.Hence 'Na alokam kartumarhasi'. So Siva accepted their plea. All the gods are his limbs and if the limbs are destroyed and he will become a branchless trunk (Sthanu). So, he said "All right! I shall hold my seed and so shall Uma. The gods and earth can be happy now. Uma will hold her seed in the fire". It is said in the Vedas that the menstrual flow in the women is a form of Agni. Siva will hold his seed in water. If their seed falls on the earth, it will burn the entire world and even the gods. "Therefore, to protect them, we shall hold our seed." But stirred by long love the semen will drop from its place .It is in the form of moisture and infallible and the best one capable of giving birth to a son who will be able to fulfil gods' requirement. Who will be able to hold it? Saying this Siva released his seed with which the entire earth along with all its mountains and forests became filled.

should Siva perform it? Because he might be able to secure his seed. In the beginning of conception we have an embryo. The semen remains over all parts of the body and soul. Tilaka Commentary on Valmiki Ramayana Sarga 36 too states that Maheshwar Shiva Tejas is his and Uma Devi's Energy only which Agni Deva received and not any mortal human semen

If lord Siva bears his energy in his own self, of what use is it to the world? The scriptures say 'what is in man in the form of semen is the form of energy in the Sun. That form of energy is light which is the disc of the Sun itself. In that circle the whole world is being protected, if the reverse happens, there will be a calamity (Viparyaye Viparyaya).' If the sun perishes the whole world will collapse.
Siva says, 'I along with Uma, will bear the fire of my energy in my own self'. So he bears the semen. It will turn into fire (blood) in women. Since this world cannot withstand the extraordinary energy, if released, there would be devastation. This is the sense.
The gods said, 'This earth will bear it because it has unlimited power of forbearance'. This is the implied sense. The gods engaged Agni to receive the energy released on the earth as he is the lord and well-wisher of the earth. The wind which accompanied him helped him move. That energy acquired the form of the white mountain and having entered the earth by means of Agni, was moving (as he carried it). Then that energy got the form of a thicket of needles like the fire of the Sun at the place of its entry as a result of its greatness. Since Agni carried the energy for some time, it should be noted, Karttikeya originated from Agni. There was joy among the gods that Siva's energy was borne for the benefit of the world and that the energy that fell transformed into Kartikeya for the sake of the gods. But there was anger in Uma, for Siva did not accept Uma engaged in his worship. She cursed the Earth, saying 'Be not in one form. May you give fruits for a variety of seeds in the ame field. Be wife to many husbands (Lords of the earth or kings).

The implication is, 'If only she (earth) had not conceded to bear the energy of Siva, Uma would have received it. She would have had that son'.

Story of Uma 1.36.8-27

If lord Siva bears his energy in his own self, of what use is it to the world? The scriptures say 'what is in man in the form of semen is the form of energy in the Sun. That form of energy is light which is the disc of the Sun itself. In that circle the whole world is being protected, if the reverse happens, there will be a calamity (Viparyaye Viparyaya).' If the sun perishes the whole world will collapse.

Siva says, 'I along with Uma, will bear the fire of my energy in my own self'. So he bears the semen. It will turn into fire (blood) in women. Since this world cannot withstand the extraordinary energy, if released, there would be devastation. This is the sense.

The gods said, 'This earth will bear it because it has unlimited power of forbearance'. This is the implied sense. The gods engaged Agni to receive the energy released on the earth as he is the lord and well wisher of the earth. The wind which accompanied him helped him move. That energy acquired the form of the white mountain and having entered the earth by means of Agni, was moving (as he carried it). Then that energy got the form of a thicket of needles like the fire of the Sun at the place of its entry as a result of its greatness. Since Agni carried the energy for some time, it should be noted, Kartikeya originated from Agni.

There was joy among the gods that Siva's energy was borne for the benefit of the world and that the energy that fell transformed into Kartikeya for the sake of the gods. But there was anger in Uma, for Siva did not accept Uma engaged in his worship. She cursed the Earth, saying 'Be not in one form. May you give fruits for a variety of seeds in the same field. Be wife to many husbands (Lords of the earth or kings).

The implication is, 'If only she (earth) had not conceded to bear the energy of Siva, Uma would have received it. She would have had that son'.

Comng to his allegations on Kama Sutra 5.6

The Kamasutra is not a dharmic text. Its primary focus is on sexual activity, disregarding the principles of Dharma. According to the Shastras, sexual intercourse is prescribed not for mere pleasure or recreation, but solely for the purpose of procreation. In contrast, texts like the Kamasutra reduce sexual activity to acts of lust and indulgence, promoting pleasure as an end in itself rather than fulfilling dharmic duties.

Srimad Bhagvatam 11.5.13

The smelling of wine (in the Sautrāmani sacrifice) is laid down as its intake (and no drinking of liquor is permitted); a beast is to be (symbolically) offered to the deities (by touching it) in sacrifices, but no killing for meat-eating is allowed; simi-larly, sexual intercourse (with one's wife) is to be indulged in for procreation but not for sexual enjoyment. But people do not understand this pure course of their own dharma.

Open/Group Sex

Many Hindu gods and sages used to have sex in the open mostly in the forest without any hesitation. Many times their act was seen by other people also. One such story is of Indra copulating with Paulomi and this act was seen by a sage named Anga,

Indra

Padma Purana II.30.76-85 ”O brahmanas, once the brahmana, the very lustrous and vigorous son of Atri went to the Nandana (garden); there is saw Indra, Pakasasana. He saw Indra, who was accompanied by hosts of celestial nymphs and Gandharvas and Kinnaras...who was adorned with all ornaments, who was engaged in sexual sports, who possessed an unlimited prowess...By his side he saw the blessed virtuous Paulomi, charming and auspicious, glorious with beauty, lustre and penance, shining with good fortune and chastity. With her that Indra enjoyed in the Nandana forest. Seeing his sport, the best brahmana Anga (thought): 'Lucky is the king of gods who is surrounded by such (beings). Oh, (great) is the power of his penance, due to which he has obtained such a great (i.e. high) position."

Another act of Indra,

Mahabharata 3.115.17 "…And the mighty ruler of the Haihaya tribe placing himself on his celestial car, affronted Indra, while that deity was enjoying himself with Sachi, his queen. Then, O Bharata's son, the blessed and the revered god (Vishhnu) held a consultation with Indra…"

Ashoke Chatterjee in his book Padma Purana A Study page number 71 /281 mentioned that chapter 26 – to the end in Bhumi khanda of Padma Purana (Including chapter 103) are later interpolations and were inserted later on in Padma Purana about 10th century AD . Thus this chapter 103 which he alleged is an interpolation

One can, therefore, casıly understand these two broad divisions of the Bhumi khanda vız, (t) the first twentyfive chaps and, (11) that from chap 26 to the end

A penetrating search will show that the second portion has been added later as all evidences of a late period are discernible in this section The thirtysixth chap bears traces of the later phase of development of the Jaina Philo-sophy The distinct mention of the name Turuska (which undoubtedly points to the Mohammedans who invaded India about the 9th century AD) which is found in the seventy-eighth chap 10 also points to that conclusion A later idea of the origin of Sūta, which does not coincide with that as given in the Vayu-p, has been discussed in the twentyseventh chap 11 Moreover, undue importance has been given in that portion to the Tulası plant, which is unmistakably a mark of its later orıgın

> Gitavidyādhara by Indra Thus it is obvious that either some coherent portions of this section have been lost or the whole of the Gitavidyādhara episode is a later fabrication Moreover, it is to be noted that the story of Pṛthu and Vena which commences independently from the beginning of the twentysixth chap and runs to the end has no link with the previous chaps One can, therefore, easily understand these two broad divisions of the Bhūmi khanda viz, (i) the first twentyfive chaps and, (ii) that from chap 26 to the end

Seeing such tyranny of Kārtavīrya, the gods and the sages who strictly observed great vows, together approached Lord Viṣṇu—the destroyer of the Daityas and the truly valiant Lord of the gods—and spoke as follows:
"O Lord! For the protection of all beings, please slay Arjuna, the son of Kṛtavīrya."

One day, the mighty king of the Haihayas, riding in a celestial aerial chariot, attacked the lord of the gods, Indra, while he was playing with Śacī. O Bhārata! Then Lord Viṣṇu discussed with Indra the matter of destroying Kārtavīrya Arjuna.

For the welfare of all beings, Indra explained what needed to be done. Thereafter, the universally revered Lord Viṣṇu vowed to accomplish all that, and departed for the exceedingly delightful holy place of Badarī, where His own vast hermitage was situated.

This is also mentioned in Brahmanda Purana 2.3.60.24-26a, But this didn't stop Shiva from cohabiting in the open. He once again cohabited in a forest and was seen by the sage Bhrigu who later cursed him,

Devi Bhagavatam 4.20.36-37 "O King! When Mahadeva [Shiva], being infatuated with Kama, went into the forest of Bhrigu and becoming naked, began to copulate, the ascetic Bhrigu, seeing him in that state, exclaimed "O You are very shameless" and cursed Him thus :– Let your penis drop off just now. Mahadeva, then to satisfy his thirst for passion, began to drink the water of the lake Amrita Vapi, dug by the Danavas."

Ludo Rucher in his book the Puranas page 172 dated Devi bhagvatm to be written between 1100-1350 AD and not later than that . He also proposed that the writer of this text must have been a Bengali Shakta Smarta Brahmin

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata" or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata" is the true and original Śrīmadbhāgavata" has been discussed under the Bhāgavata". It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata" appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata" or Śrīmadbhāgavata", once as Sati" (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[174] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata" having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devi-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and then wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[175] dated the Devībhāgavata" "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[176] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[177] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[178] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[179] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

Shri Maheshwara (Lord Shiva) said -Observing the duties of a householder, avoiding contact with another man's wife, protecting entrusted property and women, refraining from taking anything without permission, and renouncing meat and alcohol-these five are considered forms of dharma that lead to true happiness Those who hold righteousness in high regard should earnestly follow this virtuous path, as it is a source of merit and well-being.

Regarding the Daruvan Incident we have already explained it – I will attach the explanation again from Puranas-

The Daruvan Incident comes in Various Puranas such as Linga, Shiva, Brahma Purana so we will be seeing them as well to understand this story Before Proceeding let me state that as Malechas claim that this incident is responsible for the formation of Shiv Linga, you are totally wrong its only responsible for formation of Hatkeshwar Linga

   Means this incident is of another kalpa . Kalpa in Puranas refers to another time period of Creation. So this incident did not occur in the present kalpa or creation

WHY SHIV JI CAME AND WHAT WAS THE REASON FOR THIS INCIDENT..?

व्यासजीसे जो कल्पभेदकी कथा सुनी है, उसीका आज वर्णन कर रहा हूँ, आपलोग सुनें ॥ ४॥
पूर्वकालमें दारुवनमें ब्राह्मणोंके साथ जो घटना घटी, उसीको आप लोग सुनें। जैसा मैंने सुना है, वैसा ही कहता हूँ। है ऋषिसत्तमो ! जो दारु नामक श्रेष्ठ वन है, वहाँ नित्य शिवजीके ध्यानमें तत्पर शिवभक्त [ब्राह्मण] रहा करते थे ॥ ५-६ ॥
हे मुनीश्वरो ! वे तीनों कालोंमें सदा शिवजीकी पूजा करते थे और नाना प्रकारके स्तोत्रोंसे उनकी स्तुति किया करते थे। शिवध्यानमें मग्न रहनेवाले वे शिवभक्त श्रेष्ठ ब्राह्मण किसी समय समिधा लेनेके लिये वनमें गये हुए थे ॥ ७-८ ॥

इसी बीच उन लोगोंकी परीक्षा लेनेहेतु साक्षात् नीललोहित [भगवान्] शंकर विकट रूप धारणकर वहाँ आये। वे दिगम्बर, भस्मरूप भूषणसे विभूषित तथा महातेजस्वी भगवान् शंकर हाथमें [तेजोमय] लिंगको धारणकर विचित्र लीला करने लगे ॥ ९-१० ॥

Verse 4:
“I am now narrating the story of the different cosmic cycles (Kalpa-bheda) that I heard from Sage Vyasa. All of you, please listen attentively.”

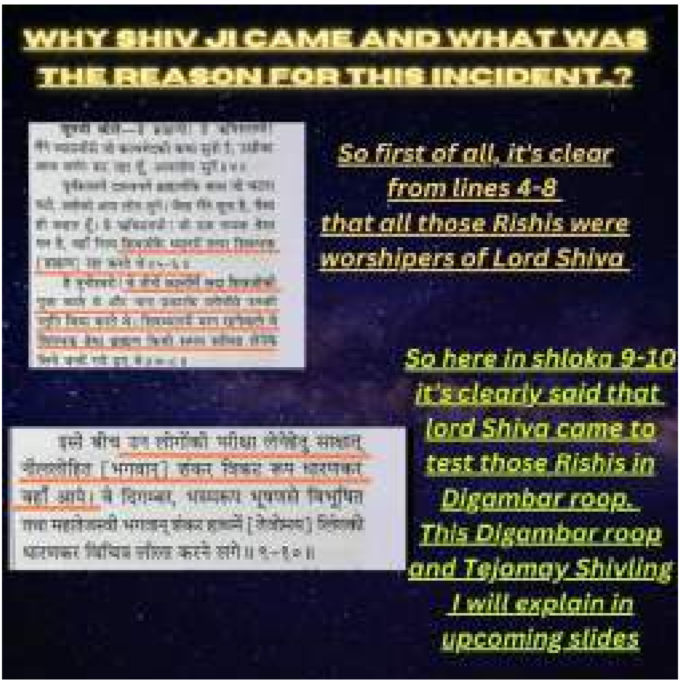
Verses 5–6:
“In ancient times, in the Daru forest, an event occurred involving a group of Brahmins. Listen to that story as I have heard it. O best of sages! In the forest known as Daru — a most excellent forest — there lived devoted Brahmins who were always engaged in meditating on Lord Shiva.”

Verses 7–8:
“O great sages! Those Brahmins, devoted to Shiva, worshipped Him at all times — past, present, and future — and praised Him with various hymns. Absorbed in the meditation of Shiva, these noble Brahmins had once gone into the forest to collect sacrificial firewood (samidha).”

Verses 9–10:
“Meanwhile, to test them, Lord Shankara Himself — the blue-throated (Neelalohita), appeared there in a fierce and unusual form. Naked (digambara), adorned with sacred ash as His ornament, and radiating immense brilliance, Lord Shiva held a blazing, radiant linga in His hand and began erforming a wondrous divine play (leela).”

So first of all, it's clear from lines 4-8 that all those Rishis were worshipers of Lord Shiva

So here in shloka 9-10 it's clearly said that lord Shiva came to test those Rishis in Digambar roop. This Digambar roop and Tejomay Shivling
I will explain in upcoming slides

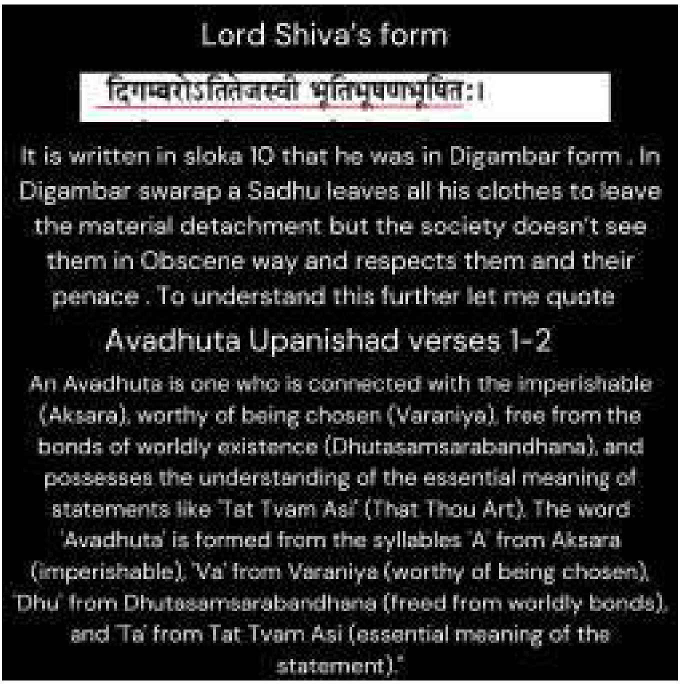


Lord Shiva's form

दिगम्बरोऽतितेजस्वी भूतिभूषणभूषितः ।
It is written in sloka 10 that he was in Digambar form. In Digambar swarap a Sadhu leaves all his clothes to leave the material detachment but the society doesn't see them in Obscene way and respects them and their penace. To understand this further let me quote

Avadhuta Upanishad verses 1–2

An Avadhuta is one who is connected with the imperishable (Aksara), worthy of being chosen (Varaniya), free from the bonds of worldly existence (Dhutasamsarabandhana), and possesses the understanding of the essential meaning of statements like 'Tat Tvam Asi' (That Thou Art). The word 'Avadhuta' is formed from the syllables 'A' from Aksara (imperishable), 'Va' from Varaniya (worthy of being chosen), 'Dhu' from Dhutasamsarabandhana (freed from worldly bonds), and 'Ta' from Tat Tvam Asi (essential meaning of the statement)."



What was lord Shiva holding in his hand

Shiv Purana 4.12.9-10

इसी बीच उन लोगोंकी परीक्षा लेनेहेतु साक्षात् नीललोहित [भगवान्] शंकर विकट रूप धारणकर वहाँ आये। वे दिगम्बर, भस्मरूप भूषणसे विभूषित तथा महातेजस्वी भगवान् शंकर हाथमें तेजोमय लिंगको धारणकर विचित्र लीला करने लगे ॥ ९-१०॥

"Meanwhile, to test those people, the Supreme Lord Shiva Himself—manifesting as Nīlalohita—appeared there in a fierce form. He was sky-clad (digambara), adorned with ashes as ornaments, and was immensely radiant. Holding a blazing, luminous liṅga in His hand, Lord Shiva began to perform a wondrous and extraordinary play.

Brahmanda Purana 2.27
10-12. Then the lord came to that forest in order to confer grace on them. His limbs were grey due to the appli-cation of Bhasman (ashes). He was naked. He had hideous features. His hairs were dishevelled and ugly. His teeth were terrific. His hands eagerly got hold of a firebrand.

Linga Purana 1.31
28-32. The lord had vulgar traits. He was stark nude. He had smeared his limbs with ashes. His hands were engaged in whirling a firebrand. His eyes were red and tawny. Sometimes he laughed biosteriously, sometimes he sang surprisingly.
Thus its clear from this that lord Shiva was holding a Fire Brand and not his penis as per Shiva, Brahmanda and Linga Purana

The strange behaviour of Shiva described in this and subsequent verses is found prescribed in Pashupata-the hermitage as a guest, he began to beg again and again.

15. He created a wife unto himself, similar in form and bedecked in ornaments. He roared and bellowed like a bull and brayed like a donkey.
16. He began to befool them making all the embodied ones laugh. Thereupon, the sages became angry. They were over-whelmed by fury.

On hearing these words of the sages, Lord Sankara, the destroyer of the eyes of Bhaga, said in polished speech, as though he was laughing boisterously.
"This Linga of ours cannot be made to fall down forcibly by all the gods beginning with Brahmā. How then be the other ascetics. O excellent Brahmaṇas, I shall make this Linga fall down."
34-36. They uttered the sentence "Stay in the hermitage or o away".

On being spoken to thus, lord Mahādeva became delight-ed in the activities of the sense-organs. Even as all of them were observing, the lord vanished there itself.
When the lord vanished and Bhava (God Śiva) was trans-formed into a Linga, there was no appearance of any living being in the range of the three worlds. Everything was agitated

Mata Parvati's Yoni roop:-
Sometimes I really think that how stupid these translators like JL Shastri are, in Shiv Puran 4.12, in verse 3 he clearly mentions Arrow form of Devi Parvati

3. Parvati, the beloved of Śiva, is heard in the world in the form of an arrow. O Sūta, what is the reason for this? Please satisfy our curiosity in this respect by giving the account you have heard.

Now see how this stupid translated verse 32 and 37 as viginal passage

Now this clear hypocrisy can be seen in these verses (i.e 32&37)
In Verse 32 yoni roopa is refers to Arrow बाणरूपा श्रुता लोके पार्वती (verse 3)The term Bana(Arrow) is related to the number five as devi holds 5 arrows as one arrorw symbolizing Panchattvamika Prakriti.

Prakṛti, made up of the fivefold elements (pañcatattvātmakā), is the yoni, the support for the brilliant energy of the Absolute (brahma teja kā ādhāra), this linga of light. Therefore, to say that Pārvatī took the shape of a yoni to hold the linga means that, becoming prakṛti — in the form of the five elements — she supported the Universe. Could a worldly yoni, a urinary organ, a scrap of leather, support the jyotirlinga, made of fire, that burns everything?[76]

> In the world it is heard that Pārvatī, the beloved of Śiva, is of the form of an arrow (bāṇa).[77]

SHIVA PURAN 12.4
In the world it is heard that Parvati, the beloved of Śiva, is of the form of an arrow (bāṇa)."
The meaning of the form of the yoni is the same as that of the form of the arrow. The word 'arrow' (bāṇa) is indicative of the number five: it is applied with regards to Kāma, by reason of his five arrows; when addressed towards Śiva, it regards his five faces and when to Parvati, the perspective is her nature comprised of by the five elements. Just as a mass of electricity (vidyut puñja) pervades the five elements, yet is more predominant within water and in mountain ranges, similarly did Parvati become arrow-shaped, that is of the form of a mountain range, and into her the effulgent linga (tejomaya linga) entered. If the mass of electricity were to fall into her yoni that is, into earth or water it would become stable; otherwise, it would reduce trees, men and everything else to ashes. It was said by Śiva: Except Pārvatī, no one is able to sustain the linga; my linga, supported by her, quickly find peace.

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.

Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. Rishi Parasara

An old sage named Parasara became passionate after he saw a girl named Satyavati on the boat and wanted to have sex right on the boat before everyone,

Mahabharata 1.63.69-84 "…While engaged in this vocation, Satyavati was seen one day by the great Rishi Parasara, in course of his wanderings. As she was gifted with great beauty, an object of desire even with an anchorite, and of graceful smiles, the wise sage, as soon as he beheld her, desired to have her. And that bull amongst Munis addressed the daughter of Vasu of celestial beauty and tapering thighs, saying, 'Accept my embraces, O blessed one!' सत्यवतीके ऐसा कहनेपर मुनिश्रेष्ठ पराशर प्रसन्न होकर बोले- 'भीरु ! मेरा प्रिय कार्य करके भी तुम कन्या ही रहोगी। भामिनि! तुम जो चाहो, वह मुझसे वर माँग लो। शुचिस्मिते! आजसे पहले कभी भी मेरा अनुग्रह व्यर्थ नहीं गया है' ।

Hearing Satyavati's words, the great sage Parashara, pleased, said:

"O timid one! Even after fulfilling my desire, you shall remain a virgin.
O beautiful lady! Ask me for any boon you wish.
O pure-smiling one! Never before has my blessing ever gone in vain."

Upon hearing this from the sage, Satyavati asked for a boon that her body should emit a divine, pleasant fragrance like that of fine flowers.

The revered Parashara granted her this desired boon on this very earth. (Verse 80)

Why did Rishi Parashar Unite With Satyavati ?

Rishi Parashara united with Satyavati for a divine purpose — to bring forth Krishna Dwaipayana Vyasa, the sage destined to expand the branches (Shakhas) of the Vedas, compose the Mahabharata, compile the Puranas, and lay the foundation for the Gṛhyasūtras and other Kalpasūtras becoming one of the most important persons in the history of Sanatan Dharma

इस प्रकार परम उत्तम वर पाकर हर्षोल्लाससे भरी हुई सत्यवतीने महर्षि पराशरका संयोग प्राप्त किया और तत्काल ही एक शिशुको जन्म दिया। यमुनाके द्वीपमें अत्यन्त शक्तिशाली पराशरनन्दन व्यास प्रकट हुए ।। ८३-८४ ।।

उन्होंने मातासे यह कहा- 'आवश्यकता पड़नेपर तुम मेरा स्मरण करना। मैं अवश्य दर्शन दूँगा।' इतना कहकर माताकी आज्ञा ले व्यासजीने तपस्यामें ही मन लगाया

Having received such an excellent boon, Satyavati, filled with joy and delight, united with the great sage Parashara, and immediately gave birth to a child.
On an island in the Yamuna River, Vyasa, the immensely powerful son of Parashara, was born. (Verses 83–84)

He said to his mother:
"Whenever you are in need, remember me—I will surely appear before you."
Saying this and taking his mother's blessing, Vyasa devoted himself to a life of austerity and meditation.

The wise Dvaipayana (Vyasa) observed that with each passing Yuga, one leg (pāda) of Dharma was gradually disappearing.
He saw that human beings' lifespan and strength were declining, and the condition of the age had become greatly degraded.
Witnessing all this, and out of compassion for the Vedas and the Brahmins, he undertook the division and expansion of the Vedas.
Therefore, he became renowned by the name Vyasa (the one who compiles or categorizes). (Verses 87–88)

Parāśara's meeting with Satyavatī on the boat was neither public nor indecent—when he expressed his wish, she refused due to the presence of many sages on both banks of the river. To ensure privacy, Parāśara used his yogic power to create a dense mist, hiding them completely from view. Only after her conditions were met did their union—destined for the divine birth of Vyāsa—take place, making it a dignified and consensual event rather than the crude public act falsely alleged.

Allegations-

This is also mentioned in Shiva Purana Umasamhita 44.23. The poor girl named Satyavati couldn’t openly refuse as she was afraid that the Rishi may curse her. So she tried many other things given below, Shiva Purana, Umasamhita 5.14.18-25 ”Afflicted with lust the sage caught hold of the lass. Tremblingly the lass spoke to the merciful sage. ”O great sage, I have foul smell and black complexion…Afflicted by lust the sage caught hold of her again. On seeing him bent upon seizing her she said again. ”It is mentioned in the Vedas that sexual intercourse shall be indulged in at night; not during the day…Hence please wait till the night falls. Now all the men will see us and so shall my father who stands at the other bank.” On hearing the words uttered by her, the leader sage immediately created a screen of snow, thanks to his strength of his merit.”

Refutation-

According to R.C. Hazra, the Uma Saṁhitā of the Shiva Purāṇa is a very late addition. He notes that it draws heavily from the Jñāna Saṁhitā, which itself is dated to around 950 CE. Based on this, it can be reasonably inferred that the Uma Saṁhitā was incorporated into the Shiva Purāṇa sometime after the 10th century CE.

IV. The [illegible],[illegible] also called Aumā/Umāsaṃhitā, is represented in the class B editions only. The text introduces Kṛṣṇa on a visit to Kailāsa and performing penance there to Śiva, in order to obtain a son. He meets Upamanyu, and requests him to tell him about the greatness of Śiva. Upamanyu complies, and praises Śiva and his trident; he extols Śiva's power to save his devotees from hell. This discussion leads into several chapters on different types of sins, and on the description of hell and the suffering in it. Ways to avoid this suffering include gifts of food, performing penance, listening to the purāṇas, etc. The saṃhitā subsequently describes the seven dvīpas of the earth, and other component parts of the universe. It ends with discourses on a variety of topics, such as the development of man, from the foetus, through childhood, youth, marriage, old age, etc.; creation and manvantaras, etc. In Hazra's opinion the text borrows most of its chapters from the Jñānasaṃhitā.

XIII. The Jñānasaṃhitā[illegible] has already been referred to on several occasions in this description of the Śiva°, because, in Hazra's opinion, other saṃhitās borrowed verses and even chapters from it. The text recognizes the Vedas as the highest authority, but it was Śiva, as [illegible], who communicated them to Viṣṇu. Śiva shall be worshiped with Vedic mantras, even though the saṃhitā does not, therefore, reject the authority of the Tantras and eventual Śiva worship with Āgamic rather than Vedic mantras. The nirguṇa Śiva is identical with the parabrahma; in his saguṇa form he manifests himself as Rudra. Prakṛti was born from Śiva's wish, and, from her, were born the other gods including Brahmā and Viṣṇu. This saṃhitā, like some of those discussed earlier, strongly encourages liṅga worship as the ideal way to worship Śiva himself. It urges worship under the guidance of a competent teacher; worship will lead to bhakti, then to jñāna, and, ultimately, to vijñāna, i.e. the realization that the only real thing is Śiva. Hazra points out that the text was influenced by the Kumārasaṃbhava, Raghuvaṃśa, and Kirātārjunīya. He surmises that it may have been composed in Banaras, by someone who was also familiar with the banks of the Narmadā, not before A.D. 950.

The Śiva Purāṇa, as a whole, is one of the most composite and unwieldy Purāṇas, having been composed and expanded by different authors over various periods. There exist two primary versions: the Bombay 1884, Venkat 1895–96, and Venga Manuscript (Class A); and the Venkat 1906, 1965 Pandita Pustakalaya Manuscript (Class B). According to R.C. Hazra, the sections found in the Class A Manuscript are older and more authentic, whereas those in the Class B Manuscript (Including Uma Samhita) are very recent compositions . Most significantly, the older and more authentic Class A Manuscript does not contain the Uma Saṁhitā.

saṃhitās, with different titles and different arrangements; two of their saṃhitās are not even listed in the Śiva° passages.[illegible] The following is a comparative survey of the saṃhitās, in the two passages of the Śiva° itself, and in the two sets of editions — which from now on I will refer to as class A and class B editions.

Śiva°	Class A Bombay 1884 Venkat 1895–96 Vaṅga		Class B Venkat 1906, 1965 Paṇḍitapustakālaya [illegible] AITM
I. Vidyeśvara	XIII. Jñāna	ch. 78	Vidyeśvara	ch. 25
II. Raudra	Vidyeśvara	25	Vighneśa
III. Vaināyaka	(Vaṅga	16)	Rudra	197
IV. Bhauma/Aumā	Kailāsa	12	Śatarudra	42
V. Mātṛ(purāṇa)	XIV. Sanatkumāra	59	Koṭirudra	43

X. Sahasrakoṭirudra			uttarabhāga	41
XI. Vāyavīya
XII. Dharma(purāṇa)

It is clear from all this that the Śiva° is one of the more composite and unwieldy purāṇas, sections of which "were written by different hands in different climes

[illegible] Hazra Śiva° 1963: 51–52. Cf. Haraprasad Shastri 1928a: 277, no. 3246.

and ages;" it is also evident that "there were different traditions regarding the text of the Śiva-purāṇa."[illegible] Hazra, who did not include the Śiva° in his volume on the mahāpurāṇas, later published an extensive and comparative study of the various saṃhitās, which is repeatedly referred to in these pages. He came to the conclusion that the saṃhitās contained in the class A editions were generally the older ones, and that all other sections, manuscripts of which are rare, and the contents of which largely depend on the earlier saṃhitās as well as on other purāṇas, are quite recent. In view of the great disparity between the two sets of editions, I will follow the order of the saṃhitās as set forth in the purāṇa itself.

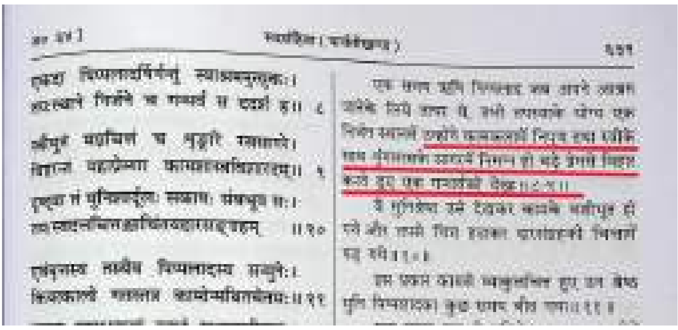
Here is Shiva Purana, Rudra Samhita 2, Parvati Khanda 4, 34.9-10 Geeta Press Gorakhpur hindi translation – No Explicit mention of Sexual intercourse

एक समय ऋषि पिप्पलाद जब अपने आश्रम जानेके लिये तत्पर थे, तभी तपस्याके योग्य एक निर्जन स्थानमें उन्होंने कामकलामें निपुण तथा स्त्रीके साथ श्रृंगाररसके सागरमें निमग्न हो बड़े प्रेमसे विहार करते हुए एक गन्धर्वको देखा ॥ ८-९॥

“Once, when Sage Pippalada was about to go to his hermitage, he saw, in a secluded place suitable for austerities, a Gandharva deeply immersed in arts and skills, playing with a woman in the ocean of amorous sentiment, ngaging in affectionate recreation.”



Allegations-

King of Gandharva had also copulated in open and was seen by a Brahmin woman, Srimad Bhagavatam 9.16.2-3 Once when Reṇukā, the wife of Jamadagni, went to the bank of the Ganges to get water, she saw the King of the Gandharvas, decorated with a garland of lotuses and sporting in the Ganges with celestial women [Apsarās]. She had gone to bring water from the Ganges, but when she saw Citraratha, the King of the Gandharvas, sporting with the celestial girls, she was somewhat inclined toward him and failed to remember that the time for the fire sacrifice was passing.

Refutation-

Here is Srimad Bhagavatam 9.16.2-3 . Here its simply mentioned that Gandharva king Chitraratha was roaming with Apsaras and Gandharvas were playing in Water – There is no sexual intercourse mentioned here

श्रीशुकदेवजी कहते हैं – परीक्षित् ! अपने पिताकी यह शिक्षा भगवान् परशुरामने 'जो आज्ञा' कहकर स्वीकार की। इसके बाद वे एक वर्षतक तीर्थयात्रा करके अपने आश्रमपर लौट आये ।।१।। एक दिनकी बात है, परशुरामजीकी माता रेणुका गंगातटपर गयी हुई थीं। वहाँ उन्होंने देखा कि गन्धर्वराज चित्ररथ कमलोंकी माला पहने अप्सराओंके साथ विहार कर रहा है ।।२।। वे जल लानेके लिये नदीतटपर गयी थीं, परन्तु वहाँ जलक्रीडा करते हुए गन्धर्वको देखने लगीं और पतिदेवके हवनका समय हो गया है- इस बातको भूल गयीं। उनका मन कुछ-कुछ चित्ररथकी ओर खिंच भी गया था ।।३।। हवनका समय बीत गया, यह जानकर वे महर्षि जमदग्निके शापसे भयभीत हो गयीं और तुरंत वहाँसे आश्रमपर चली आयीं। वहाँ जलका कलश महर्षिके सामने रखकर हाथ जोड़ खड़ी हो गयीं ।।४।। जमदग्नि मुनिने अपनी पत्नीका मानसिक व्यभिचार जान लिया और क्रोध करके कहा- 'मेरे पुत्रो ! इस पापिनीको मार डालो।' परन्तु उनके किसी भी पुत्रने उनकी वह आज्ञा स्वीकार नहीं की ।।५।। इसके बाद पिताकी आज्ञासे परशुरामजीने माताके साथ सब भाइयोंको भी मार डाला। इसका कारण था। वे अपने पिताजीके योग और तपस्याका प्रभाव भलीभाँति जानते

Saying "Yes, father," he accepted the command. After that, he went on a pilgrimage for a year and then returned to his hermitage. (1)
One day, the mother of Parashurama, Renuka, went to the bank of the Ganga. There she saw the Gandharva king Chitraratha, adorned with a garland of lotuses, roaming with celestial nymphs. (2)
She had gone there to fetch water, but instead began watching the Gandharva playing in the water, and forgot that the time for her husband's sacrificial offering had arrived. Her mind was also somewhat drawn towards Chitraratha. (3)
When she realized that the time for the sacrificial offering had passed, she became frightened of the curse of Sage

Jamadagni and immediately returned to the hermitage. Placing the water pot before the sage, she stood with folded hands. (4)
Sage Jamadagni came to know of his wife's mental infidelity and, in anger, said, "My sons, kill this sinful woman!" But none of his sons accepted that command. (5)
Then, by his father's order, Parashurama killed his mother along with all his brothers. The reason was that he was well aware of the power of his father's yoga and penance.

At that time, in front of the Gopis, Lord Shri Krishna began to dance, embodying laughter, sweet words, charming glances, unique steps, and affectionate embraces. Immersed in the sweet memories of these actions, the Gopis started to cry. (15)

Parikshit! Lord Balarama was very skilled in coaxing and pleading in various ways. By repeatedly delivering the heart-touching and captivating messages of Lord Shri Krishna, he comforted the Gopis. (16) He spent the two months of spring, Chaitra and Vaisakha, there. During the nights, he stayed with the Gopis, enhancing their love. After all, who could be greater than Lord Ram himself! (17)

At that time, a gentle breeze carrying the fragrance of the kumudini flowers kept blowing, and the full moon's glow illuminated the riverside gardens of Yamuna. Lord Balarama roamed there with the Gopis. (18) Varuna, the god of water, had sent his daughter, Varuni, to that place. She emerged from the root of a tree and filled the entire forest with her fragrance. (19) The scent of this nectar-filled wind reached Lord Balarama, as if it were a gift for him! Attracted by its aroma, Balarama went with the Gopis to that place, where they drank the essence of it. (20)

At that time, the Gopis were singing songs of Lord Balarama's virtues around him, and he, intoxicated with joy, wandered in the forest. Their eyes were filled with bliss. (21) Around his neck, a garland of flowers adorned him, and he was wearing a garland of victory (Vaijayanti), rejoicing in pure happiness.

A Correct English Translation of Srimad Bhagavatam 4.6.25

25. Oh Vidura, when celestial women get tired of their amorous sports, they descend from their heavenly cars into these rivers. They then plunge and sport therein, sprinkling their mates with water.

26. (Being tempted by the fragrance of saffron), elephants, though not thirsty, drink the waters of these rivers, yellow on account of the fresh saffron washed (from the breasts of celestial women) during their baths, and make the female elephants also drink it.

As per the story mentioned in Srimad Bhagavatam a sage named Kardama divided himself into 9 men and impregnated his wife with 9 discharges,

Srimad Bhagavatam 3.23.47 "The powerful Kardama Muni was the knower of everyone's heart, and he could grant whatever one desired. Knowing the spiritual soul, he regarded her as half of his body. Dividing himself into nine forms, he impregnated Devahuti with nine discharges of semen."

10. "Oh eminent Brāhmaṇa, I am happy to know that all this (described by you) is within your powers-you who are the master of the unfailing powers of Yoga-māyā, my lord. (I request) that there should be at least one contact with your person which has been promised by you, oh Lord. To beget a child from a great husband (like you) is a blessing to virtuous women.

11. Oh Lord, for that purpose (be pleased to) arrange for the necessary materials as per prescription (in the Kāma-Sastra). My body which has been tormented by (sexual) passion provoked by you and which has been emaciated with excessive desire for sexual enjoyment, will thereby become fit for it. Therefore think of a suitable mansion."

Devi Devahuti started spending and enjoying her time with Sage Kardama in the Aerial Mansion

34. When she remembered her beloved husband, the foremost among the sages, she found herself there with a thou-sand girls where Prajāpati Kardama was sitting.
35. Seeing that she was in front of her husband and sur-rounded by thousand maids, and seeing the power of his Yoga, she was confused with wonder (doubted what it all meant).
    36-37. Sage Kardama knew about Devi Devahut Strong desire for sexual pleasure and to have multiple children. So he divided himself into 9 similar parts and satisfied her wife desires couple who were passionately eager for sexual pleasure were thus enjoying themselves by the force of their Yogic powers.

47. Due to his intense love (for her) he regarded her as his half. He who could read inner wishes of all (and hence knew her desire to have many children) was competent to satisfy them. The sage who realised his own Self759, divided himself into nine parts and deposited his semen in her.
48. Hence Devahūti gave birth to female children immediately on the same day. All of them were beautiful in all their limbs in every respect and they gave out the fragrance of red lotus.
    49-50. At that time the beautiful 760 virtuous wife anticipated that her husband was about to renounce the house-holder's life (and to become a Samnyāsin). Though she was overcome with fear and pain, she smiled outwardly. She was scratching the ground with her foot beautiful with gem-like nails. With her head hung down (in modesty) she spoke soft winning words, controlling frequently her tears.

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmadbhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sati (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[174] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and ... he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devi-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and there wrote the Devi-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[175] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[176] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[177] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[178] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[179] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

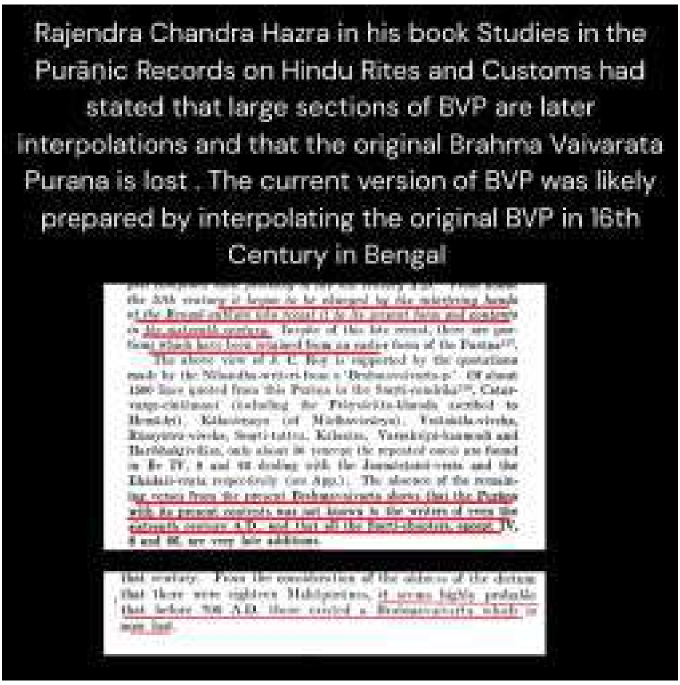
Also mentioned in Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Prakriti Khanda, Chapter 6, Verse 13-60

Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. Here is Brahma Vaivarta Purana Prakriti Khanda chapter 6 slokas 13-60 you can read it nowhere written such thing

इस अध्याय में पृथिवी का उपाख्यान निरूपित किया गया है। नारद जी ने कहा- हरि के एक निमेषमात्र समय में ही ब्रह्मा का पात हो जाता है श्रर्थात् उसकी सम्पूर्ण दिव्य श्रायु एवं कार्यकाल समाप्त हो जाता है। उसके पात होने पर ही प्राकृतिक प्रलय कहा गया है ।॥ १॥ प्राकृत प्रलय द्वाने पर कहा गया है कि यह वसुन्धरा अदृष्ट हो जाती है। समस्त विश्व जल से प्लत (मग्न) हो जाते हैं और सभी हरि में लीन हो जाया करते हैं ।।२।। यह वसुन्धरा (पृथ्वी) उस समय तिरोभूता होकर कहाँ रहती हैं अर्थात् जब यह भूमि अदृश्य हो जाती है तो उस समय कहाँ चली -ाकर स्थित रहती है ? फिर जब इस सृष्टि का विधान करने का अवसर श्राता है

तो उस समय यह पृथ्वी कैसे अविर्भूत (प्रकट) हो जाया करती है ? ।।३।। वह पृथ्वी फिर किस प्रकार से धन्या-मान्या और यह समस्त समुदाय की आश्रय और जप वाली हो जाती है? आप इसके जन्म का कथन जोकि मङ्गल का कारण है कृपा करके बताइये ।।४।। श्री नारायण प्रभु ने कहा- सबकी आदि सृष्टि में सभी का जन्म श्रीकृष्ण से ही हुआ था ऐसी श्रुति कहती है अर्थात् वेद यही बतलाता है। समस्त प्रलयों में आविर्भाव और तिरोभाव हुआ करता है- यह भी वेद का वचन है ।।५।। अब समस्तमङ्गनों का मङ्गल जो इस वसुधा का जन्म है वह आप श्रवण करो। इसका श्रवण करना समस्त विघ्नों का नाश करने वाला-पापों का प्रकाशक और पुण्यों के वर्धन करने वाला होता है ।।६।। अहो ! बड़े आश्चर्य की बात है कि कुछ विद्वान मधु-कैटभ नाम वाले दैत्यों के भेद से इस पृथ्वी का स्वरूप हुआ था और यह इसी लिये धन्या है-ऐसा कहा करते हैं किन्तु अब आप लोग मुझसे इसके विपरीत मत का श्रवण करो ।।७।। शुद्ध और तेज से सन्तुष्ट होने वाले वे दोनों विष्णु से बोले – आप हम दोनों का त्याग मत करो जहाँ यह पृथ्वी जल से संवृत है। उन दोनों के जीवन काल में यह स्फुटतया प्रत्यक्ष हो जायगी। फिर इसके अनन्तर उन दोनों का मरण के पश्चात मेद हुआ था ।। ८-६।। इसी कारण से यह मेदिनी-इम नाम से विख्यात हुई है- यह कहकर जिनके द्वारा यह मत हुआ, उसे श्रवण करो । क्योंकि जो पहले भेद से बद्धित थी वह जल से धौत होकर कृश हो गई थी ।१०। जब मैं उसका सार्थक और सर्वं समस्त जन्म कहता है जोकि मैंने पहिले श्रवण किया था- श्रुति (वेद) में जो कहा गया है, और धर्म के मुह से पुष्कर में इसका श्रवण किया था ।।११।। जल में जब यह महा विराट् बहुत अधिक समय तक स्थित रहा तो कालधिक्य के कारण से निश्चय समस्त अङ्ग में व्यापक बहुत अधिक मल हो गया था ।।१२।। वह मल उसके सममत लोमों के विवरों में प्रवेश कर गया था। हे मुने ! जब बहुत अधिक काल हो गया तो उसी से यह वसुधा हो गई थी ।। १३।। प्रति लोमों की प्रत्येक रूपों में स्थित वह स्थिर हो गई थी वह श्राविभूत (प्रकट) और तिरोभूत (छिपी हुई) और सचल बार-बार हो गई थी ।।१४।। प्रलय के काल जल के अन्दर अवस्थित होकर यह पृथिवी तिरोभूत हो गई थी ।।१५।। प्रत्येक विश्व में यह पृथ्वी पर्वतों और वनों से युक्त होती है और सात समुद्रों से समन्वित और सात द्वीपों के सहित सती होती है ।।१६।॥ इस भूमि में हिमबान् और मेरु पर्वत हैं तथा चन्द्र सूर्य आदि ग्रहों से संयुत यह होती है। इसके साथ ब्रह्मा-विष्णु और शिव आदि सुरगण तथा लोक भी होते हैं ।।॥१७॥ यह वसुन्धरा पुण्य तीर्थों से समायुक्त थी और इसमें परम पवित्र भारत देश भी था। यह काञ्चनी भूमि से संयुक्त थी और समस्त दुर्गों से परिपूर्ण है ॥१८॥ इस भूमि के आधो भाग में सात पाताल हैं और ऊर्ध्व भाग में ब्रह्मलोक ध्रुवलोक और वहाँ पर ही सर्व विश्व है ॥१० ॥ इस प्रकार से सम्पूर्ण विश्व इस पृथ्वी में निर्मित हैं। ऊपर गोलोक और वैकुण्ठ लोक हैं जो नित्य हैं और वे दोनों विश्व पर हैं ।' २०।। समस्त विश्व नश्वर (नागवान्) और कृत्रिम होते हैं। हे ब्रह्मन् ! जिस समय में ब्रह्मा का निपातन, होता है और प्राकृत प्रलय होता है उस समय ये सभी विश्व भी नष्ट हो जाया करते हैं ।। २१।। आदि सृष्टि में परमात्मा कृष्ण ने महा विराट् का सृजन किया था। जब प्रलय का समय होता है, उस समय नित्य वह दिशा-आकाश और ईश्वर के साथ स्थित रहना है ।।॥२२॥ पृथ्वी की अधिष्ठात्री देवी सुरों के द्वारा वाराह में वह पूजित हुई थी और मनुओं के द्वारा-मुनियों से-वित्रों के द्वारा और गन्धव आदि के द्वारा भी पूजित होती है ॥ २३।। वह वराहरूप वाले विष्णु की पत्नी है जोकि श्रुति से सम्मत है। उसका पुत्र सुयण वाला मङ्गलात्मन मंगल जानने के योग्य है ॥२४॥ देवर्षि नारद ने ने कहा- वाराह कल्प में यह मही देवों के द्वारा किस रूप से पूजी गई है और वाराह के द्वारा सबके साथ वारा ही पूजी गई थी जो कि सती सबका आश्रय है ।।२५।। हे प्रभो! उसकी पूजा का विधान और नीचे का उद्धरण क्रम तथा मंगल का मंगल जन्म भी विस्तार पूर्वक कहिये ।। २६

In this chapter, the account of the Earth is described. Narada said – Within the span of a single nimesha (blink) of Hari, the fall of Brahma occurs — meaning, his entire divine lifespan and period of activity come to an end. When his fall takes place, it is called the prākṛta pralaya (natural dissolution). (1)

At the time of the prākṛta pralaya, it is said that this Earth becomes invisible. The entire universe becomes submerged in water, and all beings merge into Hari. (2)

When this Earth (Prithivi) disappears at that time, where does she reside? In other words, when the land becomes invisible, where does it go and remain? Then, when the time for creation of the universe comes, how does this Earth manifest again? (3)

How does this Earth once again become blessed, honored, and the refuge and dwelling place for all living beings? Please tell the account of her birth, which is the cause of auspiciousness. (4)

Shri Narayana Prabhu said – At the beginning of creation, everything was born from Shri Krishna alone — such is the statement of the Śruti (Vedas). The Vedas also say that in all pralayas there is both manifestation (avirbhāva) and disappearance (tirobhāva). (5)

Now listen to the auspicious origin of this Earth, which is the source of all auspiciousness. Hearing it destroys all obstacles, reveals sins, and increases merits. (6)

Ah! How astonishing that some learned ones say this Earth came into being through the separation of the two demons Madhu and Kaitabha, and therefore she is blessed. But now, hear from me a different view. (7)

The two, who were pure and satisfied by (divine) energy, said to Vishnu – "Do not abandon us while this Earth is covered with water. During our lifetime, she will clearly become manifest. Then, after our death, there will be 'meda' (fat/tissue)." (8–9)

Because of that, she became famous by the name Medini — now hear the account given by those who held this view. That which was earlier bound by separation became emaciated (krisha) after being washed by water. (10)

I will tell the meaningful and complete account of her birth, which I heard earlier — as said in the Śruti and heard in Pushkara from the mouth of Dharma himself. (11)

When the great Virat remained in the water for a very long time, due to the excess of time, filth (mala) accumulated throughout his body. (12)

That filth entered into the pores of his body. O sage! After a very long time, from that, this Earth came into being. (13)

Residing in the forms within each pore, she became stable — sometimes manifest (avibhūta), sometimes hidden (tirobhūta), and sometimes moving about. (14)

During the time of pralaya, remaining within the waters, this Earth became concealed (tirobhūta). (15)

In every universe, this Earth is furnished with mountains and forests, is encircled by the seven oceans, and accompanied by seven dvīpas (islands/continents). (16)

Upon this land are Mount Himavat and Mount Meru, and it is associated with the Moon, Sun, and other planets. Along with it exist Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, the hosts of gods, and all the worlds. (17)

This Earth is endowed with holy tīrthas, and within it lies the supremely sacred land of Bhārata. It is joined with golden soil and filled with all kinds of fortresses. (18)

In the lower half of this Earth are the seven pātālas, and in the upper region are Brahmaloka, Dhruvaloka, and there the whole universe resides. (19)

Thus, the entire universe is built upon this Earth. Above are Goloka and Vaikuntha — which are eternal — and both are beyond the universe. (20)

All worlds are perishable (subject to time) and artificial (constructed). O Brahmana! When Brahma perishes and the prākṛta pralaya occurs, all these worlds are destroyed. (21)

At the beginning of creation, the Supreme Soul Krishna created the great Virat. At the time of dissolution, he remains eternally along with the quarters (space), the sky, and God. (22)

The presiding goddess of the Earth was worshipped by the gods in the form of the Boar (Varaha) and also honored by the Manus, sages, pitṛs, and Gandharvas. (23)

She is the wife of Vishnu in the form of Varaha, as approved by the Śruti. Her son, the auspicious Mangala (Mars), is worthy of being known. (24)

Devarshi Narada said – In the Varaha Kalpa, in what form was this Earth worshipped by the gods, and how was she worshipped by Varaha along with all others — she who is chaste and the refuge of all? (25)

O Lord! Tell in detail the procedure of her worship, the sequence of the descent, and the auspicious birth of Mangala, the most auspicious. (26)

Narayana said – In ancient times, Brahma praised Varaha, and He (Varaha) killed Hiranyaksha and rescued the Earth (Mahī) from the Rasātala (netherworld). (27)

Then He placed that Earth upon the ocean, like a lotus leaf. There, Brahma created the beautiful and complete universe. (28)

Seeing her (the Earth's presiding goddess) with desire, the passionate Lord Hari, assuming the form of Varaha, whose radiance was like that of a crore (ten million) suns, made a bed for pleasure, took on a supremely beautiful form, and for a divine year, day and night, sported with her in seclusion. (29–30)

That beautiful one, from the touch of union in pleasure, became unconscious. She was extremely skilled in the art of love, and their union, full of extreme refinement, was entirely bliss-giving. (31)

From the embrace of her limbs, Vishnu lost the awareness of night and day — He did not know when night or day occurred. When the time (period) was completed, then, after a divine year was over, the Lord, desirous of ending it, abandoned that love-filled goddess. (32)

That same Varaha form was then remembered in meditation, and worship was performed with devotion. (33)

By offering incense, lamps, food offerings, vermilion, intments, garments, auspicious offerings, and oblations,

Hari worshipped her well, and then said — (34)

The great Varaha spoke: “O auspicious one! Having been well honored by all the sages, Manus, gods, Siddhas, and humans, you shall now become the support of all. (35)

From now on, during sacrificial sessions, foundation-laying ceremonies, house-building, house-entering, the digging of ponds and tanks, the consecration of homes, and in all agricultural activities — by my boon — the gods and others will worship you.

Those fools who, out of delusion or arrogance, for any reason fail to worship you will certainly go to hell.” (36–37)

Vasudha (the Earth) said: “By your command, I will not bear everything in my Varaha form. O Lord! Only as a līlā (divine pastime) will I bear the entire moving and unmoving universe. (38)

The liberated souls, the powers that are worthy of worship of Hari, the Shiva-lingas, sacred stones, conch shells, lamps, jewels, rubies, diamonds, gems, sacrificial threads, flowers, books, tulsi leaves, victory garlands, flower garlands, camphor, gold, yellow pigment, sandalwood, shalagrama stones, and water — in carrying all these, I am unable.

O Lord! I shall be afflicted with trouble if I have to bear all these things for everyone. This is my prayer — may you kindly listen to it.” (39–41)

Shri Bhagavan said – “O beautiful one! Those foolish people who offer these materials (the sacred items you mentioned) to you will fall into the hell called Kālasūtra and remain there for a divine hundred years.” (42)

O Narada! Saying this, the Lord ceased speaking. From that womb was born the radiant one named Mangala (Mars). (43)

By the command of Hari, all of them worshipped the Earth. They meditated upon her and praised her with hymns as mentioned in the Kaṇva Śākhā. (44)

With the root mantra they offered naivedya and other offerings. Thus, she was praised and worshipped throughout the three worlds. (45)

Sage Narada said – “What is her meditation (dhyāna), her praise (stava), and the root mantra? These are very secret in all the Purāṇas. Therefore, my heart is eager to hear them for the sake of my desire. Please tell me.” (46)

Narayana said – “In the beginning, this Earth Goddess was worshipped by Varaha. Afterwards, she was worshipped by Brahma, and after that, King Prithu was the first to perform her worship. (47)

Thereafter, all the chief sages, Manus, and even Narada himself worshipped the Earth. O Narada! I shall tell you her meditation, praise, and mantra — listen carefully. (48)

In the beginning, Vishnu worshipped the Earth with this mantra:
‘Om hrīm śrīm bāṁ sudhāyai svāhā’. (49)

The meditation (dhyāna) of Earth is as follows: She shines with the color of the white champaka flower, with a luster like that of hundreds of moons. Her entire body is anointed with sandal paste and adorned with all ornaments. (50)

She rests upon jewels, holds jewels within her womb, is surrounded by oceans of gems, wears garments blazing like fire, and bears a gentle smile. I worship her who is venerated by all. (51)

With such meditation, this goddess is worshipped by all. O best of Brahmanas! Now listen to the hymn (stava) of the Earth Goddess as spoken in the Kaṇva Śākhā, which I now recite to you. (52)

Vishnu said – "O daughter of the sacrificial boar (yajña-śūkra), you are victory itself! O giver of victory, victory to you! O foundation of victory! O one whose nature is victory! O giver of victory! O support of all! O seed-form! You are endowed with all forms of energy and grant all desires. O Bhavā! O Devi! Grant me all that I wish for. (53–54)

You are the abode of all grains, filled with all grains, and the giver of all grains. In time, you also take away all grains. O Bhavā! You are the very form of all grains." (55)

You are auspicious, the foundation of all auspiciousness, and the giver of auspiciousness and all auspicious things. O Bhavā! O protectress of auspicious purposes, endowed with auspicious parts! Grant me auspiciousness. (56)

O Bhūme! You are the all-in-all for those who protect the land and the supreme refuge of those who dwell upon the land. You are the very form of the pride of kings (bhūmipa, rulers of the earth). O goddess of the earth! Grant me land. (57)

This hymn is supremely meritorious. Whoever, after worshipping the Earth Goddess, recites this hymn becomes a ruler of the earth for millions of births. (58)

है अर्थात् उनकी सम्पूर्ण स्थिति आयु एवं कार्यकाल समाप्त हो जाता है।

आदि सृष्टि में परमात्मा कृष्ण ने महा विराट् का सृजन किया था। जब प्रलय का समय होता है, उस समय नित्य यह दिशा-आकाश और ईश्वर के साथ स्थित रहता है ॥२२॥ पृथ्वी की अधिष्ठात्री देवी सुरों के द्वारा वाराह में यह पूजित हुई थी और मनुओं के द्वारा-मुनियों से-विप्रों के द्वारा और गन्धर्व आदि के द्वारा भी पूजित होती है ॥२३॥ यह वाराहरूप वाले विष्णु की पत्नी है जोकि श्रुति से सम्मत है। उसका पुत्र सुयश वाला मङ्गलात्मज मंगल जानने के योग्य है ॥२४॥ देवर्षि नारद ने ने कहा—वाराह कल्प में यह मही देवों के द्वारा किस रूप से पूजी गई है और वाराह के द्वारा सबके साथ वाराही पूजी गई थी जो कि सती सबका आश्रय है ॥२५॥ हे प्रभो! उसकी पूजा का विधान और नीचे का उद्धरण क्रम तथा मंगल का मङ्गल जन्म भी विस्तार पूर्वक कहिये ॥२६॥ नारायण ने कहा—पहिले समय में ब्रह्मा के द्वारा वाराह में वराह का स्तवन किया गया था और उसने हिरण्याक्ष का वध करके रसातल से इस मही का उद्धार किया था ॥२७॥ फिर उस पृथ्वी को पद्म पत्र की भाँति सागर पर स्थापित कर दिया था। वहीं पर ही ब्रह्मा ने मनोहर सर्व विश्व का निर्माण किया था ॥२८॥

उसकी अधि देवी को सकाम देखकर कामुक हरि वराह रूप वाले होकर भगवान् ने जोकि कोटि सूर्य के समान प्रभा वाले थे रति करने वाली शय्या बनाकर और परम सुन्दर मूर्ति बनाकर दिव्य वर्ष पर्यन्त रात दिन एकान्त में क्रीडा की थी ॥२९-३०॥ वह सुन्दरी सुखपूर्वक सम्भोग के संस्पर्श से मूर्च्छा को प्राप्त हो गई थी। वह परम विदग्धा थी। उसका अति विदग्ध के साथ जो संगम हुआ था वह भी अत्यन्त सुख प्रदान करने वाला था ॥३१॥ विष्णु ने उसके अंगों के संश्लेष से रात-दिन का बोध भी खो दिया था अर्थात् कब रात और दिन होता है—यह न जानते थे। जब वर्ष पूरा होकर उसका अन्त हो गया तब उन्हें चेतना प्राप्त हुई थी और कामी ने उस कामुकी का त्याग कर दिया था ॥३२॥ फिर उन्होंने अपना वही वाराह का पूर्व रूप लीला से धारणकर लिया था और सती धरणी का ध्यान करके भक्ति के साथ उसकी पूजा की थी ॥३३॥ धूप-दीप-नैवेद्य-सिन्दूर-अनुलेपन-वस्त्र-पुष्प-बलि के द्वारा भली भाँति पूजा करके हरि उस से बोले—महा वराह ने कहा—॥३४॥

Allegations-

As per the Dharma Shastras, if a younger brother marries while his elder brother remains unmarried, he is required to temporarily give his wife to the elder brother for sexual intercourse. After the elder sibling has been intimate with her, the younger brother may reclaim his wife.

Vasistha Dharma Shastra 20.8-10 Now he who has taken a wife before his elder brother shall perform a Krikkhra penance and an Atikrikkra penance, give (his wife) to that (elder brother), marry again, and take (back) the same (woman whome he wedded first). The husband of a younger sister married before her elder sister shall perform a Krikkhra penance during twelve days, marry and take to him that (elder sister). The husband of an elder sister married after the younger one shall perform a Krikkhra penance and an Atikrikkhra penance, give (his wife) to that (husband of the younger sister and marry again).

This is also mentioned in Mahabharata,

Mahabharata 12.165.67-70 “If a younger brother weds before is elder brother, then the younger brother, the elder brother and the woman that is married, all three, in consequence of such wedding, become fallen. All of them should observe the vows prescribed for a person who has neglected his sacrificial fire, or practise the vow of Chandrayana for a month, or some other painful vow, for cleansing themselves of their sin. The younger brother, wedding, should give his wife unto his unmarried elder brother. Afterwards, having obtained the permission of the elder brother, the younger brother may take back his wife."

Refutation-

Here this low-intelligence Halala Putra Muslim wanted to show that according to Mahabharat and Vasistha Dharmasutra , if the younger brother marries before the elder brother, then the younger brother has to give his wife to the elder brother.

Whereas in reality what is being said here is that if the younger brother first marries the elder brother unrighteously, then he should undergo purification and till the purification is complete, he should not have sexual intercourse with his wife and his mind should not be disturbed during the purification. For that, he has to give his wife to his elder brother (who is also considered like a father) in the form of a daughter-in-law. and after that the elder brother takes care of wife of his younger brother who is like a daughter to him and then he gets back his wife after purification penance. There is nothing sexual about this . Same explanation should be held for Vasistha Dharma Shastra 20.8-10

ज्येष्ठ भाईका विवाह होनेसे पहले ही यदि छोटा भाई अधर्मपूर्वक विवाह कर ले तो ज्येष्ठको 'परिवित्ति' कहते हैं; छोटे भाईको 'परिवेत्ता' हैं और उसकी पत्नीको जिसका परिवेदन (ग्रहण) किया जाता है, परिवेदनीया कहते हैं-ये सब-के-सब पतित माने गये हैं ।। ६८ ।। इन तीनोंको पृथक् पृथक अपनी शुद्धिके लिये उसी व्रतका आचरण करना चाहिये जो यज्ञहीन ब्राह्मणके लिये बताया गया है। अथवा एक मासतक चान्द्रायण या कृच्छ्रचान्द्रायण व्रत करे ।। ६९ ।। परिवेत्ता पुरुष उस नववधूको पतोहूके रूपमें ज्येष्ठ भाईको सौंप दे और ज्येष्ठ भाईकी आज्ञा मिलनेपर छोटा भाई उसे पत्नीरूपमें ग्रहण करे। ऐसा करनेपर वे तीनों धर्मके अनुसार पापसे छुटकारा पाते हैं ।। ७० ।।

If, before the marriage of the elder brother, the younger brother unlawfully marries, then the elder is called parivitti, the younger brother is called parivetta, and the woman whom he takes (in marriage) is called parivedanīyā — all three are considered fallen. (68)
Each of these three should separately perform the same vow prescribed for a Brahmana who has not performed a sacrifice, in order to purify themselves. Alternatively, they may observe the Chāndrāyaṇa or Kṛcchra-Chāndrāyaṇa vow for one month. (69)
The parivetta (younger brother) should hand over the new bride to the elder brother as his daughter-in-law, and after receiving the elder brother's permission, the younger may accept her as his wife. By doing so, all three become free from sin in accordance with dharma. (70)

परिवित्तिः परिवेत्ता या चैव परिविद्यते ।
पाणिग्रहात्स्वधर्मेण सर्वे ते पतिताः स्मृताः ॥ ६८ ॥

ज्येष्ठ भाईका विवाह होनेसे पहले ही यदि छोटा भाई अधर्मपूर्वक विवाह कर ले तो ज्येष्ठको 'परिवित्ति' कहते हैं, छोटे भाईको 'परिवेत्ता' हैं और उसकी पत्नीको जिसका परिवेदन (ग्रहण) किया जाता है, परिवेदनीया कहते हैं-ये सब-के-सब पतित माने गये हैं ॥ ६८ ॥

चरेयुः सर्व एवैते वीरहा यद् व्रतं चरेत् ।

इन तीनोंको पृथक्-पृथक् अपनी शुद्धिके लिये उसी व्रतका आचरण करना चाहिये जो यज्ञहीन ब्राह्मणके लिये बताया गया है। अथवा एक मासतक चान्द्रायण या कृच्छ्रचान्द्रायण व्रत करे ॥ ६९ ॥

परिवेत्ता पुरुष उस नववधूको पत्नीके रूपमें ज्येष्ठ भाईको सौंप दे और ज्येष्ठ भाईकी आज्ञा मिलनेपर छोटा भाई उसे पत्नीरूपमें ग्रहण करे। ऐसा करनेपर वे तीनों धर्मके अनुसार पापसे छुटकारा पाते हैं ॥ ७० ॥

PUNISHMENT FOR SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH BROTHER'S WIFE IS DEATH SENTENCE AS PER SANATAN SCIPTURES

Narada Smriti 12.73-75

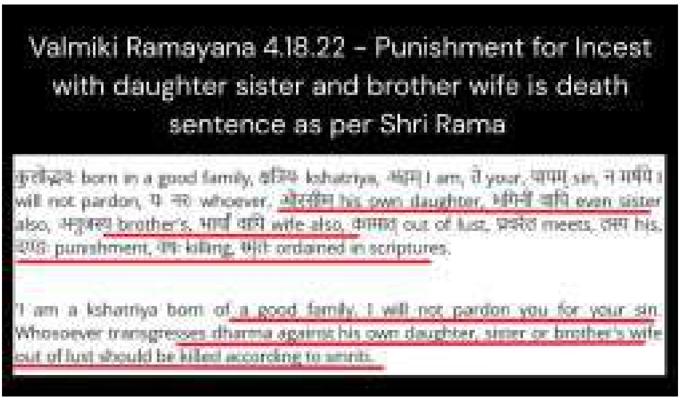
निम्नोक्त बीस सम्बन्धियों से सम्भोग करने वाले युवक के लिंग को काट देना ही इस पाप का एकमात्र दण्ड है, इसके अतिरिक्त दूसरा कोई दण्ड नहीं है-सम्बन्धी स्त्रियां हैं-

1. अपने पिता की पत्नी (माता तथा माता से भिन्न अन्य स्त्री, विमाता आदि), 2. माता की भगिनी (मौसी), 3. सासू मां, 4. मामी, 5. पिता की बहिन, बुआ, 6. चाचा की पत्नी या रखैल, 7. शिष्य की स्त्री, 8. बहिन, चाचा, मामा आदि की लड़की, 10. पुत्रवधू, 11. अपनी पुत्री, 12. आचार्य की पत्नी, 13. अपने गोत्र-दूर के चाचा, भाई आदि की बहिन, पुत्री, बहू आदि, 14. शरण में आयी हुई असहाय स्त्री, 15. रानी, 16. संन्यासिनी, 17. दायी – पालन करने वाली अथवा स्तनपान कराने वाली स्त्री, 18. उत्तमर्ण की पतिव्रता स्त्री, 19. अपने वर्ण से भिन्न वर्ण-जाति की स्त्री तथा 20. भाई की पत्नी।

"For a youth who engages in sexual relations with any of the following twenty female relatives, the only punishment for this sin is the severing of his genitals. There is no other punishment apart from this." The related women are: The wife of one's father (mother or stepmother, etc.), Mother's sister (maternal aunt),Mother-in-law, Aunt (wife of maternal uncle), Father's sister (paternal aunt), Wife of an uncle, The wife of one's disciple, Sister or daughters of one's uncles (paternal/maternal cousins), Daughter-in-law, One's own daughter, The wife of one's teacher (guru), The sister, daughter, or wife of a distant relative of the same lineage (gotra), A helpless woman who has taken refuge, A queen, A female ascetic (sannyasini), A wet nurse or a woman who raised the person, The devoted wife of a noble man, A woman of a different caste or social class than one's own, Brother's wife.

Valmiki Ramayana 4.18.22 – Punishment for Incest with daughter sister and brother wife is death sentence as per Shri Rama

“As a Kshatriya emerged from a best dynasty I do not tolerate your wrongdoing, and the punishment to the one who lustfully indulges with his daughter, or with his sister, or with the wife of his younger brother is his elimination, as recalled from scriptures.



Valmiki Ramayana 4.18.22 – Punishment for Incest with daughter sister and brother wife is death sentence as per Shri Rama

कुलीनः born in a good family, क्षत्रियः kshatriya, अस्मि I am, ते your, पापम् sin, न मर्षये I will not pardon, यः नरः whoever, औरसीम् his own daughter, भगिनीं वापि even sister also, अनुजस्य brother's, भार्यां वापि wife also, कामात् out of lust, प्रवर्तेत meets, तस्य his, दण्डः punishment, वधः killing, स्मृतः ordained in scriptures.

'I am a kshatriya born of a good family. I will not pardon you for your sin. Whosoever transgresses dharma against his own daughter, sister or brother's wife out of lust should be killed according to smriti.

Allegations-

Ram says that he liberated Sita from Ravana not because of his affection to Sita but only to get back his lost honor. Ram clearly tells Sita that he has not affection towards Sita. And then goes on to say that Sita is free to take shelter elsewhere, the Maryada Purshottom (ideal man) even tells his wife to go to any person namely Lakshaman, Bharat, Shatrughna, Sugreeva or even to demon Vibhishan the brother of Ravana. Hearing these words of Rama, Sita started to cry.

Valmiki Ramayana, Yuddha Kanda 6, Sarga 115, verses 1-25 "… Let it be known to you that this endeavor in the shape of war, which has been successful carried through, due to the strength of my friends was not undertaken for your sake. Let there be prosperity to you! This was done by me in order to keep up my good conduct and to wipe off the evil-speaking from all sides as well as the insinuation on my own illustrious dynasty. You, with a suspicion arisen on your character, standing in front of me, are extremely disagreeable to me, even as a light to one, who is suffering from a poor eye-sight. O Seetha! That is why, I am permitting you now. Go wherever you like. All these ten directions are open to you, my dear lady! There is no work to be done to me, by you. Which noble man, born in an illustrious race, will take back a woman who lived in another's abode, with an eager mind? While mentioning greatly about my lineage, how can I accept again, you who were harassed in Ravana's lap (while being borne away by him) and who were seen (by him) with evil looks? You were won by me with that end in view (viz. the retrieval of my lost honour). The honour has been restored by me. For me, there is no intense attachment in you. You may go wherever you like from here. O gracious lady! Therefore, this has been spoken by me today, with a resolved mind. Set your mind on Lakshmana or Bharata, as per your ease. O Seetha! Otherwise, set your mind either on Shatrughna or on Sugreeva or on Vibhishana the demon; or according to your own comfort. Seeing you, who are endowed with a beautiful form and attractive to the sense, detained for long in his abode, Ravana could not have endured your separation. Hearing that unpalatable speech of her beloved husband, Seeta who used to hear pleasing words alone, was very much trembled for long, like a creeper attacked by the proboscis of an elephant and thereupon shed tears."

Ravana then came near Devi. Sita who of unendurable prowess became invisible created a look like image of herself. Leaving behind that image she left for Kailasa immediately. She remained there being worshipped by Shiva and Parvati.

After Lakshmana left Ravana hurried to abduct Sita. In the meanwhile Sita left for Kailasa. Before leaving she called 'Agni devata' and got an image made and left it there. Ravana mistook her for real Sita. He abducted her. Thus Ravana only got 'Maaya Sita' and not real Sita.

2. Bhavishyotara Purana says: Ravana after having accepted the hospitality from Sita in the guise of a 'sanyaasi' later tells her that forest is not the place for such beautiful women. Sita at that instant meditatated on Agni Deva He appeared immediately and spoke to Ravana, 'Hey Ravana this is not true Sita. Out of fear that she will be forced by evil people in the forest she has come for rescue to 'pataala loka' and is staying with me leaving behind her look like image. This is just her image. Wait and I will bring the true Sita and hand her to you. I am giving her to you because you worship me with devotion. He then took the real sita and brought 'Vedavati' who finally entered the sacrificial fire after the war. Ravana did not trust any devatas. However he had regard for Agni who was the basis for all 'tapas' and also for Brahma who responded to the 'penance' by granting boons. Thus he believed Agni Deva's words. Thus he left the real Sita and took her image brought by Agni.
3. When it is said that Sita went to Kailasa and was being worshipped by Shiva and Parvati, it goes without saying that she is none other than Mahalakshmi who is much higher than them in hierarchy.

One amsha of Sita was in the image so that she could bless Hanuman and also to make Ravana face the total consequences of result of such lowly action. One roopa of Sita went to 'paataala loka' with Agni and later went to Kailasa.

Then Sri Rama made that image of Sita which had come there enter the fire as if for divine ordeal, and accepted that real Sita who had come back from Kailasa, and who was presented by Agni..
Special Notes:

1. Sri Rama had taken an oath that He would not enter any city for fourteen years. Therefore He made Lakshmana perform Vibheeshana's coronation. He sent word to Sita (Image of Sita) news about victory, and formally called her through Vibheeshana. He did not run after Sita but killed his enemy who had abducted her and got her back through his younger brother which shows Rama's valor.
2. Was Sri Rama right in making Sita go through the fire test? is a common question that arises in every mind. Sri Rama did this for the sake of the society and also Sri Madhvacharya gives another important reason for this Sita who was abducted by Ravana and who was now standing beforte Sri Rama now was only an image of Sita. That is why Sri Rama did not accept her. He made her enter the fire. At that time real Sita who was in kailasa enetered the Agni and came out of it who was accepted by Sri Rama. It is an example to know Sri Rama's 'sarvajnathva.'

Allegations-

Shiva in order "to test" the devotion of a couple, went to their house as a Brahmin guest, the husband Sudarshana had advised his wife to treat their guests well as guests are equivalent to Shiva. Finding that Sudarshana was not in the house, Shiva had sex with the wife of Sudarshana, meanwhile, Sudarshana arrived at his home but Shiva brazenly and shamelessly told him that he is having sex with Sudarshana's wife, Sudarshana instead of rebuking Shiva was "delighted" and went away.

Linga Purana, Section I, chapter 29, verses 46-64 "Formerly, a householder known as Sudarsana, vowed to conquer the God of Death. He said to his chaste wife. 'O lady of good holy rites, fine eye-brows and good fortune, listine to what I say, assiduously. Never should you dishonour the guests who visit your gouse. Since everyone of the guests is the Pinaka bearing lord, you should dedicate even your self to the guest and adore him...O excellent brahmins, in order to test their devotion, Dharma himself assumed the form of a brahmin and came to the house of the sage...Dharma disguised as a brahmin said 'O gentle lady

Refutation-

Here is Linga Purana, Section I, chapter 29, verses 46-64 Geeta Press hindi translation . You can read this translation properly nowhere mention of any sexual interocourse or any such thing like Adultery

The passage does not describe any act of adultery or misconduct by Dharma with the sage's wife. In this story, Dharma merely assumes the form of a Brāhmaṇa to test the devotion of the sage Sudarśana and his wife towards the sacred duty of welcoming guests. Following her husband's instructions, the chaste wife offers him water, arghya, and respect as part of guest service, without even a hint of impropriety. When Sudarśana returns home, Dharma reveals his true form, praises both of them for their unwavering adherence to dharma, and blesses them, declaring that through their devotion to atithi-pūjā (hospitality) they have conquered death. After granting them a boon, he departs. The entire episode is about the greatness of guest worship and not about lust, seduction, or adultery.

Verse 45
For crossing over the ocean of worldly existence (bhava-sāgara) and for the purification of the soul, there is no other means in this world for householders and noble twice-born ones except for the worship of guests.

Verses 46–47
In ancient times, a householder sage renowned by the name Sudarśana took a vow to conquer death. He said to his virtuous wife, who was blessed with children:
"O auspicious one! O beautiful-browed lady! O fortunate one! Listen carefully—
You must, with full effort, always honor and serve guests and never show them any disrespect."

Verses 48–50½
"The guest is verily the embodiment of Śiva, the bearer of the bow Pināka. Therefore, even after offering everything you possess, worship the guest with full devotion.
O dear one! A guest is none other than Śiva Himself. One must give everything to a guest who is the very form of Śiva. Hence, all guests should always be worshipped without fail."

Verse 51½
Hearing her husband's words, that chaste wife, devoted to the path of pativratā-dharma, accepted her husband's instructions like flowers offered before a deity, placing them on her head in reverence, and engaged wholeheartedly in serving guests.

Verses 52–53
O noble twice-born ones! To test the faith of that couple, Dharma himself came to their hermitage in the form of a beautiful Brāhmaṇa. Seeing that Brāhmaṇa, the pure-hearted wife of the sage worshipped him with offerings of water for washing the feet (arghya) and other rituals.

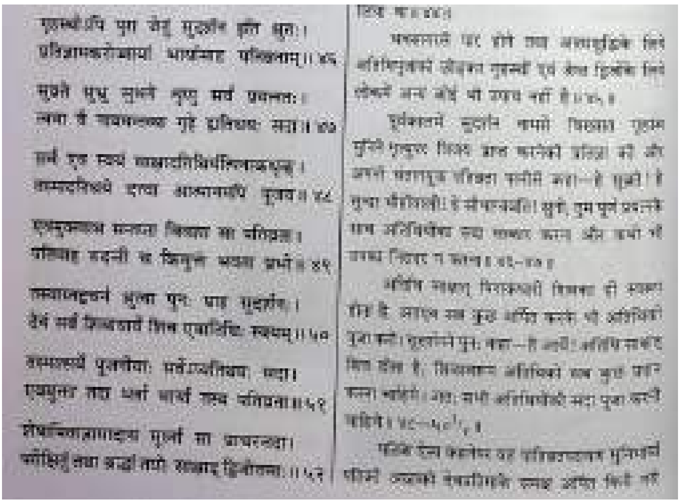
Verses 54–56½
"Where is the wise sage Sudarśana?"—asked the Brāhmaṇa. Then, recalling her husband's instructions, that lady firmly resolved in her mind to serve the guest, who was in fact Dharma in disguise, with proper hospitality.

Verses 57–60½
Pleased by the thorough hospitality shown by that woman, the guest—Dharma in the guise of a Brāhmaṇa—spoke to her:
"O auspicious lady! Because of your service…"
Just at that moment, her wise husband Sudarśana arrived at the door of the house and called out:
"O gentle one! Where have you gone?"
Then the guest, Dharma himself, spoke to him:
"O greatly fortunate one! I am extremely pleased with you."

Verses 61–63
After this, Dharma revealed his true form to them and, granting them a boon of their heart's desire, spoke with great brilliance:
"O foremost of Brāhmaṇas! I have come here only to test your faith. O virtuous one! By your single-minded guest-worship, which is itself Dharma, you have conquered even Death!"

Saying, "Ah! What radiance this ascetic possesses!", Dharma then departed.

Verses 64–65
Therefore, one must always worship guests.
O unfortunate sages! What more can be said?
Quickly, all of you, take refuge in that great Lord Mahādeva!



DEBUNKING ALLEGATIONS OF IMMORALITY IN HINDUISM BY PEDOPHILE FOLLOWERS

Allegations-

Immorality

Hinduism has many more immoral things prescribed in the scripture.Ravana describes the color of Sita's nipples,

Valmiki Ramayana, Aranya Kanda 3.46.16-20 "While standing before her then Ravana eyed at the auspicious wife of Rama, whose lips and teeth are fine, visage is shiny like a full moon, and who is presently tortured by her tearful lamentation and sitting in the straw-cottage, and he approached that lotus-petal eyed Vaidehi who is dressed in chry silks, as that night-walker is gladdened at his heart for her solitude. Glittering like the glitter of gold, silkened in ochry silks, you are like a lotus-tendril garlanded with divine lotuses as your ensemble, who are you?" Thus Ravanan started addressing Seetha. "Oh, rosy faced one, are you the personified numen of Respect, Renown or Resplendence, or the Felicitous Lakshmi herself, or oh, curvaceous one, are you a nymphal Apsara, or the numen of Benefactress, or a self-motivated woman, or Rati Devi, the consort of Manmatha, the Love God. "Your hips are beamy, thighs burly akin to elephant's trunks, and these two breasts of yours that are ornamented with best jewellery are rotund, rubbing and bumping each other, and they are swinging up and up, their nipples are brawny and jutting out, and they are smoothish like palm-fruits, thus they are covetable for they are beautiful."

Refutation-

First of all, these are the words of Rāvaṇa, an evil Rākṣasa, not those of any self-controlled Ṛṣi, Mahārṣi, or Brahmarṣi. Rāvaṇa's wicked nature is well-documented, and the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa itself provides ample proof of his cruelty, arrogance, and sinful conduct.

Valmiki Ramayana 5.20.5 Geeta Press Gorakhpur

भीरु ! (तुम यह न समझो कि मैंने कोई अधर्म किया है) परायी स्त्रियोंके पास जाना अथवा बलात् उन्हें हर लाना यह राक्षसोंका सदा ही अपना धर्म रहा है- इसमें संदेह नहीं है ॥ ५ ॥

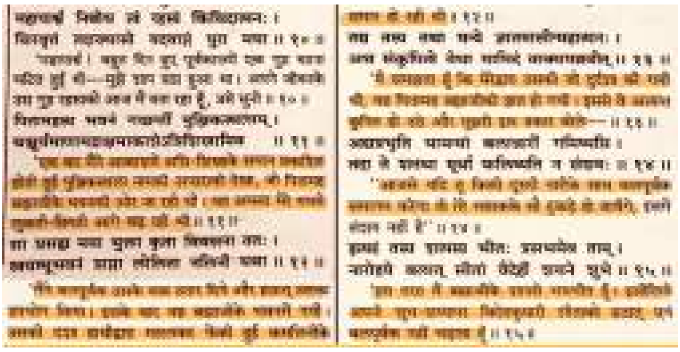
'भीरु ! (तुम यह न समझो कि मैंने कोई अधर्म किया है) परायी स्त्रियोंके पास जाना अथवा बलात् उन्हें हर लाना यह राक्षसोंका सदा ही अपना धर्म रहा है—इसमें संदेह नहीं है ॥ ५ ॥

Due to his rape of Apsarā Punjikasthalā, Rāvaṇa was cursed by Brahmā ji that if he rapes a woman again, his head will burst into pieces.

"Śrīmad Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 13, Gita Press, Gorakhpur, No. 75, Samvat 2071, Part 2, Pages 232–233."



We already know from Mahābhārata Tatparya Nirṇaya, .dhyāya 3, that Devī Sītā never even came into contact with Rāvaṇa.

When Rāvaṇa came seeking her, the real Devī Sītā became invisible and created an illusory image of herself. Into this image, Indra entered and gave it life so it could act and speak like her. It was this illusory form that Rāvaṇa approached and abducted. Rāvaṇa neither saw nor touched the real Devī Sītā at any point.

Mahabharat Tatparya Nirnaya Adhaya 3

Ravana then came near Devi. Sita who of unendurable prowess became invisible created a look like image of herself. Leaving behind that image she left for Kailasa immediately. She remained there being worshipped by Shiva and Parvati.

1. After Lakshmana left Ravana hurried to abduct Sita. In the meanwhile Sita left for Kailasa. Before leaving she called 'Agni devata' and got an image made and left it there. Ravana mistook her for real Sita. He abducted her. Thus Ravana only got 'Maaya Sita' and not real Sita.
2. Bhavishyotara Purana says: Ravana after having accepted the hospitality from Sita in the guise of a 'sanyaasi' later tells her that forest is not the place for such beautiful women. Sita at that instant meditatated on Agni Deva He appeared immediately and spoke to Ravana, 'Hey Ravana this is not true Sita. Out of fear that she will be forced by evil people in the forest she has come for rescue to 'pataala loka' and is staying with me leaving behind her look like image. This is just her image. Wait and I will bring the true Sita and hand her to you. I am giving her to you because you worship me with devotion. He then took the real sita and brought 'Vedavati' who finally entered the sacrificial fire after the war. Ravana did not trust any devatas. However he had regard for Agni who was the basis for all 'tapas' and also for Brahma who responded to the 'penance' by granting boons. Thus he believed Agni Deva's words. Thus he left the real Sita and took her image brought by Agni.
3. When it is said that Sita went to Kailasa and was being worshipped by Shiva and Parvati, it goes without saying that she is none other than Mahalakshmi who is much higher than them in hierarchy.
4. The term apyavishahyashakti: means that she could have burnt Ravana with her strength if she had wished to do so.
5. Several Puranas such as Koorma, Varaha, Brahmavaivarta, Bhavishyotara, Agni, and also Adhbuta Ramayana have said that Ravana abducted 'Maaya Sita.' Valmiki Ramayana also gives a hint on this factor says Shri Sathyabhoda Theertaru in their commentary on Valmiki Ramayana.

दसमुख गयउ जहाँ मारीचा। नाइ माथ स्वारथ रत नीचा॥

भगवान्‌ने जो कुछ लीला रची, इस रहस्यको लक्ष्मणजीने भी नहीं जाना। स्वार्थपरायण और नीच रावण वहाँ गया जहाँ मारीच था और उसको सिर नवाया॥ ३॥

So, when Rāvaṇa approached and spoke those evil words "before Sītā," it was not even the real Devī Sītā who was hearing them. Instead, it was the illusory image of Sītā, into which Indra had already entered. Knowing full well the wicked intentions of Rāvaṇa, Indra — in the form of this image — did not respond to his vile speech and simply acted naturally until the image of Māta Sītā was abducted by Rāvaṇa.

The disappearance of the real Māta Sītā, the kidnapping of her image, and the eventual destruction of Rāvaṇa and all the Rākṣasas were all part of a pre-destined divine Līlā. There is nothing immoral about this

Allegations-

Shiva appeared with erected penis before Brahma and Vishnu, Linga Purana Part 1, Chapter 20, Verses 59-62. "O Viṣṇu, who is this incomprehensible person with a huge face and urved fangs? With hairs dishavelled, with ten arms stretched and holding a trident, with all-round eyes he seems to be the lord of the universe. He has a deformed body and a girdle of Muñja grass. With huge penis lifted up, he is roaring loudly and terribly. With a mass of splendour and lustre he has enveloped the quarters and the firmament. He comes this way itself."

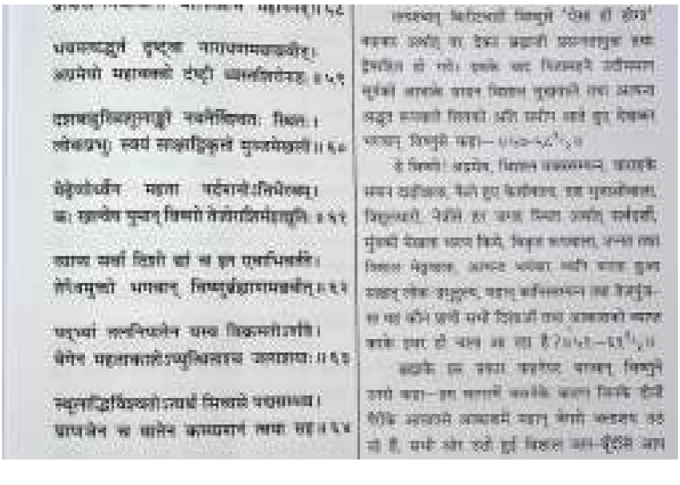
Refutation-

Here is Linga Purana Part 1, Chapter 20, Verses 59-62 Geeta Press Gorakhpur hindi translation you can read it nowhere written such thing

तत्पश्चात् किरीटधारी विष्णुसे 'ऐसा ही होगा' कहकर अर्थात् वर देकर ब्रह्माजी प्रसन्नतायुक्त तथा द्वेषरहित हो गये। इसके बाद पितामहने उदीयमान सूर्यकी आभाके समान विशाल मुखवाले तथा अत्यन्त अद्भुत रूपवाले शिवको अति समीप आते हुए देखकर भगवान् विष्णुसे कहा- ॥ ५७-५८/२॥
हे विष्णो ! अप्रमेय, विशाल वक्त्रसम्पन्न, वाराहके समान दाढ़ोंवाला, फैले हुए केशोंवाला, दश भुजाओंवाला, त्रिशूलधारी, नेत्रोंसे हर जगह स्थित अर्थात् सर्वदर्शी, मुंजकी मेखला धारण किये, विकृत रूपवाला, उन्नत तथा विशाल मेढ्वाला, अत्यन्त भयंकर ध्वनि करता हुआ साक्षात् लोक-प्रभुतुल्य, महान् कान्तिसम्पन्न तथा तेजपुंज-सा यह कौन प्राणी सभी दिशाओं तथा आकाशको व्याप्त करके इधर ही चला आ रहा है? ॥ ५९-६११/२ ॥
ब्रह्माके इस प्रकार कहनेपर भगवान् विष्णुने उनसे कहा-इस सागरमें चलनेके कारण जिनके दोनों पैरोंके आघातसे आकाशमें महान् वेगसे जलाशय उठ रहे हैं, सभी ओर उठी हुई विशाल

After that, the crown-bearing Vishnu said "So it shall be," granting the boon, and Brahmā became pleased and free from enmity. Then, the grandsire (Brahmā), seeing the greatly wondrous form of Śiva—whose vast face was like the radiance of the rising sun—approaching very near, spoke to Lord Vishnu:

"O Viṣṇu! Who is this immeasurable one, possessing a great mouth, with tusks like a boar's, with flowing locks of hair, ten-armed, bearing a trident, all-seeing with eyes that behold everything, girdled with a muñja grass belt, of a fierce form, having an elevated and massive belly, making a terribly loud sound, equal to the very Lord of the worlds in might, endowed with great splendor, and blazing like a mass of energy, who is advancing here filling all the quarters and the sky?



Allegations-

When Shiva's wife died, he held her dead body and kissed her frequently which can be considered Necrophilia,

Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Krishna Janma Khanda 43.1-24 "… Lamenting thus and afflicted with grief, he held the dead body of his beloved wife to his breast and kissed and embraced it again and again. Siva pressed his lips to the lips of his beloved and embracing her repeatedly swooned again"

Refutation-

Lets cross check his own refrence and source from Normal Brahma Vaivarta Purana Recession and expose his hypocrisy

For those who dont know meaning of Necrophilia – NECROPHILIA IS THE UNATURAL OFFESENCE OF DEFILING A DEAD BODY OR COOPSE BY COMITTING SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH THE DEAD.

Here is Brahma Vaivarta Purana Krishna Janma Khanda 43.16-17 english translation of the Normal Recession (Interpolated ones)

I think Mullas have some problem with their eye sight, they don't know how to see clearly even their own reference, so let me show you the truth

Here is Bramhvaivarata Mahapuranam Krsna janama khanda, Ch-43,1-11th shloka Where lord shiva became sad for Maata sati as she Left her body. Just the name of the chapter exposes the hypocrisy of these Muslims – Chapter – 43 Śiva Relieved of the Grief

Grief is the deep sadness and loss you feel when someone you love dies.
The death of a loved one can mean a big change in your life. It takes time to cope with your loss and find ways to adapt. Comfort and support from others con help as you go through grief.

Losing a loved one is a traumatic experience for anyone. Sometimes people who are emotionally upset, hug and kiss the body of the deceased.

Chapter - 43

Śiva Relieved of the Grief

नारायण उवाच

[illegible]

Nārāyaṇa said- on looking at the body of Pārvatī Mahādeva which looked as sleeping, the lustre of whose face was still illumining and had not faded out. She was clad in white garment, holding a rosary in her hand, was illumining with the divine lustre and the charming rays of her body which looked like the molten gold were spreading everywhere. At the sight of the image Śiva's mind started burning with separation. Though he happened to be well-versed in all the sastras, still he fainted and fell down on the ground.

[illegible]

Śiva who had been valorous, felt painful with the separation of his wife. He is the one who always roams about is the best among the best, the seed of the Vedas, the teacher of the yogic practices, he also felt painful with the death of Satī.

[illegible]

After regaining consciousness, immovable Śiva looked like the fallen trunk of the tree. Looking at the lotus-like face of Satī he spoke.

[illegible]

At that point of time his eyes were filled with tears. Though he happens to be the refuge of down-trodden and removes the miseries of the miserable people, still his condition became miserable and he started lamenting.

शंकर उवाच

[illegible]

Śiva said- O beautiful one, O chaste lady of my life, get up I happen to be Śiva, your husband. You look at me since I have come to you.

[illegible]

Though I possess the form of welfare, bestow welfare and the form of all the riches, bestow success, the soul all and the lord of all but in spite of that I happen to be like a dead body without you.

[illegible]

You possess all the prowess, I become competent only when you are with me. Without you I loose my skill and become still in all the performance.

[illegible]

O dear, you possess the special knowledge, the one who is not aware of the importance of Sakti, such a person devoid of knowledge and denounce her. It is not proper for you to leave me. But why are you disowning me?

[illegible]

Slokas 16-17

Now simple kissing and hugging due to grief for separation has been Claimed as Necrophilia by these Muslims . Tell me where is Necrophilia in Simple kissing and hugging due to grief for separation

इत्युक्त्वा मृतदेहं च प्रियाया विरहातुरः।
निधायोरसि संश्लिष्य चुचुम्ब च पुनः पुनः॥१६॥
अधरे चाधरं दत्त्वा वक्षो वक्षसि शंकरः।
पुनः पुनः समाश्लिष्य पुनर्मूर्च्छामवाप सः॥१७॥

Thus speaking Śiva infested with the separation of Satī, lifted up the body of his beloved and embraced her, kissing at again and again. He placed his lips over her lips and the chest over her breasts. Thus he embraced her again and again while lamenting.

The Next slokas also mention Maheswar Shiva great Sorrow and continuous crying and tears coming from his eyes becuase of separation from Sati and how he became lifeless with this grief of separation

पुनः स चेतनां प्राप्य वेगादुत्थाय शोकतः।
दुद्राव च यथोन्मत्तो ज्ञानिनां च गुरोर्गुरुः॥१८॥
सप्तद्वीपं सप्तसिन्धुं लोकालोकं च काञ्चनम्।
बभ्राम भ्रान्तवज्ज्ञानी सतीं कृत्वा स्ववक्षसि॥१९॥

After regaining consciousness, he got up with force infatuated with grief. Inspire of his being the teacher of the intellectuals, he started wandering like an intoxicated person. Carrying the body of Satī, he wandered in the seven islands, seven oceans various countries and nountains. He started wandering in the fallacy.

रूरोदोच्चै: स्वयं कृत्वा सति साध्वीत्युदीर्य च।
त्रिनेत्रनेत्रनीरेण संबभूव सरोवरम्॥२१॥
तन्नेत्रं च सरो नाम मुनीनां तपस: स्थलम्।
योजनद्वयविस्तीर्णं पुण्यतीर्थं मनोहरम्॥२२॥
यत्र स्नात्वा पुनर्जन्म नराणां न भवेद्गिरे।
शतजन्मकृतं पापं स्नानमात्रेण नश्यति॥२३॥

He started crying, "O Satī, O chaste women". Thus crying he started shouting loudly. At that point of time the tears flowing from the eyes of Śiva were turned into a lake which was given the name of Netrasara. In due course of time it became the place for performing tapas by the sages. This auspicious and holy place was spread over an area of two yojanas. O mountain, while taking a bath in that sacred place, the humans do not have to be reborn. Having a dip into that water all the sins of the people disappear.

Then reciting the name of Satī the lady of his life, Śiva again fainted. The one who was always roaming in his own soul, even forgot Brahman. Thus the one who fulfilled the desires of others became lifeless with the grief of the separation of Satī and was seated under the banyan tree. He was lying there unconsciousness and finding him in that condition, all the gods were surprised. All of them than went to Śiva Lord Nārāyaṇa also accompanied with his attendants reached at the place. His feet were adorned by Kamalā with the ornaments of gems. He was wearing a pītāmbara had four arms, wore a smile on his face, was delightful and adorned with long garland of forest flowers. Dharma accompanied by gods and the sages arrived there and bowed in reverence to the lord of Lakṣmī. All of them were seated in an assembly there. Thereafter lord Hari took Śiva in his lap, who happen to be the teacher of the intellectuals and was crying. He than started consoling him.

त्रिनेत्र उवाच

कस्त्वं तेज:स्वरूपोऽसि क इमे तव संनिधौ।
किन्नाम भक्तश्चैषां कानि नामानि का सती॥४३॥
कोऽहं को मे भवान्भूते किंकरा: कुत आगता:।
क्व यास्यसि क्व यास्यामि क्व गच्छन्त इमे वद॥४४।

Śiva said- O form of lustre, who are you? Who are all the people surrounding you? What is Satī? Who am I? Who are you all talking with me where are these attendants going? You please tell me.

Now if this is still Necrophilia then Muslims should also consider this as Necrophilia and their Prophet Muhammad as Necrophile for kissing the death body of Uthman
…on Mazun

Sunan Abi Dawud 3163 – I saw the Messenger of Allah (ﷺ) that he kissed Uthman ibn Maz'un while he was dead, and I saw that tears were flowing (from his eyes).

Meanwhile Islamic Hadiths itself establishes that Prophet Muhammad had sexual intercourse with the dead body of his foster mother

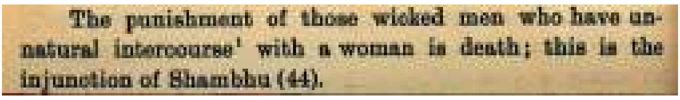
Meanwhile Shri Maheshwar Shiva himself said that punishments for unnatural intercourse with woman (including Necrophilia) is death sentence

Mahanirvana Tantra 11.44 – गच्छतां कामतः पुंसः स्त्रियाः पायुं दुरात्मनाम् । वध एव विधातव्यो भूभृता शम्भुशासनात् ॥४४॥

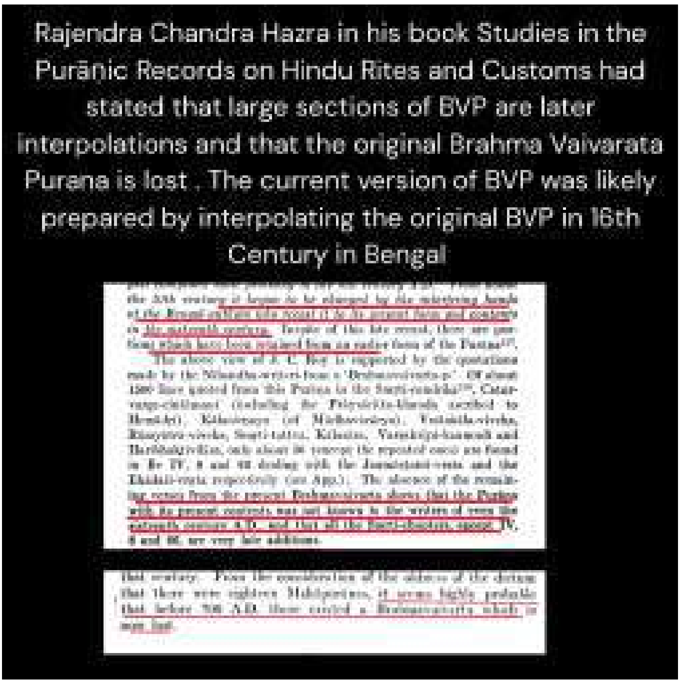
The punishment of those wicked men who have un-natural intercourse with a woman is death; this is the injunction of Shambhu (44).



The punishment of those wicked men who have unnatural intercourse[1] with a woman is death; this is the injunction of Shambhu (44).

IS THIS PRAKARAN REALLY AUTHENTIC ? ANSWER IS : NO

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata Purana Volume 1 and 2 translated by Ram Sharma Acharya QR code provided here

Allegations-

Hindu God Shiva had sex with his dead wife sati Brahmanda Purana 2.6-10 “Pieces of dead body of Hindu goddess Sati fall everywhere on earth and shiva finds her vagina at Kamarupa and put his penis into it”

Refutation-

First of all, the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa does not have any classification such as “2.6–10.” The authentic structure of this Purāṇa is divided into Khaṇḍas (sections), then Adhyāyas (chapters), and then individual Ślokas (verses). Hence, any citation given as "2.6–10" is misleading and inauthentic.

Now, the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa is preserved in two major Khaṇḍas:

1. Pūrvārdha (First Half)
2. Uttarārdha (Second Half)

If Halāla Putra is making an allegation based on "Adhyāya 2, verses 6–10," then it must be verified in which Khaṇḍa this reference supposedly belongs. Without specifying the Khaṇḍa, the quotation is unreliable and cannot be traced in the authentic recension.

Therefore, to clarify the matter, we will examine Adhyāya 2, verses 6–10 in both Khaṇḍas of the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa and present the correct Hindi translation. This will expose whether the so-called reference is genuine or simply fabricated/misquoted.

In none of the Khaṇḍas of the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa is any such thing written. The Purāṇa is divided into Khaṇḍa → Adhyāya → Śloka, and nowhere in either the Pūrvārdha or the Uttarārdha do we find the verses alleged by Halāla Putra.

Hence, this Halāla Putra, a follower of a pedophile prophet, is blatantly lying and fabricating false quotations to malign Sanātana Dharma. His so-called references do not exist in the authentic text of the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa.

Allegations-

Necrophilia in Sankhayana is obscure, it mentions that the queen is supposed to lie near the sacrificed human just as in Ashvamedha but it doesn't mention the placing of the penis into the vagina like in the case of Ashavmedha Yajna.

Sankhayana Srauta Sutra 16.13.7-13 "When the human victim has been quieted, they cause the first consort of the sacrificer (king) to lie down near it. They cover them both with the upper garment. These two the sacrificer addresses in the same manner. The injurious verses are 'A royal consort, who is rejected'… The verses for making (the consort, who still rests near the victim) to arise are 'Arise O woman 'Arise from there, thou who hast a husband', 'Arise from there O Visvavasu 'Rich in stones' (one verse for each of the four rtvijs."

Refutation-

Here is Sankhayana Srauta Sutra 16.13.7-13 mool sanskrit lokas and its english translation nowhere such thing is told

The sacrificer (Puruṣa) is Nārāyaṇa, and the Hotṛ (reciting priest) performs the offering for him.

Then the priests — Hotṛ, Brahman, Udgātṛ, and Adhvaryu — approach him, saying: "You have gone to the far shore." They do so in groups of two.

Next, they treat (heal) the sacrificer.

They recite in order the verses: "O gods! I release you who are restrained; I revive you with the offering; let the wind blow the healing for you through your eyes and your nostrils."

The Nairṛta priests (those of the southwest quarter) recite Pr tāryāyuḥ one by one.

The Śāntātiya priests recite in groups of three.

The chief queen is brought close to the sacrificer.

With a certain ceremonial covering, they wrap the two together.

Then, in the same way, the sacrificer symbolically approaches her.

Those who approach him recite: "He is covered, without breath, unwashed, whose eyes are unbathed, whose hair is rough."

The northern reciters reply with northern verses.

The Adhvaryu recites the eastern verse.

The women who raise him up recite: "Arise, woman, arise — arise, O wife — arise, O all-pervading one, arise, O stone-bearer."

The priest chants three verses: “O mind, be gathered together; may your yoke be like that of Yama.”

The Brahman recites an invitatory formula.

In the assembly hall, the Brahman speaks in due form.

The Hotṛ asks the Adhvaryu, “The cows — are they barley?” He answers with the second verse; asks again with the third verse, and he answers with the fourth.

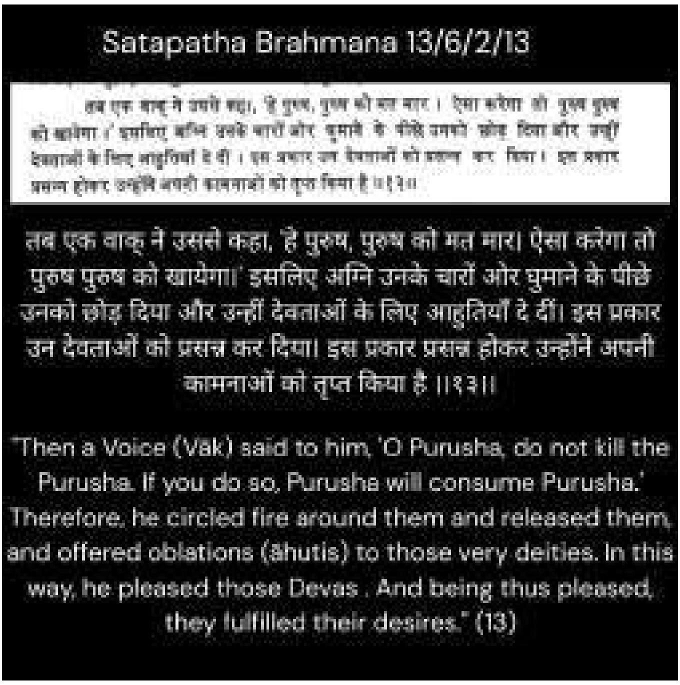
The Brahman asks the Udgātṛ: “Two libations I have heard of for the Fathers.” He answers with the second verse; asks again with the alternate verse, and answers with the concluding verse.

Further here the context is about Purushamedha Yagya . In Purushamedha Yagya killing real humans is prohibited

Satapatha Brahmana 13/6/2/13

तब एक वाक् ने उससे कहा, 'हे पुरुष, पुरुष को मत मार। ऐसा करेगा तो पुरुष पुरुष को खायेगा।' इसलिए अग्नि उनके चारों ओर घुमाने के पीछे उनको छोड़ दिया और उन्हीं देवताओं के लिए आहुतियाँ दे दीं। इस प्रकार उन देवताओं को प्रसन्न कर दिया। इस प्रकार प्रसन्न होकर उन्होंने अपनी कामनाओं को तृप्त किया है ।।१३।।

“Then a Voice (Vāk) said to him, ’O Purusha, do not kill the Purusha. If you do so, Purusha will consume Purusha.’ Therefore, he circled fire around them and released them, and offered oblations (āhutis) to those very deities. In this way, he pleased those Devas . And being thus pleased, they fulfilled their desires.” (13)



Further this is How Purushmedha Yagya is done

Bhattabhaskara Mishra ji wrote – पयिक्तकता उत्सूजयन्ते – revealing that the yajna fire is taken around brahmin, kshatriya, vaishya, shudra, and they are released.

Regarding Ashwamedha Yagya and allegations on Ashwamedha Yagya I have already explained and debunked allegations on Ashwamedha Yagya in a short Section under the Bestiality Refutation section-

ASHWAMEDHA YAGYA

Allegations-

Padma Purana 1.31.123-127 states that Shiva offered his testicles to a hungry Shivaduti as food,

Padma Purana, Srsti Khanda section 1, chapter 31, verses 123-127 "Thus addressed Maheśvara, the god of gods, told them in the vicinity of Pārvatī about their food: "I have accomplished the food prepared in many ways. All that is exhausted. And no other (kind of food) is seen here…. I shall give you as food which has never been tasted before by anyone. Below my navel are these two circular long and fruit-like testicles. Even with this food you will have great satisfaction."

Refutation-

The problem here is the lack of understanding. Is Maheshwar Shiva's body like an normal human..? Idiotic claims made by these fools are debunked by Vedas and Samhitas itself. It's foolishness to regard body and each and every body part of Shiva as a normal one.

सर्वभूतान्तरात्मा ब्रह्मका विश्वरूप

अग्निर्मूर्धा चक्षुषी चन्द्रसूर्यौ
दिशः श्रोत्रे वाग्विवृताश्च वेदाः ।
वायुः प्राणो हृदयं विश्वमस्य

अग्नि (द्युलोक) जिसका मस्तक है, चन्द्रमा और सूर्य नेत्र हैं, दिशाएँ कान हैं, प्रसिद्ध वेद वाणी है, वायु प्राण है, सारा विश्व जिसका हृदय है और जिसके चरणोंसे पृथिवी प्रकट हुई है वह देव सम्पूर्ण भूतोंका अन्तरात्मा है ॥ ४ ॥

In Mundak Upanishad while describing the Cosmic form of Brahman, it's said that- Fire (Dyuloka) is the head, moon and sun are the eyes, directions are the ears, famous Vedas are the speech, air is the life, the whole world is the heart and from whose feet the earth has appeared, that god is the inner soul of all the beings.

Same thing appears in Rig Veda's Purusha Suktam i.e Rig Ved Mandal 10 Suktam 90- नाभ्यां आसीदुन्तरिक्षं शीर्ष्णो द्यौः समंवर्तत । प॒द्भ्यां भूमिर्दिशः श्रोत्रात्तथां लो॒काँ अंकल्पयन् ॥ (14) meaning From his navel came the firmament, from his head the heaven was produced, the earth from his feet, the quarters of space from his ear, so they constituted the world.
One important thing to be noticed is that अंडकोष also means universe itself and this is evident from Shrimad Bhagavatam Mahapuran- क्षित्यादिभिरेष किलावृतः । सप्तभिर्दशगुणोत्तरैरण्डकोशः । यत्र पतत्यणुकल्पः । < सहाण्डकोटिकोटिभिस्तदनन्तः ॥ ६.१६.३७ ॥

37. The egg of the universe is enveloped by seven sheaths of the earth and other elements etc., each outer envelop being ten times the extent of the enclosure inner to it. This egg-like universe together with millions and millions of other universes appears just like an atom on your head. Hence, you are called Ananta, the infinite.

In Bhadrakali Stuti a shloka comes which describes sky to be the face of Mata and here Earth is called to be originated from Naval – द्यौस्ते शीर्ष नाभिदेशो नभश्च चक्षूषि ते चन्द्रसूर्यानलास्ते । उन्मेषास्ते सुप्रबोधो दिवा रात्रिर्मातश्चक्षुषोस्ते निमेषम् ॥

मातः ! द्युलोक आपक सिर है, नभोमण्डल आपका नाभिप्रदेश है। चन्द्र, सूर्य और अग्नि आपके त्रिनेत्र हैं, आपका जगना ही सृष्टि के लिये दिन और जागरण का हेतु है और आपका आँखें मूँद लेना ही सृष्टिके लिये रात्रि है ॥ ५॥
From this we should understand that below earth is Patal lok where demons live and as per Markandeya Puran Shivadhuti is slayer of demons so whole interpretation should be taken as that Shiv ji is saying Mata Shivadhuti to eat the demons, testicles here do not mean normal testicles, it should be interpreted as the Patal Lok which lies under the earth. As I already explained that body of Brahman here Lord Shiva, is not normal like we humanshumans, this thing is also seen in Shrimad Bhagavatam. (8.7.26-28)

26. Oh Creator of the universe ! Fire which represents, gods in its person (as the distributor of sacrificial offerings to gods) is your mouth; the wise know that the earth is your lotus-like feet; Time is the motion, the cardinal points, the ears, and Varuṇa (the Lord of waters) the palate, of you who are the soul (the Inner controller) of all gods.

27. The sky represents your navel; the wind, your breath, the sun, your eyes, water, (your semen; the support of all jīvas (individual souls) elevated (like that of god Brahmā) and ordinary (like those of sub-human beings), is your ego; Soma or the Moon-god, your mind, and the heavens, your head.

28. The seas symbolize your abdomen, the mountains your bones; all plants and herbs your hair; the Vedic metres seven humours in your body; the dharma as enunciated in the Vedas your heart, Oh embodiment of the three Vedas.

29. Oh Lord ! the five upanisads[1] (the sacred hymns or mantras known as Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Sadyojāta, Vāmadeva, and Īśāna) from which the collection of thirty eight mantras evolve, denote your (five) faces; that self-effulgence constituting the supreme principle which is designated as Śiva is your (real) absolute state.

A story in Skanda Purana goes like this, Rati insults Sage Narada for his overtures. Sage Narada takes revenge by instigating Sambara, king of Daityas, to abduct Rati and marry her. He abducts her but couldn't marry her as he is unable to touch her as Rati decreed that he would be reduced to ashes if he touches her so he makes her the chief of his kitchen under the name of Mayavati. Such was the character of the Hindu sage that he instigated a Daitya king to abduct and marry her just because she insulted him.

Skanda Purana I.i.21.112-115 "On being rebuked thus by Rati, the excellent sage Narada himself hurriedly went to Sambara, the leading Daitya. He intimated to the king of Daityas that Madana had been burned by Rud हे पुत्री ! तुमने अब तक क्या किया, उसका वर्णन करो। हम सब सुनने के लिए उत्सुक हैं।" यह सुनकर पार्वती पिता से मधुर वाणी में कहने लगीं- "मैं कठोर तप करके मदनशत्रु शिव से प्रार्थना करती थी। मेरा यह सर्वजनदुर्लभ महत् कार्य सम्पन्न हो गया। महादेव मेरी तपस्या से प्रसन्न होकर मेरा वरण करने आये थे। मैंने नसे कहा- "हे शम्भु! मेरे पिता की अनुपस्थिति में आप मेरा पाणिग्रहण कैसे

करेंगे? मेरा यह कथन सुनकर वे त्रिपुरारि यथास्थान चले गये ! ।। १११-११४।।
“हे भूधरगण ! आइये हम शीघ्र स्वगृह चलें। मेरी पुत्री ने वृषध्वज पिनाकपाणि की आराधना किया है।” हिमालय के यह कहने पर सभी सादर पार्वती के साथ मिले तथा उनकी प्रशंसा करने लगे। तदनन्तर हिमालय ने वरवर्णिनी गिरिजा को अपने कंधे पर बैठाया तथा अपने स्थान पर पहुंचे। मार्ग में सभी पर्वतगण उत्कण्ठित होकर पार्वती का स्तव करते-करते उनको घेर कर चल रहे थे। तब देवदुन्दुभि, शंख, तूर्य एवं अन्य अनेक प्रकार के वाद्य बजने लगे। प्रबल पुष्पवर्षा होने लगी। हिमालय अपनी पुत्री को इस प्रकार अपने घर लौटा लाये। तब पार्वती बहुजनपूजिता हो गयीं। तपस्विनी उमा महाविभूतियोग के कारण उल्लसित थीं। देव, सिद्ध, महर्षि, चारण आदि चारों ओर से उनकी पूजा कर रहे थे।।११५-१२१।।

111–114 – “O daughter! Tell us what you have done so far; we are all eager to hear.”
Hearing this, Pārvatī spoke sweetly to her father:
“I was performing severe austerities and praying to Madan-śatru Śiva. This great task of mine, rare to all the world, has now been accomplished. Mahādeva, pleased with my penance, came to accept me in marriage. I said to him:
'O Śambhu! How can you take my hand in marriage in my father’s absence?' Hearing this, Tripurāri departed to his abode.”

115–121 – “O lords of the mountains! Let us quickly go to our home. My daughter has worshipped Vṛṣadhvaja, the wielder of the bow Pināka,” said Himālaya.
Hearing this, they all respectfully met Pārvatī and praised her. Then Himālaya seated the beautiful-bride-elect Girijā upon his shoulder and returned to his abode. Along the way, all the mountains, filled with eagerness, surrounded her while chanting her praises.
At that time, divine kettledrums (dundubhis), conches, trumpets, and many other instruments resounded. A great shower of flowers fell. Thus Himālaya brought his daughter back home. Then Pārvatī, honored by many, shone brightly. The ascetic Umā, filled with joy due to her union with great fortune, was worshipped from all sides by the gods, siddhas, great sages, and celestial beings (cāraṇas).

DEBUNKING ALLEGATIONS OF INCEST IN HINDUISM

.Allegations-

Incest

As per Brihadaranyaka Upanishad all creatures were born after God raped his own daughter,

Birhadaranyaka Upanishad 1.4.3-4 "He was not at all happy. Therefore people (still) are not happy when alone. He desired a mate. He became as big as man and wife embracing each other. He parted this very body into two. From that came husband and wife. Therefore, said Yajnavalkya, this (body) is one-half of oneself, like one of the two halves of a split pea. Therefore this space is indeed filled by the wife. He was united with her. From that men were born. She thought, 'How can he be united with me after producing me from himself? Well, let me hide myself.' She became a cow, the other became a bull and was united with her; from that cows were born. The one became a mare, the other a stallion; the one became she-ass, the other became a he-ass and was united with her; from that one hoofed animals were born. The one became a ewe, the other became a ram and was united with her; from that goats and sheep were born. Thus did he project everything that exists in pairs, down to the ants."

Adi Shankaracharya wrote on this verse,

Manu and his daughter Ida incest,

Satapatha Brahmana 1:8:1:7-10 “Being desirous of offspring, he engaged in worshipping and austerities. During this time he also performed a pâka-sacrifice: he offered up in the waters clarified butter, sour milk, whey, and curds. Thence a woman was produced in a year: becoming quite solid she rose; clarified butter gathered in her footprint. Mitra and Varuna met her. They said to her, 'Who art thou?' 'Manu’s daughter,' she replied. 'Say (thou art) ours,' they said. 'No,' she said, 'I am (the daughter) of him who begat me.' They desired to have a share in her. She either agreed or did not gree, but passed by them. She came to Manu. Manu said to her, 'Who art thou?' 'Thy daughter,' she replied. 'How, illustrious one, (art thou) my daughter?' he asked. She replied, 'Those offerings (of) clarified butter, sour milk, whey, and curds, which thou madest in the waters, with them thou hast begotten me. I am the blessing (benediction): make use of me at the sacrifice! If thou wilt make use of me at the sacrifice, thou wilt become rich in offspring and cattle. Whatever blessing thou shalt invoke through me, all that shall be granted to thee!' He accordingly made use of her (as the benediction) in the middle of the sacrifice; for what is intermediate between the fore-offerings and the after-offerings, is the middle of the sacrifice. With her he went on worshipping and performing austerities, wishing for offspring. Through her he generated this race, which is this race of Manu; and whatever blessing he invoked through her, all that was granted to him. Now this (daughter of Manu) is essentially the same as the Idâ…"

"She who gave birth to me, I belong to her alone."
Even she was under your control.
So, either she knew this (truth) or she did not — but she came to you on her own.
She approached Manu.

Then Manu asked her: "Who are you?"
She replied: "I am your daughter."
He said: "O Lady, how can you be my daughter?"

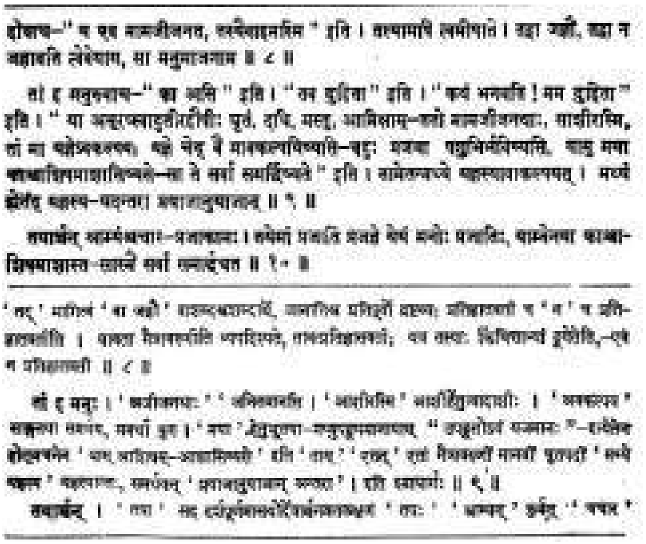
She answered:
"It is I who offered those oblations into the waters — clarified butter (ghee), curd, milk, fresh butter (āmikṣā). Through that offering, I generated you. I am a wish or blessing (āśiḥ).

Therefore, assign me a role in the sacrifice.
If you do so, you will gain much: abundant progeny and wealth in cattle.
And whatever blessings you hope for through me — all of them shall be fulfilled."

So he assigned her (the goddess, the blessing) a role in the middle of the sacrifice, i.e., between the Prayāja and Anuyāja offerings.
That middle portion of the sacrifice is the essence — that which lies between the preliminary and concluding offerings.

With her, performing austerity (tapas), Arśvan (the horse — a symbol of virility or the sacrificer himself), though weary, continued his work — desiring offspring (progeny).

And through her, this offspring was born, which is known as Manu's progeny (the human race).
Whatever blessings Manu had hoped for through her — she fulfilled them all.



Allegations-

During the propagation of living beings, Manu sprang from the lower half of Brahma and Satarupa from the left-hand side of Brahma's body. And these two siblings then begat a couple of children,

Srimad Devi Bhagavatam 3.13.15-16 "Next Svayambhava Manu sprang from the lower half of Brahma; and the daughter named Satarupa came out of the left hand side of the Brahma's body. The two sons Priyavrata and Uttânapâda were born of Manu in the womb of S'atarûpâ and the three daughters, very beautiful and fair complexioned, were also born of him." T

The question, both in the tradition and in modern scholarship, whether the Devībhāgavata or the Vaiṣṇava Bhāgavata is the true and original Śrīmadbhāgavata has been discussed under the Bhāgavata. It should be noted in this connection that the term Devībhāgavata appears only in the chapter colophons, and in the text of the last two skandhas; elsewhere in the text the purāṇa refers to itself either as Bhāgavata or Śrīmadbhāgavata, once as Sat (1.3.41). The text also repeatedly refers to itself as "the best of purāṇas" (purāṇottama), and declares that "there are many other purāṇas devoted to Hari and Rudra, but they are not worth one-sixteenth part of this Devībhāgavata" (12.13.25–26).

Hazra[174] sees arguments both for the Devībhāgavata having been composed in Bengal and outside Bengal. He therefore concludes that "the author of the Devībhāgavata was a Smārta Śākta Brahmin of Bengal and . . . he migrated to Benares (probably because it was the best place of residence for a Devī-worshipper), lived there for a long time, and there wrote the Devī-bhāgavata."

Ramachandran[175] dated the Devībhāgavata "not later than the 6th century A.D.," based on his belief that the story of the penance of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, as related in the fourth skandha, inspired the relief in the Gupta temple at Deogarh. His arguments did not find acceptance with other scholars,[176] and, in general, the text has been dated much later. Farquhar[177] assigned it to the A.D. 900–1350 period. Hazra[178] narrowed the period down to "the eleventh or twelfth century A.D." Lalye[179] proposes a gradual growth of the text, through five different stages which cannot be dated separately; in any case the final stage must have been reached in the eleventh century.

Allegations-

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.31 "My dear King, Lord Kṛṣṇa forcibly took away Princess Mitravindā, the daughter of His aunt Rājādhidevī, before the eyes of the rival kings."

Krishna is said to have married another cousin named Bhadra,

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.58.56 “Bhadrā was a princess of the Kaikeya kingdom and the daughter of Lord Kṛṣṇa’s paternal aunt Śrutakīrti. The Lord married Bhadrā when her brothers, headed by Santardana, offered her to Him.”

Srimad Bhagavatam 10.83.15-16 “Śrī Bhadrā said: My dear Draupadī, of his own free will my father invited his nephew Kṛṣṇa, to whom I had already dedicated my heart, and offered me to Him as His bride. My father presented me to the Lord with an akṣauhiṇī military guard and a retinue of my female companions. My ultimate perfection is this: to always be allowed to touch Lord Kṛṣṇa’s lotus feet as I wander from life to life, bound by my karma.”

Another wife of Pradumnya was Rukmavati, who was the daughter of his maternal uncle Rukmi (Srimad Bhagatan 10.61).

Pradumnya’s son Aniruddha similarly married his maternal uncle’s daughter, Rochna, who was the grand-daughter of Rukmi (Srimad Bhagavatam 10.61).

Refutation-

VALIDITY OF MARRIAGE BETWEEN COUSINS!
In the Vedic system of marriage, the importance of the gotra, or family linkage, was stressed. Cousin brothers & sisters were allowed to get married, only if they did not belong to the same gotra, or family.
Gotra is always defined with respect of father’s linkage, Hence children are always awarded by the father’s gotra, irrespective of what ever the gotra of mother is !

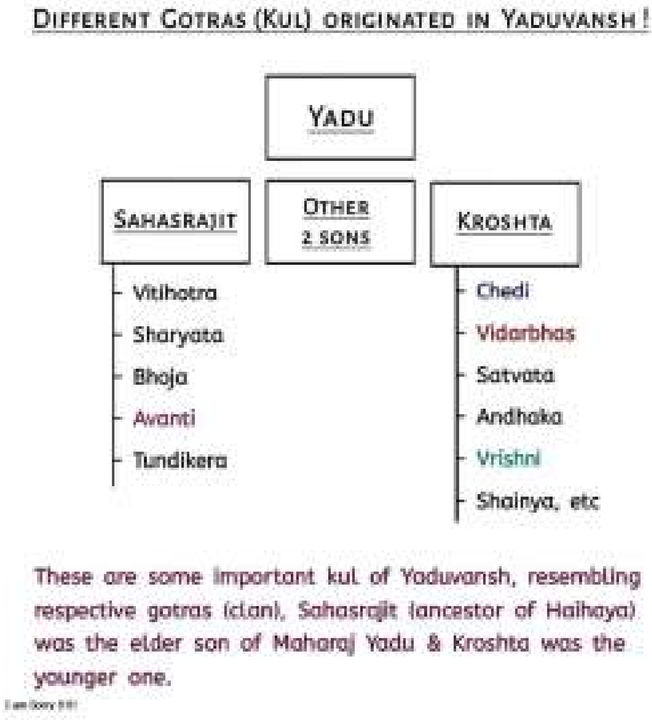
वैदिक विवाह की व्यवस्था में गोत्र तथा पारिवारिक संबंध को महत्व दिया गया है। भाई - बहन को विवाह की अनुमति मात्र तभी दी जाती थी, जब वे एक ही गोत्र या परिवार से संबंधित न हों।

गोत्र को सदैव पिता के संबंध (पितृ पक्ष) में परिभाषित किया जाता है, अत: एक मानुष्य (पुरुष या स्त्री) को सदैव पिता के गोत्र से सम्मानित किया जाता है, इसमे माता के गोत्र का स्थान नहीं !

Different Gotras (KUL) ORIGINATED IN Yaduvansh!
YADU
SAHASRAJIT
OTHER 2 SONS
ROSHTA

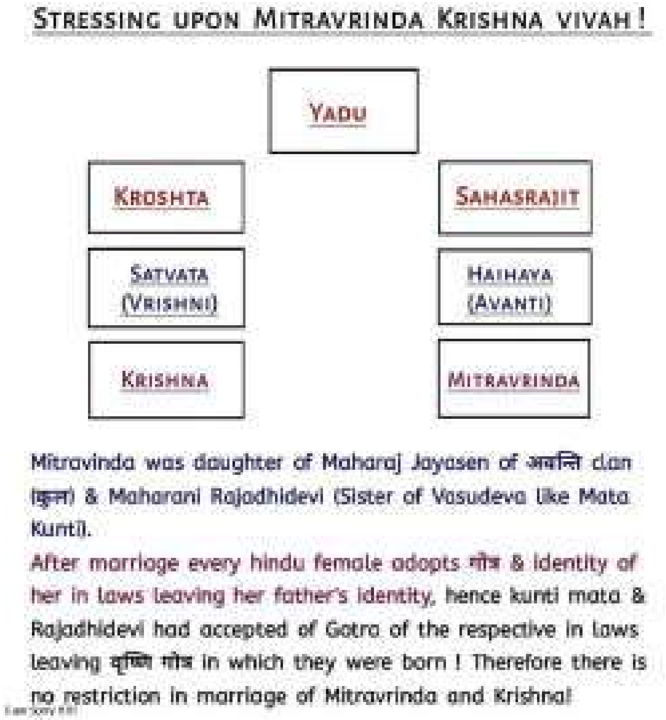
Vitihotra
Chedi
Sharyata
Vidarbhas
Bhoja
Satvata
Avanti
Andhaka
Tundikera
Vrishni
Shainya, etc

These are some important kul of Yaduvansh, resembling respective gotras (clan), Sahasrajit (ancestor of Haihaya) was the elder son of Maharaj Yadu & Kroshta was the younger one.



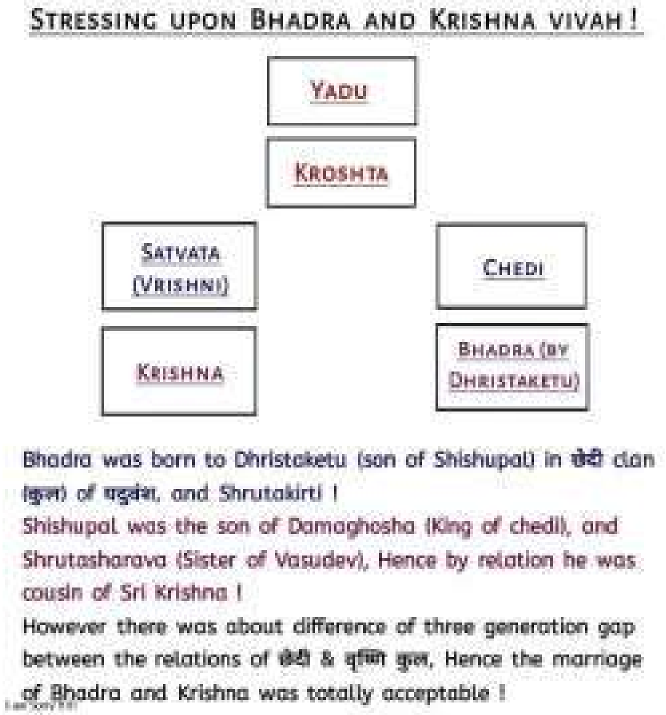
STRESSING UPON MITRAVRINDA KRISHNA VIVAH!

Mitravinda was daughter of Maharaj Jayasen of अवन्ति clan (कुल) & Maharani Rajadhidevi (Sister of Vasudeva like Mata Kunti).
After marriage every hindu female adopts गोत्र & identity of her in laws leaving her father's identity, hence kunti mata & Rajadhidevi had accepted of Gotra of the respective in laws leaving वृष्णि गोत्र in which they were born! Therefore there is no restriction in marriage of Mitravrinda and Krishna!

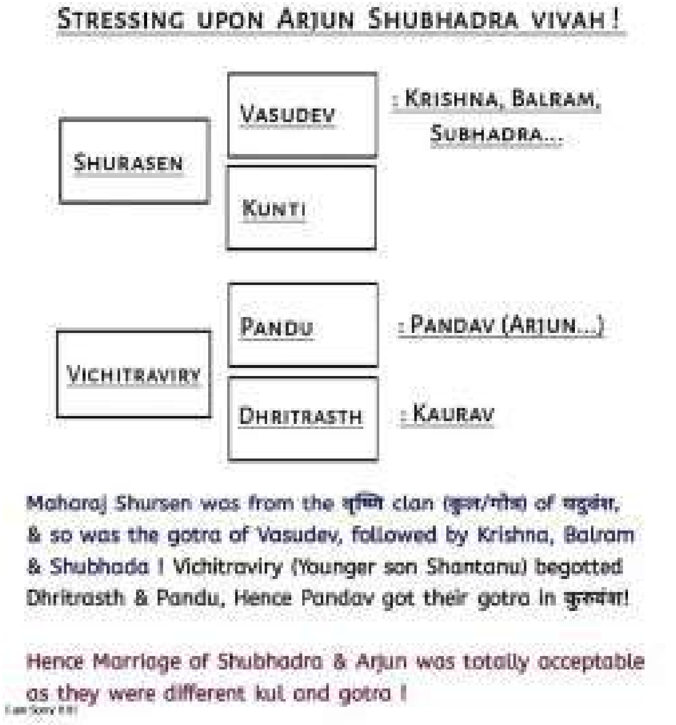


STRESSING UPON BHADRA AND KRISHNA VIVAH!

Bhadra was born to Dhristaketu (son of Shishupal) in छेदी clan (कुल) of यदुवंश, and Shrutakirti !
Shishupal was the son of Damaghosha (King of chedi), and Shrutasharava (Sister of Vasudev), Hence by relation he was cousin of Sri Krishna !
However there was about difference of three generation gap between the relations of छेदी & वृष्णि कुल, Hence the marriage of Bhadra and Krishna was totally acceptable !



STRESSING UPON ARJUN Subhadra VIVAH!
Maharaj Shursen was from the वृष्णि clan (कुल/गोत्र) of यदुवंश, & so was the gotra of Vasudev, followed by Krishna, Balram & Subhadra ! Vichitraviry (Younger son Shantanu) begotted Dhritrasth & Pandu, Hence Pandav got their gotra in कुरुवंश!
Hence Marriage of Shubhadra & Arjun was totally acceptable as they were different kul and gotra !



A similar explanation applies to the marriage of Pradyumna and Rukmavati, the daughter of Rukmi, as both belonged to different gotras and kulas.

A similar explanation applies to the marriage of Aniruddha and Rochana, as both belonged to different gotras and kulas.

Allegations-

Krishna also had affair with his maternal aunt Radha who was married to Rayana the brother of Yashoda who was the mother of Krishna, Brahma Vaivarta Purana, Prakriti Khanda, Chapter 49, Verses 36-43 "In the Varaha-kalpa, Radhika was born in the village of Gokula in the family of a Vaisya cowherd. She was born without any human contact…After the expiry of twelve years, finding her becoming youthful, she was married to a trader named Rayana; at the time of her marriage only a shadow of Radha was married to the trader while the real Radha herself disappeared. After the expiry of fourteen years Krsna, the lord of the universe appeared there as an infant…This Rayana was the real brother of Yasodha the mother of Krsna who happened to be an amsa of Krsna in Gokula and was his maternal uncle in the sacred forest of Vrndavana. Brahma the creator of the universe had performed the marriage of Radha with Krsna. Radha whose lotus-like feet were beyond the sight of cowherds even in dream, the same Radha enjoyed the lap of lord Krsna and her shadow was very much present in the house of Rayana.

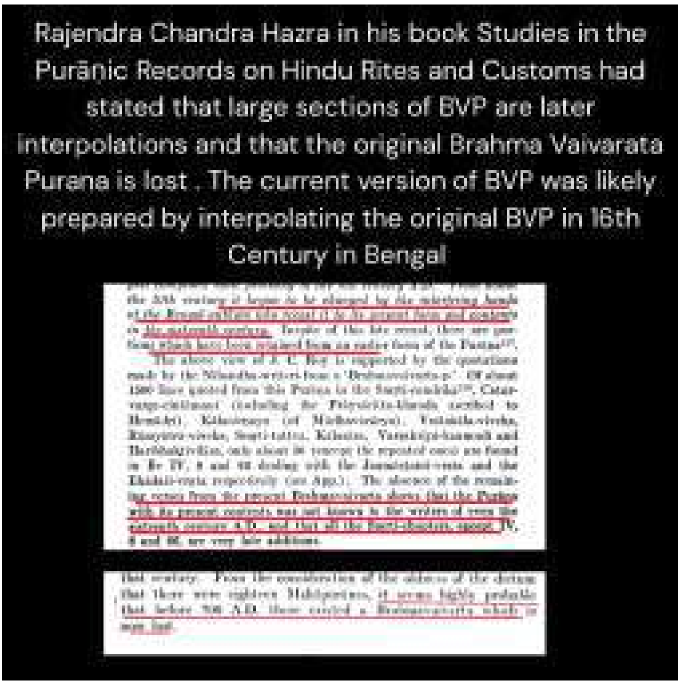
Refutation-

Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata Purana Volume 1 and 2 translated by Ram Sharma Acharya QR code provided here

ब्रह्मवैवर्त्त पुराणम् ।

REGARDING SHRI RADHA KRISHNA RELATIONSHIP

Traditional Sri Vaishnava Acharya Pandit Madhvacharya Shastri explained in his book Purana Digdarshan page 516/788

दयानन्दियों का कहना है कि 'ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण' (ब्रह्मपर्व ५) में कृष्ण के साथ राधा के तीन अजीब रिश्ते बताये हैं। तदनुसार राधा कृष्ण की पुत्री, पुत्र-वधू, वा मामी हुई ।
हम उक्त श्लोकों को पूरा पूरा देकर प्रकरणानुकूल वास्तविक अर्थ दिखाते हैं। उक्त प्रकरण में भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के दिव्य अंगप्रत्यंग से मानसी (अमैथुनी) सृष्टि का वर्णन है। जितने देव पुरुष श्रीकृष्ण के शरीर से उत्पन्न हुए हैं उन उन पुरुषों की स्त्रियां उन २ पुरुषों के बाएं अंग से उत्पन्न हुई हैं। जैसे-

आविर्बभूव तत्पश्चात् कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः । मानसाच्च पुमानेकस्तप्तकांचनसन्निभः ।।६।। तन्नाम 'मन्मथं' तेन प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः । तस्य पुंसो वामपार्वात् कामस्य कामिनी वरा । बभूवातीव ललिता सर्वेषां मोहकारिणी ।। ७।८।।
(ब्रह्म वै० ब्रह्म ख० ब्रह्म कल्प अ० ४)

अर्थात् – उसके पश्चात् परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण के मन से तपे हुए सुवर्ण की कान्ति वाला एक पुरुष उत्पन्न हुआ। उसको बुद्धिमान् लोग मन्मथ (कामदेव) कहते हैं। उस पुरुष कामदेव के वाम पार्श्व से (वाम अङ्ग से अति सुन्दर सब को मोहने वाली उसकी श्रेष्ठ स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई ।
उसी प्रकार-

आविर्बभूव कन्यैका कृष्णस्य वामपार्श्वतः ।
धावित्वा पुष्पमानीय ददावर्ध प्रभोः पदे ।। तेन राधा समाख्याता
पुराविद्भिर्द्विजोत्तम । प्राणाधिष्ठात्री सा देवी कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः ।।
(२५ । २६ । २घ)

अर्थात् –परमात्मा कृष्ण से बाएं श्रङ्ग से एक कमनीया स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई । उसने भगवान् कृष्ण के चरणों की धोकर फूल लाकर अर्घ्य दिया, विद्वानों ने उसका नाम (आराधनात्) राधा कहा है। वह कृष्ण की प्राणाधिष्ठात्री देवी थी। अन्यत्र कहा है-

योगेनात्मा सृष्टिविधौ द्विधारूपो बभूव सः । पुमांश्च दक्षिणार्द्धाङ्गो वामाङ्गः प्रकृतिः स्मृतः ।।
(ब्रह्म बै० प्रकृ० खं० आ० १२ श्लो० ६)

अर्थात् – परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण सृष्टि रचना के समय दो रूप वाले हो गये । दाहिना आधा अङ्ग पुरुष और बांया अंग प्रकृति रूपा स्त्री हुई। ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण का यह वर्णन वेद एवं उपनिषदों के द्वारा प्रति-पादित है। जैसे-

स वै नैव रेमे तस्मादेकाकी न मैच्छत् स हैतावानास यथा स्त्रीपुमा रमते स द्वितीय-सौ संपरिष्वक्तौ स इममेवात्मानं द्वेधापातयत् ततः पतिश्च पत्नी चाभवताम् ।
(बृहदारण्यक १।४३)

अर्थात् – उस ब्रह्म ने रमण (सृष्टि उत्पादन रूप खेल) नहीं किया था इस कारण कि वह अकेला रमण नहीं करता। उसने दूसरे की इच्छा की। जिस प्रकार परस्पर ग्रालङ्गित स्त्री पुरुष होते हैं, वैसा उसका स्वरूप हो गया। उसने अपने को ही दो भागों में विभक्त कर डाला । वे पति और पत्नी हुवे। भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के वामाङ्ग से श्रीराधा की उत्पत्ति का भाव है कि वे एक से दो अर्थात् पति-पत्नी रूप में हो गये ।

आगे प्रकरण को देखिये-
वृषभानोश्च वैश्यस्य सा च कन्या बभूव ह ।
अयोनिसम्भवा देवी वायुगर्भा कलावती ॥
सुषुवे मायया वायुं स तत्राविर्बभूव ह ।
अतीते द्वादशाब्दे तु दृष्ट्वा तां नवयौवनाम् ।।
सार्ध रायणवैश्येन तत्सम्बन्धं चकार सः ।
छायां संस्थाप्य तद्गेहे सान्तर्धानमवाप ह ।।
बभूव तस्य वैश्यस्य विवाहश्छायया सह ।
कृष्ण माता यशोदा या रायणस्तत् सहोदरः ।।
गोलोके गोपकृष्णांशः सम्बन्धात्कृष्णमातुलः ।।
कृष्णेन सह राधायाः पुण्ये वृन्दावने वने ।
विवाहं कारयामास विधिना जगतां विधिः ।।
(ब्रह्म वै० खं० २ अ० ४६ श्लो० ३२ से ४२)

अर्थात् ब्रजभूमि में अवतार लेने पर वह राधा वषभानु वैश्य की कन्या हुई ।।२६।। वृषभानु की स्त्री कलावती वायुगर्भा (जिसके गर्भ में केवल वायु मात्र थी) थी उसने वायु प्रसव किया। प्रसव होते ही श्री राधा देवी अयोनिजा (गर्भ से उत्पन्न न होने वाली) प्रकट हो गई। ।।३७।। बारह वर्ष व्यतीत होने पर उसके पिता ने उसे नवयुवती होने वाली देख कर रायण वैश्य के साथ उसका सम्बन्ध – सगाई कर दी ।।३८।। किन्तु राधा जी अपने प्रभाव से अपने ही अनुरूप एक 'छाया' नाम की कन्या को उत्पन्न कर और उसे घर में स्थापित कर स्वयं अन्तर्धान हो गई, रायण वैश्य का विवाह उसी 'छाया' नाम की कन्या के साथ हुआ ।॥३०॥ श्रीकृष्ण की घायरूप माता जो यशोदा थीं, रायण उसका भाई था। वह गोलोक में गोप कृष्ण का अंश (अर्थात्– उन कृष्ण के अंश से गोलोक के सृष्टि प्रकरण में जिस प्रकार अन्य अनेक व्यक्तियों की उत्पत्ति हुई थी उसी प्रकार उत्पन्न होने वाला) सखा था। ब्रज में उनकी धाय रूप माता यशोदा का भाई होने के नाते श्रीकृष्ण जी का वह मामा हुआ। पवित्र वृन्दावन में श्री ब्रह्मा जी ने कृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का विधिपूर्वक दिव्य विवाह कराया ।।४०।।
ऊपर के ब्रह्म० वै० पुराण प्रकरण से स्पष्ट है कि रायण वैश्य के साथ दिव्य 'छाया' ा विवाह हुआ था और श्रीकृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का दिव्य विवाह हुआ।

अतः आक्षेपकर्ताओं का श्रीराधा जी की श्रीकृष्ण जी की पुत्री, पुत्र वधू व माभी कहना सरासर झूठ है।

English

The Malechas claim that in the 'Brahmavaivarta Purana' (Brahma Parva 5), three unusual relationships between Krishna and Radha have been described. According to them, Radha is Krishna's daughter, daughter-in-law, and aunt.

Oh, what an absurd fabrication! By omitting intermediate verses, distorting portions of others, misplacing narratives from different contexts, and constructing arbitrary meanings, they have spun an unreasonable and false tale about Krishna and Radha's supposed relationships! What a despicable attempt to deceive people and sow confusion!

Now, I will present the complete verses with their correct context and meaning. This section describes the divine, non-physical creation (Manasi Srishti) from the sacred body of Lord Krishna. The women associated with the divine beings emerging from Krishna's form originate from the left portion of those male entities. For example:

आविर्बभूव तत्पश्चात् कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः । मानसाच्च पुमानेकस्तप्तकांचनसन्निभः ।।६।। तन्नाम 'मन्मथं' तेन प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः । तस्य पुंसो वामपार्वात् कामस्य कामिनी वरा । बभूवातीव ललिता सर्वेषां मोहकारिणी ।। ७।८।। (ब्रह्म वै० ब्रह्म ख० ब्रह्म कल्प अ० ४)

That means: After that, a male figure emerged from the divine mind of Paramatma Shri Krishna, possessing the radiant brilliance of heated gold. The wise refer to him as Manmatha (Kamadeva). From his left side, a supremely beautiful woman, the most enchanting among all, was created as his consort.

Similarly:

आविर्बभूव कन्यैका कृष्णस्य वामपार्श्वतः । धावित्वा पुष्पमानीय ददावर्ध प्रभोः पदे ।। तेन राधा समाख्याता पुराविद्भिर्द्विजोत्तम । प्राणाधिष्ठात्री सा देवी कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः ।। (२५ । २६ । २घ)

That means: From the left part of Paramatma Shri Krishna, an exquisite maiden was created. She approached the Lord, washed His feet, and offered flowers as a sacred oblation. The learned sages named her Radha due to her act of devotion (Aradhana). She became the divine presiding deity of Krishna's life energy.

Elsewhere, it is stated:

That means: At the time of creation, Paramatma Shri Krishna manifested in a dual form. His right half took the form of a male, while his left half became the female aspect—Prakriti.

The description in Brahmavaivarta Purana aligns with what is established in the Vedas and Upanishads, such as:

स वै नैव रेमे तस्मादेकाकी न मैच्छत् स हैतावानास यथा स्त्रीपुमा रमते स द्वितीय-सौ संपरिष्वक्तौ स इममेवात्मानं द्वेधापातयत् ततः पतिश्च पत्नी चाभवताम् । (बृहदारण्यक १।४३)

That means: That supreme Brahman did not engage in divine play (creation) because He was alone. He desired another. Just as men and women embrace each other, His form transformed similarly. He then divided Himself into two parts. They became husband and wife. This signifies that Shri Krishna manifested Radha from His left side as His eternal consort.

Now, consider the further context:

वृषभानोश्च वैश्यस्य सा च कन्या बभूव ह । अयोनिसम्भवा देवी वायुगर्भा कलावती ॥ सुषुवे मायया वायुं स तत्राविर्बभूव ह । अतीते द्वादशाब्दे तु दृष्ट्वा तां नवयौवनाम् ।। सार्धं रायणवैश्येन तत्सम्बन्धं चकार सः । छायां संस्थाप्य तद्गेहे सान्तर्धानमवाप ह ।। बभूव तस्य वैश्यस्य विवाहश्छायया सह । कृष्ण माता यशोदा या रायणस्तत् सहोदरः ।। गोलोके गोपकृष्णांशः सम्बन्धात्कृष्णमातुलः ।। कृष्णेन सह राधायाः पुण्ये वृन्दावने वने । विवाहं कारयामास विधिना जगतां विधिः ।। (ब्रह्म वै० खं० २ अ० ४६ श्लो० ३२ से ४२)

That means: When Radha took birth in Braj, she was the daughter of the Vaishya, Vrishabhanu. Vrishabhanu's wife, Kalavati, carried only air in her womb (Vayugarbha). When she delivered, Devi Radha, who was Ayonija (not born from a womb), manifested immediately.

After twelve years, upon seeing her radiant youth, her father arranged a marital alliance with Rayana Vaishya. However, due to her divine nature, Radha manifested a shadow-like replica of herself, named 'Chhaya,' and installed it in the household before she disappeared. Thus, Rayana Vaishya married 'Chhaya,' not Radha.

Shri Krishna's foster mother, Yashoda, was Rayana's sister. Therefore, in a worldly sense, Rayana, who was originally a divine manifestation from Goloka, became Krishna's maternal uncle. In the sacred forest of Vrindavan, Lord Brahma solemnized the divine marriage of Shri Radha with Shri Krishna.

Thus, the Brahmavaivarta Purana clearly states that Radha was not married to Rayana Vaishya, but to Krishna Himself in a divine ceremony. Therefore, the false claims that Radha was Krishna's daughter, daughter-in-law, or aunt are completely unfounded.

Thus it must be clear from this that Radha ji did not marry Rayana Gopa . It was A Shadow form of Radha Chayya Radha who married Rayana Gopa . Moreover Rayana Gopa himself was an Amsa of Shree krishna . Radha Rani never married someone other than Shree Krishna . She remained always present with Shree Krishna as his inseparable divine energy .

क्या कृष्ण के राधा से तीन रिश्ते थे ?

दयानन्दियों का कहना है कि 'ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण' (ब्रह्मपर्व ४) में कृष्ण के साथ राधा के तीन अजीब रिश्ते बताये हैं। तदनुसार राधा कृष्ण की पुत्री, पुत्र-वधू, या मामी हुई।

वाह रे महात्माओ ! बीच के श्लोकों को छोड़ कर और श्लोकों के आगे से अशुद्ध टुकड़े लिख कर एवं प्रकरण-विरुद्ध कहीं की कथा कहीं जुटा कर और मनमाने अर्थ घड़ कर कृष्ण और राधा के अजीब तीन रिश्तों का कैसा बेतुका झूठा राग अलापा है ! तथा जनता को धोखा देने और भ्रम में डालने का कैसा घृणित प्रयास किया है ! !

हम उक्त श्लोकों को पूरा पूरा देकर प्रकरणानुकूल वास्तविक अर्थ दिखाते हैं। उक्त प्रकरण में भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के दिव्य अंगप्रत्यंग से मानसी (अमैथुनी) सृष्टि का वर्णन है। जितने देव पुरुष श्रीकृष्ण के शरीर से उत्पन्न हुए हैं उन उन पुरुषों की स्त्रियां उन २ पुरुषों के बाएं अंग से उत्पन्न हुई हैं। जैसे—

बभूवातीव ललिता सर्वेषां मोहकारिणी ॥७।८॥

(ब्रह्म वै० ब्रह्म ख० ब्रह्म कल्प अ० ४)

अर्थात्—उसके पश्चात् परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण के मन से तपे हुए सुवर्ण की कान्ति वाला एक पुरुष उत्पन्न हुआ। उसको बुद्धिमान् लोग मन्मथ (कामदेव) कहते हैं। उस पुरुष कामदेव के वाम पार्श्व से (वाम अङ्ग) से अति सुन्दर सब को मोहने वाली उसकी श्रेष्ठ स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई। उसी प्रकार—

तेन राधा समाख्याता पुराविद्भिर्द्विजोत्तम।
प्राणाधिष्ठात्री सा देवी कृष्णस्य परमात्मनः ॥

(२५। २६। २८)

अर्थात्—परमात्मा कृष्ण के बाएं अङ्ग से एक कमनीया स्त्री उत्पन्न हुई। उसने भगवान् कृष्ण के चरणों को धोकर फूल लाकर अर्घ्य दिया, विद्वानों ने उसका नाम (आराधनात्) राधा कहा है। वह कृष्ण की प्राणाधिष्ठात्री देवी थी। आगे कहा है—

योगेनात्मा सृष्टिविधौ द्विधारूपो बभूव सः।
पुमांश्च दक्षिणार्द्धाङ्गो वामाङ्गः प्रकृतिः स्मृतः ॥

(ब्रह्म वै० प्रकृ० खं० अ० १२ श्लो० ६)

अर्थात्—परमात्मा श्रीकृष्ण सृष्टि रचना के समय दो रूप वाले हो गये। दाहिना आधा अङ्ग पुरुष और बांया अंग प्रकृति रूपा स्त्री हुई। ब्रह्मवैवर्त पुराण का यह वर्णन वेद एवं उपनिषदों के द्वारा प्रतिपादित है। जैसे—

स इममेवात्मानं द्वेधापातयत् ततः पतिश्च पत्नी चाभवताम् । (बृहदारण्यक १।४।३)

अर्थात्—उस ब्रह्म ने रमण (सृष्टि उत्पादन रूप खेल) नहीं किया था इस कारण कि वह अकेला रमता नहीं करता। उसने दूसरे की इच्छा की। जिस प्रकार परस्पर आलिङ्गित स्त्री पुरुष होते हैं, वैसा उसका स्वरूप हो गया। उसने अपने को ही दो भागों में विभक्त कर डाला। वे पति और पत्नी हुवे। भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण के वामाङ्ग से श्रीराधा की उत्पत्ति का भाव है कि वे एक से दो अर्थात् पति-पत्नी रूप में हो गये।

(ब्रह्म वै० ख० २ अ० ४९ श्लो० ३९ से ४२)

अर्थात्—व्रजभूमि में अवतार लेने पर वह राधा वृषभानु वैश्य

राधा और कृष्ण (५२३)

की कन्या हुई ॥३९॥ वृषभानु की पत्नी कलावती वायुगर्भा (जिसके गर्भ में केवल वायु मात्र थी) थी उसने वायु प्रसव किया। प्रसव होते ही श्री राधा देवी अयोनिजा (गर्भ से उत्पन्न न होने वाली) प्रकट हो गई। ॥३७॥ बारह वर्ष व्यतीत होने पर उसके पिता ने उसे नवयुवती होने वाली देख कर रायण वैश्य के साथ उसका सम्बन्ध—सगाई कर दी ॥३८॥ किन्तु राधा जी अपने प्रभाव से अपने ही अनुरूप एक 'छाया' नाम की कन्या को उत्पन्न कर और उसे घर में स्थापित कर स्वयं अन्तर्धान हो गई, रायण वैश्य का विवाह उसी 'छाया' नाम की कन्या के साथ हुआ ॥३९॥ श्रीकृष्ण की पालक माता जो यशोदा थी, रायण उसका भाई था। वह गोलोक में गोप कृष्ण का अंश (अर्थात्—उन कृष्ण के अंश से गोलोक के सृष्टि प्रकरण में जिस प्रकार अन्य अनेक व्यक्तियों की उत्पत्ति हुई थी उसी प्रकार उत्पन्न होने वाला) था। व्रज में उनकी पालक रूप माता यशोदा का भाई होने के नाते श्रीकृष्ण जी का वह मामा हुआ। पवित्र वृन्दावन में श्री ब्रह्मा जी ने कृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का विधिपूर्वक दिव्य विवाह कराया ॥४०॥

ऊपर के ब्रह्म० वै० पुराण प्रकरण से स्पष्ट है कि रायण वैश्य के साथ दिव्य 'छाया' का विवाह हुआ था और श्रीकृष्ण जी के साथ श्री राधा जी का दिव्य विवाह हुआ। अतः आक्षेपकर्ताओं का श्रीराधा जी को श्रीकृष्ण जी की पुत्री, पुत्र वधू व मामी कहना सरासर झूठ है।

What was the relationship between Shri Radha ji and Shree krishna ?

राधा का कृष्णा से क्या नाता है ?

भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण साक्षात् ब्रह्म हैं तो श्री राधिका जी उनकी अभिन्न छाया माया हैं-यह तो हुआ उनका पारमार्थिक लोकोत्तर सम्बन्ध ! परन्तु व्यावहारिक सम्बन्धों में-राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से क्या नाता है ? इस विषय पर भी प्रकाश डालना परमावश्यक है, क्योंकि शास्त्र के गहरे स्वाध्याय और समन्वय के बिना इस समस्या का हल होना भी असम्भव नहीं तो अतीव कठिन अवश्य है। हम क्या कोई भी, यदि आर्ष ..न्थों में मिलने वाले राधाकृष्ण सम्बन्धी प्रसंगों का सर्वाङ्गीण समन्वय करेगा तो

वह इसी परिणाम पर पहुंचेगा कि राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से व्यावहारिक न तो कोई भी नाता हैः क्योंकि लोक में

- दादी, नानी, फूफी, मां, ताई चाची बहिन, पत्नी, साली, मामी, भाणजी श्रादि जो रवत से सम्बन्ध रखने वाले नाते रिश्ते हैं, न तो इनमें से कोई नाता श्री राधाजी के साथ कृष्ण का था और नांही–स्वकीया परकीया, गणिका, दासी आदि जो साहित्य-वर्णित स्नेहजन्य सम्बन्ध हैं, उनमें से कोई नाता भगवान् से रात्रा का प्रकट होता है। हम पाठकों के सौकर्य के लिये कतिपय संभावित सम्बन्ध के विषय में कुछ कारणावलिपूर्वक विचार करते हैं जिसने हमारी पूर्व प्रर्दाशत स्थापना का तत्त्व जल्दी समझ में आ सके –
(१) श्रीकृष्णचन्द्र जी विशुद्ध क्षत्रिय कुलोत्पन्न थे और श्री राधा जी वृषभानु गोप की कन्या थीं, इसप्रकार धर्मशास्त्र की दृष्टि से उनका कोई भी वर्ण = जातिजन्य परस्पर सम्बन्ध नहीं था ।
(२) कदाचित् भगवान् कृष्ण के बाल्यकालीन पालक पिता श्रीनन्द जी को गोप जातीय होने के कारण भगवान् को भी गोप मान लिया जाय और एतावत राधा के साथ कृष्ण के वैवाहिक सम्बन्ध की कल्पना की जाए तो यह कोरी कल्पना ही रह जाती है, क्योंकि 'गर्ग-संहिता' आदि राधा-चरित्र के मुख्य ग्रन्थों में कही भी राधा कृष्ण के लौकिक विवाह का उल्लेख नहीं। केवल वर-वरण अर्थात् 'सगाई' मात्र का उल्लेख है, और वह भी नन्द के कुछ प्रतिद्वन्द्वी असहिष्णु गोपों द्वारा वृषभानु को बहकाकर उनके वैभव की परीक्षा के लिये ही हुआ है, जैसा कि, 'गर्गसंहिता' (गिरि० अध्याय ५-६) में लिखा है। यथा–
- यदि नन्दसुतः साक्षात् परिपूर्णतमो हरिः ।
- सर्वेषां पश्यतां नस्तत्परीक्षां कारय प्रभो ।। (एर्ग० ६८)
- अर्थ- [गोपों ने राधा के पिता वृषाभानु जी से कहा कि –

यदि नन्द का बेटा साक्षात् परमात्मा है तो हम सब के सामने उसकी महिमा की परीक्षा कीजिये ।
(३) जहां राधा कृष्ण का सर्वजनविदित लौकिक विवाह नहीं हुआ है वहाँ भगवान् की 'स्तनन्धय' दुधमुंही अवस्था में विश्वकर्ता ब्रह्माजी ने भाँडीरक वन में असीम आकाश के निर्मल एवं प्राकृतिक वितान-मण्डप के नीचे, मेघों की गम्भीर गर्जना और बिजली की कोलाहलपूर्ण कड़-कड़ाहट के गाजे बाजों के तुमुल निनाद में, उनके कोकोत्तर विवाह का अभिनय अवश्य किया है, जिसका पता न राधा के माता-पिता कलावती और वृषभानु को हुआ और माहीं कृष्ण के माता-पिता यशोदा और नन्दबाबा को चला, न किसी को भाईचारे की भाजी मिली और नाहीं किसी गोप ग्वाले को बाराती की हैसियत से करण का भर मिठाई मिली। राधा कृष्ण और ब्रह्मा इस त्रयी को छोड़कर संसार के किसी भी अन्य प्राणी को इसका कानों कान पता तक भी नहीं चला। शायद इसी अभूतपूर्व विवाह के कारण 'पूड़ा न पापड़ी- पटाक बहू श्रापड़ी' की लोकोक्ति प्रसिद्ध हुई हो। आइये हम आपको राधाकृष्ण के सदैव जुड़े रहने वाले बेजोड़ एवं बेमिसाल विवाह का गर्ग जी के शब्दों में फोटो दिखाए ः-

What is the relationship between Radha and Krishna? Since Bhagwan Shri Krishna is the Supreme Brahman, Shri Radhika is His inseparable divine energy—this describes their transcendental, spiritual relationship. However, in terms of their practical worldly relationship, what connection does Radha have with Krishna? This question is crucial, as resolving it requires deep study and synthesis of scriptural texts. Without thorough research, arriving at an accurate conclusion is nearly impossible or at least extremely difficult. Anyone who conducts a comprehensive study of the scriptures discussing Radha and Krishna will ultimately conclude that Radha and Krishna do not share any ordinary worldly relationship.

In society, familial and marital relationships like grandmother, aunt, mother, sister, wife, sister-in-law, maternal aunt, niece, and others define interpersonal bonds. However, none of these relationships exist between Shri Radha and Krishna. Similarly, the relationships described in literature—such as wife, beloved, courtesan, or servant—do not apply to Radha and Krishna in a worldly sense. For the convenience of the readers, let us examine some possibilities along with logical reasoning, so that the essence of our earlier statement becomes clear:

1. Shri Krishna was born into a pure Kshatriya lineage, whereas Shri Radha was the daughter of Vrishabhanu, a Gopa (cowherd). Thus, from the perspective of Dharma Shastra (scriptural law), there was no caste-based or lineage-related connection between them.
2. Some may argue that since Shri Krishna was raised by His foster father Nanda, who was also of the Gopa community, Krishna should be considered a Gopa. Based on this, one might imagine a marital connection between Krishna and Radha. However, such speculation remains mere imagination because major texts on Radha's life, such as 'Garga Samhita,' do not mention any worldly marriage between Radha and Krishna. The only reference found is regarding a ceremonial engagement, and even that was orchestrated by a few rival Gopas who misguided Vrishabhanu in order to test his wealth. This is mentioned in 'Garga Samhita' (Chapter 5-6):

यदि नन्दसुतः साक्षात् परिपूर्णतमो हरिः । सर्वेषां पश्यतां नस्तत्परीक्षां कारय प्रभो ।। (गर्ग संहिता ६८)

Meaning: The Gopas said to Radha's father, Vrishabhanu—"If Nanda's son is truly the Supreme Lord, then let Him prove His greatness in front of all of us."

3. While Radha and Krishna did not have a universally recognized worldly marriage, during Krishna's infancy, Lord Brahma performed a mystical wedding ceremony between Radha and Krishna in the sacred Bhaṇḍīraka forest. This divine event took place under the boundless sky, in a natural canopy formed by the heavens themselves, with the roaring thunder and crackling lightning serving as celestial musical instruments. However, Radha's parents, Kalavati and Vrishabhanu, were unaware of this ceremony. Likewise, Krishna's parents, Yashoda and Nanda Baba, had no knowledge of it. No relatives were invited, no Gopas attended as wedding guests, and no sweets were distributed. Except for Krishna, Radha, and Brahma, no living being in the world even heard of this divine event. Perhaps it was due to this unique wedding that the popular folk saying arose: "पूड़ा न पापड़ी – पटाक बहू श्रापड़ी" (loosely meaning "A grand affair witnessed by none").

भगवान् श्रीकृष्ण साक्षात् ब्रह्म हैं तो श्री राधिका जी उनकी अभिन्न ह्लादिनी शक्ति मानी जाती है—यह तो हुआ उनका पारमार्थिक लोकोत्तर सम्बन्ध ! परन्तु व्यावहारिक सम्बन्धों में—राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से क्या नाता है ? इस विषय पर भी प्रकाश डालना परमावश्यक है, क्योंकि शास्त्र के गहरे स्वाध्याय और समन्वय के बिना इस समस्या का हल होना यदि असम्भव नहीं तो अतीव कठिन अवश्य है। हम क्या कोई भी, यदि आर्ष ग्रन्थों में मिलने वाले राधाकृष्ण सम्बन्धी प्रसंगों का सर्वाङ्गीण समन्वय करेगा तो वह इसी परिणाम पर पहुँचेगा कि राधा का श्रीकृष्ण से व्यावहारिक न तो कोई भी नाता है : क्योंकि लोक में

—दादी, नानी, बुआ, माँ, ताई, चाची, बहिन, पत्नी, साली, भाभी, मामीजी आदि जो रक्त से सम्बन्ध रखने वाले नाते रिश्ते हैं, न तो इनमें से कोई नाता श्री राधाजी के साथ कृष्ण का था और नाहीं—स्वकीया परकीया, गणिका, दासी आदि जो साहित्य-वर्णित स्नेहजन्य सम्बन्ध हैं, उनमें से कोई नाता भगवान् से राधा का प्रकट होता है। हम पाठकों के सौकर्य के लिये कतिपय संभावित सम्बन्धों के विषय में कुछ कारणावलिपूर्वक विचार करते हैं जिससे हमारी पूर्व उपस्थित स्थापना का तत्त्व जल्दी समझ में आ सके—

(१) श्रीकृष्णचन्द्र जी विशुद्ध क्षत्रिय कुलोत्पन्न थे और श्री राधा जी वृषभानु गोप की कन्या थीं, इसप्रकार धर्मशास्त्र की दृष्टि से उनका कोई भी रक्त = जातिजन्य परस्पर सम्बन्ध नहीं था।

(२) कदाचित् भगवान् कृष्ण के बाल्यकालीन पालक पिता श्रीनन्द जी को गोप जातीय होने के कारण भगवान् को भी गोप मान लिया जाय और तथापि राधा के साथ कृष्ण के वैवाहिक सम्बन्ध की कल्पना की जाए तो यह कोरी कल्पना ही रह जाती है, क्योंकि 'गर्ग-संहिता' आदि राधा-चरित्र के मुख्य ग्रन्थों में कहीं भी राधा कृष्ण के लौकिक विवाह का उल्लेख नहीं। केवल वर-वरण अर्थात् 'सगाई' मात्र का उल्लेख है, और वह भी नन्द के कुछ प्रतिद्वन्द्वी अन्तर्हित गोपों द्वारा वृषभानु को बहकाकर उनके वैभव की परीक्षा के लिये ही हुआ है, जैसा कि, 'गर्गसंहिता' (गिरि० अध्याय ९-६) में लिखा है। यथा—

यदि नन्दसुतः साक्षात् परिपूर्णतमो हरिः ।

अर्थ—[गोपों ने राधा के पिता वृषभानु जी से कहा कि—]

यदि नन्द का बेटा साक्षात् परमात्मा है तो हम सब के सामने उसकी महिमा की परीक्षा कीजिये।

(३) यहां राधा कृष्ण का सर्वजनविदित लौकिक विवाह नहीं हुआ है वहां भगवान् की 'स्तनन्धय' = दुधमुंही अवस्था में विश्वकर्ता ब्रह्माजी ने भाण्डीरक वन में अतीव आकाश के निर्मल एवं प्राकृतिक वितान-मण्डप के नीचे, मेघों की गम्भीर गर्जना और बिजली की कोलाहलपूर्ण कड़-कड़ाहट के बाजे बाजों के तुमुल निनाद में, उनके लोकोत्तर विवाह का अभिनय सम्पन्न किया है, जिसका पता न राधा के माता-पिता कलावती और वृषभानु को हुआ और नाहीं कृष्ण के माता-पिता यशोदा और नन्दबाबा को चला, न किसी को भाईचारे की भाजी मिली और नाहीं किसी गोप ग्वाले को बाराती की हैसियत से कन्या का घर दिखाई दिया। राधा = कृष्ण और ब्रह्मा इस त्रयी को छोड़कर संसार के किसी भी अन्य प्राणी को इसका कानों कान पता तक भी नहीं चला। शायद इसी अभूतपूर्व विवाह के कारण 'दूल्हा न पालकी- पटाका बहू आलकी' की लोकोक्ति प्रसिद्ध हुई हो। आइये हम आपको राधाकृष्ण के सर्वथ जुड़े रहने वाले बेजोड़ एवं बेमिसाल विवाह का सर्ग जी के शब्दों में फोटो दिखाएं :—

A story in Mahabharata says that after Asura Ilwala killed the pitrs of Rishi Agastya, they requested Agastya to beget a son that would save them from the pit (hell). As requested by them Rishi Agastya first creates a girl with an intention of marrying her.

Mahabharata 3.96.18-25 "…Agastya replied, saying, 'Ye Pitris, I will accomplish your desire. Let this anxiety of yours be dispelled.' And the illustrious Rishi then began to think of perpetuating his race. But he saw not a wife worthy of him on whom he himself could take his birth in the form of a son. The Rishi accordingly, taking those parts that were regarded as highly beautiful, from creatures possessing them, created therewith an excellent woman. And the Muni, endued with great ascetic merit, thereupon gave that girl created for himself to the king of the Vidharbhas who was then undergoing ascetic penances for obtaining offspring. And that blessed girl of sweet face (thus disposed of) then took her birth (in Vidarbha's royal line) and, beautiful as the effulgent lightning, her limbs began to grow day by day…"

Mahabharata 3.97.8-9 "…And at these words of his daughter, O monarch, the king gave away Lopamudra unto the illustrious Agastya with due rites. And obtaining her as wife…"

Mahabharat Vana Parva Adhay 96 slokas Geeta press gorakhpur slokas 18-22

Mahabharat Vana Parva describes Agastya seeking a suitable wife, creating through yogic meditation (manasā) a form embodying the finest qualities of many women. This manifested form, named Lopāmudrā, was given to King Vidarbha, who raised her as his daughter. Agastya was the spiritual originator of her form, not her biological or social father. According to dharma-śāstra, marriage eligibility is determined by gotra and sapinda relations; Agastya and Lopāmudrā belonged to different gotras and kulas, making the union fully dharmic. The "creation" here is metaphysical, not genealogical, so no basis exists for an accusation of incest.

तब उन लटकते हुए पितरोंसे अगस्त्यजीने पूछा- 'आपलोग यहाँ किसलिये नीचे मुँह किये काँपते हुए-से लटक रहे हैं?' यह सुनकर उन वेदवादी पितरोंने उत्तर दिया – 'संतानपरम्पराके लोपकी सम्भावनाके कारण हमारी यह दुर्दशा हो रही है' ।। १५ ।। उन्होंने अगस्त्यके पूछनेपर बताया कि 'हम तुम्हारे ही पितर हैं। संतानके इच्छुक होकर इस गड्ढेमें लटक रहे हैं' ।। १६ ।। 'अगस्त्य ! यदि तुम हमारे लिये उत्तम संतान उत्पन्न कर सको तो हम इस नरकसे छुटकारा पा सकते हैं और बेटा! तुम्हें भी सद्गति प्राप्त होगी

Agastya-ji asked those hanging Pitṛs,
"Why are you hanging here, trembling, with your faces turned downward?"

Hearing this, those Veda-knowing Pitṛs replied:
"Due to the possibility of the extinction of our lineage, we are suffering this miserable condition." (15)

When Agastya inquired further, they told him,
"We are indeed your own ancestors. Desiring progeny, we ¯re hanging in this pit." (16)

"O Agastya! If you can produce an excellent son for us, then we can be freed from this hell, and dear son, you too will attain blessedness."

Allegations-

Krishna's son by Rukmini was Pradumnya. When he was seven days old he was carried away by an Asura prince named Samvara and was entrusted to the care of his childless wife Mayavati (Harivamsa, Visnu Parva, 104, 6-7). When Pradumnya grew up into manhood Mayavati one day offered her love to him. He was at first shocked at this unseemly behaviour having been under the impression that she was his mother. Knowing from her the fact of this birth in the Yadava family he killed Samvara and married her (Vishnu Purana 5.27; Srimad Bhagavatam 10.55).

Refutation-

Here is Srimad Bhagvatam 10th Skanda Adhaya 55 –

In the Purāṇic narrative found in the Harivaṃśa, Viṣṇu Purāṇa (5.27), and Śrīmad Bhāgavatam (10.55), the episode is often misrepresented to suggest immorality, but the actual context reveals the opposite. Māyāvatī was not Pradyumna's biological or foster mother in the normal sense—she was the apsarā Rati, celestial wife of Kāmadeva, reborn by divine arrangement to be reunited with her husband. When the demon Śambara abducted the infant Pradyumna and cast him into the sea, he was swallowed by a fish, later caught by fishermen, and brought to Śambara's palace. Found inside the fish and given to Māyāvatī to raise, she—having been told by sage Nārada of his true identity as Kāma reborn—cared for him until he reached manhood. Only then did she reveal his birth as Kṛṣṇa's son and his divine destiny. Pradyumna slew Śambara and accepted Māyāvatī as his wife, not as an act of incest, but as the legitimate reunion of husband and wife across lifetimes, symbolizing the restoration of cosmic order rather than any moral transgression.

Sri Suka narrated:

1. As to Kāma[2], the god of Love, who was a portion of (the future) Lord Vasudeva, was formerly burnt down through the wrath of god Śiva. Hence he (Kāma) resorted to him again for the restoration of his corporeal form.
2. That very god of Love was born of Rukmini, the princess of Vidarbha, and (lit. from the semen of) Krsna. He became celebrated as Pradyumna and was in no way inferior to his father (Krsna) in any respects.
3. Knowing that the babe was his future enemy (slayer), the demon Sambara, the inveterate enemy of Kāma, who could assume any form at will, clandestinely kidnapped it even when it had not completed ten days (on the sixth-day)[1] and throwing it into the sea, he went home.
4. A huge powerful fish swallowed that babe. But along with others, that fish was caught into a big net by fishermen.
5. The fishermen brought it as a present to Sambara. The cooks carried it to the kitchen and cut that wonderful fish with a knife.
6. Finding a babe in its abdomen, they offered it into the charge of Māyāvatī[2]. As her mind was full of misgivings (about the child), the divine sage Narada narrated to her all the details how it was born and how it was found in the bowels of that fish.

7. It is reported that she was Rati, the glorious wife of the god Kama, waiting for the reincarnation of her consort whose body had been reduced to ashes.
8. She was entrusted with the charge of supervision (of the cooking of pulses and rice) in Sambara's kitchen. Having come to know that the child was her spouse Kāmadeva himself, she developed affection to that child[1].
9. Not long afterwards Pradyumna, the son of Krsna, attained youth and caused confusion in the heart of women who had a look of him.
10. Considering him as her husband, Rati was ogling at him with bashful smiles and raised evebrows aud approached with amorous purpose Pradyumna who with eyes longish like lotus-petals and knee-long arms was the most beautiful man in the world.
11. Rati replied:
12. "Your honour is the son of Lord Krsna taken away by the demon Sambara from (the lying-in-chamber in) your house. I am Rati, your (lawfully) married wife and you are (none else but) Kāma, the god of Love, my Lord.
13. This demon Sambara cast you into the sea when you were not even ten days old. A fish swallowed you up. It is from the bowels of the fish that your honour came out here, my lord.
14. This enemy of yours is irresistible and invincible as he is expert in hundred types of black magic (māyā). You, however, slay him by means of māyā powers like mohana (stupefaction) and others.
15. Being deprived of her child, your mother is wailing like a female osprey at the loss of her young one. Being overwhelmed with motherly affection for a child, she is anxious and miserable like a cow bereaved of her calf."

CHAPTER FIFTY FIVE

The Story of Pradyumna's Birth[1]

Śrī Śuka narrated :

1. As to Kāma[2], the god of Love, who was a portion of (the future) Lord Vāsudeva, was formerly burnt down through the wrath of god Śiva. Hence he (Kāma) resorted to him again for the restoration of his corporeal form.

2. That very god of Love was born of Rukmiṇī, the princess of Vidarbha, and (lit. from the semen of) Kṛṣṇa. He became celebrated as Pradyumna and was in no way inferior to his father (Kṛṣṇa) in any respects.

10. Considering him as her husband, Rati was ogling at him with bashful smiles and raised eyebrows and approached with amorous purpose Pradyumna who with eyes longish like lotus-petals and knee-long arms was the most beautiful man in the world.

Rati replied :

12. "Your honour is the son of Lord Kṛṣṇa taken away by the demon Śambara from (the lying-in-chamber in) your house. I am Rati, your (lawfully) married wife and you are (none else but) Kāma, the god of Love, my Lord.

Varaha Purana 177.2-31 "When Krsna was living there with his wives and sons, once Narada stepped in...But Narada took Krsna aside and spoke to him in private. 'I have to tell you something in secret. Please liten. Your son Samba is young, eloquent and handsome is longed by all the women here. The Supreme God gave you these sixteen hundred divine women for your pleasure. Their minds get agitated (with love) when they see Samba, and this (scandal) has spread even in Brahmaloka...By calling Samba and all this multitute of women and seating them here, I shall show you whether what I say is true or false...Then Samba entered with folded hands and waited to know the command (of Krsna). Seeing the exceptionally handsome Samba, all those noble women felt agitated in mind even when Krsna was watching them. Then Krsna asked these beloved women of his to get up and go to their homes and they did so... Looking at Narada, Krsna bent down his face in shame. He then told Narada in detail about the nature of women and their conduct leading to sin. 'They have no consideration of time, of secrecy of what they do. Still they pass to be virtous. Women irrespective of their age, whether they be girls, teenagers, middle-aged or advanced in age, get their passion excited at the sight of a handsome man. O great sage, this is natural to them... A chariot does not move, ' (he said), 'with a single wheel alone. It is only with the response of men do women get excited with passion. They get gratified by the looks of men. Seeing (your other son) Pradyumna, they become highly shy. But by seeing Samba, they become stricken with passion and the sandal paste and such other things (on his body) act as additional excitants. So Samba must be held responsible for ruining your women and you cannot obliterate the scandal that has reached even Satyaloka...Krsna then cursed Samba to become ugly and immediately he became a leper. Foul smelling blood began to ooze from his body which became full of wounds."

Skanda Purana VII.I.101.1-38 "At this very juncture (came) venerable sage Narada...In the court of his wandering at will, he always used to come to Dvaravati to pay a visit to Vasudeva. As he came on quickly all the Yadava youths beginning with Pradyumna remained with their heads (politely) bent down...but Samba due to the inevitability of the curse, slighted the noble souled Narada as usual. Being very proud of his youth and han

There is another version of this story,

Matsya Purana 70.2- "Siva said:- There will be 16,000 wives of Krisna in the Yuga mentioned before. When once, in the spring time, those ladies, having decorated themselves with ornaments, would be drinking together on the banks of a pond studded with full budded lotus flowers, dancing with the wind and resounding with the melodious notes of the cuckoo and musical tunes of the big black bee, they will see Lord Samba, beautiful like Cupid, having eyes handsome like those of a gazelle, and wearing the garlands of malati, passing by. They will cast on him amorous glances, their hearts being fired with lustful feelings and they being targets of the arrows of Cupid. "

Refutation-

Regarding Allegations on Varaha Purana Chapter 177

Chapters 152–180 of the Varāha Purāṇa are recognized as later interpolations, as noted by R.C. Hazra in Puranic Records. By the same reasoning, the Matsya Purāṇa and the Skanda Purāṇa section containing this tale should also be treated as spurious, since such accounts are entirely absent from authoritative Vaiṣṇava Purāṇas like the Śrīmad Bhāgavatam and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, as well as from the Mahābhārata. Moreover, no authentic ācārya has ever cited this narrative, while the Bhāgavatam and Mahābhārata themselves provide ample material that contradicts and effectively refutes such fabricated stories.

In the second section (chaps. 113-192), chaps. 140-151 (on the holy places and the duties of women under impurity) and

152-180 (on Mathurā) seem to have been interpolated. Though Kokāmukha, a place sacred to the Boar, is already glorified in chap. 122, there is no reason why it should be repeated by the same author as late as in chap. 140. That chap. 122 was already there when chap. 140 was added is certain, because in Var 140, 4 the Boar refers to Kokāmukha as already described (tava kokāmukhaṃ nāma yan mayā pūrva-bhāṣitam). There are other reasons why chaps. 140-151 can be taken as spurious. Some of the Tīrtha-māhātmyas in these chapters are told in the form of predictions; the stories do not resemble those in chaps. 122 (on Kokāmukha), 125-126 (on Kubjāmraka) and 137-138 (on Saukara-kṣetra); the line 'prabhātāyāṃ tu śarvaryāṃ udite tu divākare' or 'vyatītāyāṃ tu śarvaryāṃ udite ca divākare' which occurs often in other chapters not excepting even the chapters on Kokāmukha, Kubjāmraka and Saukara-kṣetra, and which, consequently, seems to be a favourite expression of the author of this section of the Purāṇa, is not found in chaps. 140-151; and there is no mention of the Chaps. 152-180 (on Mathurā-māhātmya) are ascribed by scholars to Sanātana, a disciple of Caitanya of Navadvīpa[66]. Verse 26 of Var 152 is found quoted in the Haribhaktivilāsa of Gopālabhaṭṭa, a contemporary of Sanātana and disciple of Caitanya, with the definite mention that the verse is taken from 'the Mathurā-māhātmya of the Varāha-p'[67]. That these chapters on Mathurā-māhātmya are later than the other chapters on holy places in the second section can be little doubted; because the story of the Brahma-rakṣasa in chap. 155 is certainly later than that in chap. 139; the performance of Śrāddha and the offer of rice-balls to the patriarchs in the holy places in Mathurā are highly spoken of in these chapters only; and the name 'Kṛṣṇa', which is rare in other chapters, is used more than once.

66 Farquhar, Outline, pp. 309-310.
67 Haribhaktivilāsa, p. 467. It is believed that the Haribhaktivilāsa was composed by Sanātana but was attributed to Gopālabhaṭṭa, another disciple of Caitanya.

There is no account in the Mahābhārata — the most authoritative scripture on Śrī Krishna's life — of Him cursing His wives or of them being kidnapped by bandits. In fact, the Mahābhārata (Swargarohan Parva, Section 5), which holds greater authority than the Purāṇas, clearly records that Śrī Krishna's wives voluntarily entered the Sarasvatī River and, after leaving their mortal forms, approached Vasudeva in Svarga in the form of Apsaras.

Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 10.59.44–45 affirms that Śrī Krishna's 16,000 queens were filled with pure love and unwavering devotion toward Him, their hearts entirely dedicated to Him alone, never even contemplating any man other than the Lord Himself.

Having obtained the consort of goddess Lakshmi as their own spouse whose ways (or approaches to whom) are in-comprehensible even to god Brahma and others, those damsels continuously waited upon him with ever-increasing incessant delight, by means of their affectionate smiles, side-glances in their ever-new meetings and their bashful behaviour and speech.

Although hundreds of maid-servants were in their service, each of them personally rendered service to the Lord by rising up and advancing to receive him, offering him a seat and excellent articles of worship, washing his feet, offering betel-leaves, removing his fatigue and refreshing him by fanning, application of sandalpaste and garlands of flowers, and by comb-ing his hair, arranging his bed, bath and catering to him refreshments (or presents) to him. Srimad Bhagavatam 10.61.1-2 and 10.61.5-6 mentions that Each of Bhagwan Shree Krishna wives gave birth to ten sons who were in no way inferior to Bhagwan in qualities of head-and-heart. Refutation-

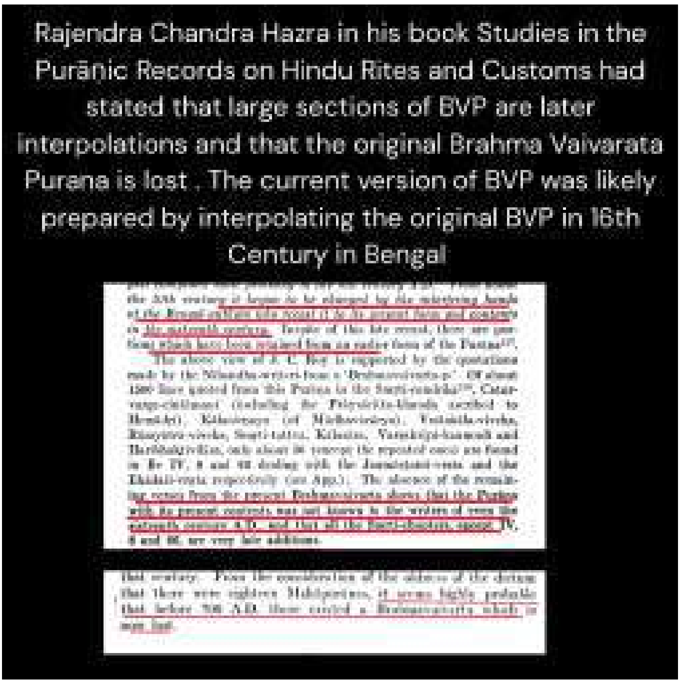
Rajendra Chandra Hazra in his book Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs had stated that large sections of BVP are later interpolations and that the original Brahma Vaivarata Purana is lost. The current version of BVP was likely prepared by interpolating the original BVP in 16th Century in Bengal.



Archaelogical survey of India prepared a critical edition of Brahma Vaivarat Purana based on the different manuscripts found all over India and prepared a critical edition in which they removed all those interpolated chapters and portions. I am providing the link of Critical edition Brahma Vaivarata Purana Volume 1 and 2 translated by Ram Sharma Acharya QR code provided here

Brahma Purana narrates the story of a Brahmin who had sexual intercourse with his mother,

Brahma Purana Gautami Mahatmya 22.8-10 “Her son too wandered over many countries as a lecherous debauchee. As time passed he too came to Janasthana and lived there. The son of Dhrtavrata, the brahmin (Sanajjata) was desirous of a harlot. The lady Mahi too wanted men who would lavishly spend money on her. Due to the curious turn of fate the mother and the son had sexual union. She did not recognise her son nor did he recognize his mother.”

The Gautami-māhātmya (chaps. 70-175), which was certainly composed by somebody living about the river Godāvarī, is a distinct 'work' (pustakam) by itself. It is called a 'highly meritorious Purāṇa' declared by Brahmā (cf. Br 175. 78 and 87). The place which it occupies in the Brahma-p. was not meant for it, because it divides the chapters on Puruṣottamakṣetra-māhātmya. The way in which chap. 176 opens, shows that it immediately followed chap. 69. Moreover, in chap. 176 there is no hint from which we may conclude that the Māhātmya was there. In Br 179, 6 the sages refer to Bhāratavarṣa (chap. 27) and Puruṣottama-kṣetra, of which, they say, Vyāsa told them elaborately, but they do not mention the Gautami-māhātmya which also precedes chap. 179 in our edition. So, it is clear that the Māhātmya was not originally there. In the Vṅk. ed. it is placed at the end. This Māhātmya was attached to the Brahma-p. later than the chapters on Orissa, for the Nāradīya-p. (I, 92), which gives the contents of the present

The Gautamīmāhātmya, also called Godāvarīmāhātmya, of which there exist several separate manuscripts[illegible] and which has also been separately edited,[illegible] calls itself a purāṇa,[illegible] and must originally have been a distinct book. It interrupts the section on Puruṣottamakṣetra, and has been inserted exactly in the middle of the Brahma".[illegible] It describes the sacred places along the Godāvarī river.

Refutation-

These type of myths originate when people compare the divine with mortals. In श्रुतिशास्त्र, Daksha is described as – दक्षं सर्वस्य जगतो निर्माणे समर्थं प्रजापतिम् । यद्वा । प्राणरूपेण सर्वेषु प्राणिषु व्याप्य वर्तमानं हिरण्यगर्भम् । 'प्राणो वै दक्षः' (तै. सं. २. ५. २. ४) इति श्रुतेः । – Daksha, the Prajapati with the potential to create the universe, the one who pervades every living creature in the form of प्राण. So प्राण-दक्ष.
Do mortals and Daksha Prajapati anyway seem alike? The mlecchas commenting on Prajapati don't have even a basic idea of terms such as Prajapati, Hiranyagarbha, etc. Besides, only morons would find similarity between mortal women and twilight which happens to be a natural phenomena.
Anyway, let's have a look at one of the most common sources of this myth -दक्षश्च मोहितशंभोर्मायया ब्रह्मणस्सुतः भ्रातृभिस्स भगिन्यां वै भोक्तुकामोऽभवत्पुरा ।। [शिवपुराणम्/संहिता ५ (उमासंहिता)/अध्यायः ०४] -Daksha, deluded by Shiva's Maya, had a desire to have conjugal pleasures from his sister (Sandhya).
Now, we should understand the form of Prajapati Daksha and Sandhya in this context. According to श्रुति and निरुक्त, Daksha is also referred to as sun. And Sandhya is obviously twilight. Sandhya devi's upper body is the morning twilight – प्रातस्संध्याभवत्सा तु अहोरात्रादिमध्यगा II Her lower body is the evening twilight – तच्छेषभागस्तस्यास्तु अहोरात्रांतमध्यगा सा सायमभवत्संध्या पितृप्रीतिप्रदा सदा ॥
Do these deities seem comparable to humans? Not even in the slightest. In this context, Prajapati Daksha has to be interpreted as sun. In निरुक्तशास्त्रम् ११.२३, there are verses that describe मित्र-वरुण as day and night and Aditi as the conjoining phase between these two phases – अहोरात्र मैत्रावरुणौ। तयोर्या सन्धिवेला तस्या प्रथममवस्यायरसानुप्रदानसंबन्धार्तो

मध्यमामदितिमभिप्रत्योच्यते। Similarly, प्रजापति दक्ष had been described as father of अदिति – तदेवं दक्षस्य जन्मनि उदये चार्धवर्तिन्यादित्ये यतो वा लब्धात्मिका त्वम् अपि अहोरात्रे उभे विवाससि परिचरसि सर्वतो व्याप्नोपि । It says that when the sun (दक्ष) rises, at that time in the conjoining phase, अदिति partially pervades day and night.

Similarly, the relation of दक्ष with संध्या in this puranic context, has to be interpreted as the relation of sun and the evening. And, it shouldn't be compared with the incest committed by mortals because none of the characters in this story are mortals.

Allegations-

A sage named Yajnavalkya accidentally impregnated his own sister,

Skanda Purana V.iii.42.8-12 "She attended to his needs and stayed there performing penance. On a certain occassion, she had her monthly course during the day when she took her bath. She saw a rag kept concealed and so wore it as her undergarment. In the meantime, at night Yajnavalkya had an erotic dream in a place where there was none. As a result of the dream, there was an emission of semen in his loin cloth. It resembled a drop of blood...The poor Brahmana woke up and found the piece of cloth defiled. He thought it not worthy of being touched and so cast it off and washed himself clean in accordance with the injunctions in the Smrti texts. Bath at night has been prohibited. So the Brahmana went to sleep again. At midnight the woman took this cloth and covered her vaginal aperture."

She later abandoned the child,

Refutation-

This allegation distorts the Skanda Purāṇa account by ignoring its own context. In V.iii.42.8–12, Yājñavalkya's sister wears a loincloth without knowing it had been soiled during his involuntary nocturnal emission caused by a dream — there was no intercourse, no intent, and no awareness from either side. The text itself explicitly states in V.iii.42.16–24 that neither Yājñavalkya nor his sister was at fault and that the conception was entirely due to destiny (daiva), a common motif in Purāṇic narratives to introduce a fated sage-hero. The child, Pippalāda, was later abandoned under a banyan tree not out of cruelty but in accordance with divine will, and was protected and nourished miraculously until he grew into a great ṛṣi. The story is symbolic, not a moral lapse, and portrays the inevitability of cosmic destiny, not incestuous intent.

Manu Smriti. 11.170 Translation: Pandit Shree Jagannathshastri Tailang. Bharatiya Vidya Prakashan, Varanasi. First Edition. 2011.-

Sex with sister, friend’s wife, daughter-in-law, unwed virgin girl, Chāndāli etc. is a major sin, atoned only by death.

गुरुतल्प (गुरुपत्नीगमन) महापातकों में है, जिसका प्रायश्चित्त प्रधान रूप से मृत्यु का वरण है। सगी बहिन, मित्रपत्नी, पुत्रवधू, अविवाहित अक्षतयोनि कुमारी कन्याएं, चाण्डालादि अन्त्य जाति की स्त्रियां इन के साथ संभोग करने पर उसका प्रायश्चित्त वही है, जो गुरुपत्नी के साथ सम्भोग करने पर है ॥१७०॥

Gurutalpa (sexual intercourse with the wife of one’s guru) is among the Mahāpātakas (greatest sins), the principal expiation for which is the voluntary acceptance of death. The same expiation as for intercourse with the guru’s wife applies in cases of intercourse with one’s own sister, a friend’s wife, one’s daughter-in-law, an unmarried virgin girl of intact chastity (akṣatayoni), or women of the lowest castes such as Chāṇḍālas. ॥170॥

Refutation-

Meaning of Devadaasi as per Shastras

शब्दकल्पद्रुम states, 'देवं इन्द्रियं दासनोति हन्तीति' or देवपरिचारिका च as the definition of devadasi meaning the servants of the temple deities

Likewise, Vachaspatyam defines the term as, 'स्त्री देवमिन्द्रियं दासनोति दाससथ' or देवानां परिचारिकायाम् meaning the servants of the temple deities

The sanskrit term "Devdasi" or Tamil "Devar Adiyal" simply translates to a woman engaged in Service of God. Woman were treated with a lot of respect. Hence In Hindu culture, a Devdasi was a pious position for a woman who engaged in different activities of a temple & were considered married to the temple deity. Their work included, cleaning temples, taking care of the deity & sing devotional songs only.

> Devadasi means a woman who performs the service for some deity in a temple: unmarried temple servants who had been dedicated to temple deities as young girls through rites resembling Hindu marriage ceremonies (Parker, 1998). To be a Devadasi is one of the services rendered by women in Hindu society; a woman readily marries a deity and serves him in the temple. Devadasis were an essential part of Indian temples. They performed regular functions at temples such as cleaning of temples, lighting lamps, dressing the deities and so on. They sang devotional songs and danced in devotion to the deities. They taught music and dance to girls. They kept alive and developed

Thus, it's clear that they weren't sex slaves but servants of the deities. If they were sex slaves of brahmin then that should've been the definition of devadasi.

There are four types of दासी – दासी चतुर्विधा प्रोक्ता (ब्रह्माण्डपुराणम्/उत्तरभागः/अध्यायः ८). Devadasi Brahmadāsi, Svatāntra, and Shudradāsi – देवदासी ब्रह्मदासी स्वतन्त्राशूद्रदासिका । The first two are equal to kshatriya women – ते चाक्षत्रियसाम्नो । I'm sure that kshatriya women weren't prostitutes so referring to devadasis as prostitutes doesn't make sense as well.

Things got messed up when people started referring to devadasi as प्रथा or system.

During Hindu period maintaining discipline was mandatory for them. Far from being forced into prostitution, it was considered a strict offence for any man to look at her lecherously coz she was considered the wife of God himself.

The status of the Devadasi accorded with whom she was given to in marriage, that is, the deity, the God of the temple, and thus she was considered 'Sadasuhagan' – at all times married, hence always blessed. Being married to a deity, her adherence to maintaining strict discipline was mandatory, she was the personal possession of the temple and her elevated position made it unacceptable for her to mingle with the rest of the people and, more precisely, to keep in touch with men.

A Devadasi was meant to be revered; while she danced in worship, speaking to her or looking at her has been mentioned as a ritual offence in the sectarian texts that lay out the etiquette on Blame in other varieties of indiscretion such as spitting in the temple, turning one's

There are inscriptions in the Raja Rajeswhara Temple, Tanjore Temple itself where it says there were 400 Devdasis in the temple whose position was so important only next to the priests of the temple themselves.

Inscriptions dating back to 1004 AD on the Raja Rajeshwar temple at Tanjore in South India maintain that there were 400 Devadasis in the temples, who were second in importance only to the temple priests who performed the religious rituals. Parallel to this, there is a record of the Someshwar shrine at Gujarat, which maintained 500 Devadasis. They used to live in the streets surrounding the temples and received maintenance in return for service in the temple (Tarachand, 1992).

Infact, Devdasis were quite affluent under the patronage of Hindu kings like cholas or pallavas. They were betowed with a lot of wealth and land. There was no sign of ostracism. Now these is what scholarly research implies, not claiming something without any evidence feom any authentic source.

The affluent status of Devadasis has been found in Pallava and Chola dynasties in the southern parts of India between the 6th and 13th centuries AD. This phase shows that they were accorded with great respect and dignity in society, being the custodians of culture and the arts such as music and dance. There is no hint of ostracism. They were bestowed with grand gifts of land, property and jewellry by wealthy and royal patrons and were quite affluent.

Scholars identified devdasis to hold either of this position listed below. And no hint of prostitution was by "Temple dancers" were found in these inscriptions. This is Hindu period for us

a. She is referred to in the inscriptions by one of several terms—devaraṭiyāḷ (or a related term that similarly has the meaning of "devotee," e.g., emperumāṉaṭiyāḷ); tevaṉār makaḷ ("daughter of God"); and patiyilār or taḷiccēri ("temple woman").
b. She is said to have some function in a temple or maṭha and/or to receive on a regular basis food, rice, cloth, or gold, or rights over land from the temple.
c. She is identified in the inscription as being a woman "of this temple" or a servant or devotee "of the Lord of such-and-such a place."

destruction of the temples, devadasis lost not only their patronage but also their status in society, leading to the beginnings of their exploitation. The result of the loss of patronage forced the devadasis, who previously danced at religious temple events, to dance at wedding feasts or other private entertainments. The system was further limited under British rule, which unlike the Islamic Empire reached the entirety of the subcontinent.

(1018-1054 A.D.) provision was made for offerings to the images of Rājendra and Paravai Naṅkaiyār in the Tiruvarur temple.[121]

2. Temple dancers

The inscription makes mention of donations that were made by dancing girls as well as to them. Temple dancers usually donated gold, lamps, or cows and sheep, and even land.[122] The revenue from the latter would provide for the supply of oil for perpetual lamps. Donation to temple dancers consisted in personal grants of lands or in the gift of land for the maintenance of a group of temple artists.[123] From epigraphical material one may assume that the temple dancers were highly respected members of society who were well provided for by the temple and by the community of devotees.

Dancing women

It is clear from the inscriptions that both the court and the temple supported a large number of female dancers and singers; however, it seems that the two centres did not employ each other's artists. We have sufficient evidence to assume that both types of artists, court dancers as well as temple dancers, were held in great esteem and were generally very rich.[117] Examples of their valuable donations can be found in epigraphical records.

78

It seems that devadasis were held in high esteem in all layers of cultural expression. Their repertoire absorbed a great number of musical and dance compositions that were in vogue during the Vijayanagara period; this fact is attested by the multivalence and divergent character of those ritual compositions that have come to us.

92

European sources

The developments in the artistic field during the Tanjore period were so striking that Indian sources refer to devadasis and art as identical. The other tasks that formed part and parcel of the devadasi tradition were practically entirely obliterated by information about the artistic accomplishments of the devadasis. An indirect proof of the continuation of the ritual nityasumangali, the ever-auspicious female. This auspiciousness is implored by society in the case of wedding ceremonies[231], in processions of the gods[232], and while carrying the sacred water to the temple.[233] Even after retirement from active temple-service the devadasis of Vaishnava temples were called Kali-yuga-Lakshmi (goddess of prosperity in the worst world-period of kali)[234] and Kali-yuga-Parvati in Saiva temples.[235] The

Secular patrons

Apart from the patronage which the devadasis received from the temple and the king, their services were valued by society at large. Although the devadasis did not visit the houses of pañcamas (outcastes, the so-called 'fifth caste'), they officiated in the houses of Brahmins and of high-caste non-Brahmins (like Mutaliārs). Women of devadasi families took care of the pūjā-room (home-altar or shrine) and performed kumbhārati or ālatti/ ālam for the family-members. This function was called māṇikkam.[306] Another instance of their bygone prestige was the code of politeness that prescribed that any dignified person of high social status should travel only with a retinue of devadasis. Important visitors should be received in the same manner.

The most important function of the devadasis in the houses of private patrons was to be present at their social-cum-ritual functions. These were mostly of the character of rites of passage (saṃskāras) like the hair-parting ceremony performed for pregnant females, the name-giving and ear-piercing ceremonies for children, and most importantly the wedding-ceremonies. A large bulk in the repertoire of the devadasis concerns songs for such occasions. The maṅgalas serve mostly the more simple rites of passage, whereas a rather rich variety of songs was sung during the wedding festivities. The major part of these songs are called nalaṅku, featuring the words nalaṅkiṭa vāraṃ 'come to the anointment ceremony of the bride (before marriage)'

The role of the devadasis in the life of secular patrons was mostly to lend prestige to any function or visit, to protect the family or gathering from evil influences, and to spread an auspicious atmosphere of mirth and art. Undoubtedly, the degree

Concluding Chapter I

As far as our historical data go we can distinguish at all times and at all levels of culture and of society a 'ritual' person who deals effectively with the divine which is considered dangerously ambivalent. This female ritualist whom we would like to call nityasumaṅgalī renders her special power effective in three ways: 1. through her female sexuality that is identified with that of the goddess;

2. through a number of implements of ritual value like the pot, the lamp, coloured water, certain flowers, fruits and unguents;

3. through her art.

At different times and in different socio-cultural foci of South Indian culture a different emphasis has been laid on either of the three. In all cases, however, she deals with the ambivalent divine, warding off its evil forces and supporting its benign workings. This, in itself, is an extremely dangerous task, and only specially qualified persons can be up to it. Her special qualification is her auspiciousness which earns her the epithet nityasumaṅgalī.

Nityasumaṅgalī: Devadasi Tradition in South India by Saskia Kersenboom

So the Devadasis were exploited by making them affluent to such an extent that they could donate gold, domestic animals, and even land to the temples.
Further, they were exploited through land grants and respect in the society. Can't imagine the horrors encountered by these innocent women.

Devadutta Pattanik wrote that it was due to Satanic Islamic Invasions that the Sacred Devadaasi system was transformed into Prostitution

11. Dance in the early [illegible]
12. Playing with colours as gopi during Holi.
13. Accompanying the Raja on special occasions.
14. Singing at marriages.

Records show that there was another class of mahāris known as samparada niyoga whose duty was to dance during the ceremonial procession (patuar) of the deities. Religious texts mention such dances during Ratha Jatra, Chandan Jatra, Uthapona Utsaba, Dola Jatra (Holi), Jhoolan Jatra, etc. As the mahāris of this class were also to dance at in patuars (processions), they came to be known as patuari (one who accompanies a procession). Mahāris of this class are completely extinct.

From the beginning of the 17th century till the conquest of the Marathas in the middle of the 18th century the political life of Orissa remained in turmoil. This also affected the religious, social and cultural life of the people. During this period of 150 years the Muslim as well as Hindu subedars of the Mughal court raided the Puri temple successively and looted its property. The idols were often removed and concealed for fear of defilement. The temple services had to be suspended on such occasions. Due to successive Muslim invasions and the weakening of political authority a degree of moral degeneration must have overtaken the mahāris. It is from this period that the mahāris, who were originally intended for temples alone, came to be employed in royal courts as well. From now on, the mahāris ceased to be respected as dāsis of the Lord and came to be associated with concubinage.

Around the middle of the 18th century the powerful Marathas came to power. Their occupation of Orissa marked a revolutionary change in the religious and cultural life of the people. The continuous attacks on the Jagannath temple came to an end. As staunch Hindus the Marathas invigorated the religious movement. The temple services were again regulated. The Marathas also built a number of temples and religious institutions and patronized art and literature. During their rule of more than 50 years till the British takeover in 1803, a number of poets and

The Mohamedan invasion of Bharat was the first gateway to subjugation of Devdasis- the same women who were respected in Hindu society. The proof is given By an Islamic scholar Al-Beruni. He describes how Devdasis lost patronage of Hindu kings & protection of Brahman men and Mohamedan rulers used them for their benefits.

> The Muslim invasion (between the 12th and 16th centuries) was the first gateway to their slaughter as the Hindu Empire went to subjugation and the Devadasis lost their royal patronage. By losing virginity earlier, they had to resort to prostitution to earn their living. The testimony of Al-Beruni (Sachau, 1910, p. 157), a traveller during the Muslim invasion, states that kings maintained this institution for the benefit of their revenues, as here the Brahmana or priest was detained to allow into their temples women who sang, danced and played. The kings, however, made them a source of attraction to their subjects so that they might meet the expenditure of their armies out of the revenues derived from there.

After the onslaught of Mohamedan culture, it was British who exploited Devdasis. The end of Royal patronage and capture of temple treasury reduced these woman into prostitution. The women who were given rights second to a priest were forced to become entertainers.

> As we will shortly see, the esteemed status of the Devadasis began to wane under Islamic and British rule (Shingal, 2015). By 1818, the Devadasis themselves had been reduced to the level of prostitutes for sustaining their finances. Especially during British rule (1858–1947), there had been a sea change in the economic system of the society, which led the Devadasis to lose the privileges that they had traditionally enjoyed. British rule in India put an end to the local royalty and temple treasuries. Most of the temples at that time ran with royal funding from local kings. All these faced decline with the rise of British power and one of the groups to be financially and socially pursued and victimized were the Devadasis. Gone was the respect they enjoyed as members of a class next only to the priests. Devadasis remained entertainers but their mode of entertainment changed drastically, being performed by their bodies. They evolved into practising courtesans, skilled in the art of love-making. The system spread across the Belgaum, Gulbarga and Bellary districts in Karnataka and the Satara, Kolhapur, Solapur and Osmanabad districts of Maharashtra.

British Missionaries, who did not see free educated women in christian society couldn't believe women had so much rights in Hindu society and based on their victorian morality they started branding free women as Ⓦ hores. It was only Hindu culture that respected women.

> Dubois' thinking was clearly influenced by his occidental approach. Western-educated Indians thought no differently. The Indian concept of shringara or eroticism was considered something to be ashamed of when compared to high-minded Victorian idealism. The concept of a free woman entitled to choose her partners and with absolute right to property and access to education was anathema to this band of people. Such a woman by the very nature of her life was considered immoral and branded as a whore.

Thus Christian preachers made dubious claims about Devdasis. Hence colonial sources are definitely not a mirror of what Hindu society actually was. Hindu society can only be judged with contemporary sources

> It was a strange situation. On the one hand the community was the storehouse of arts. On the other it was the repository of all evil and every conceivable vice. Opinion was therefore sharply divided. On top of all this was the western mode of education and the relentless pressure from Christian preachers and proselytisers who condemned the entire system as vile. Having never experienced the existence of such a community in their own lands, these people had no hesitation in condemning all Devadasis as prostitutes and their art as sinful.

The Agama shastras have given Devadasis, the right to beat the hell out of pervert priests.

> nrttam in the prakara of Mahamari. Dance should be performed in all utsavas. The tali for the rudradasi should be tied in her ninth year. Hereafter it is forbidden to tie the tali. If desire for sexual enjoyment of the rudrakkanyaikai overcomes the acarya she may beat him. If the desire arises in the rudrakkanyaikai, she is advised to go to the kesapraksaram[34], and in the morning of the next day favour the gurukkal outside, because the Brahmin custom gives the first rights to the acarya. It is advisable to perform santikam (propitiatory rite to avert evil) with him; it is necessary to remove the tali, untie it, and destroy it as it is done on the day when a husband has died. The rudradasis may beat them. If they bear hatred towards them, it is necessary to sprinkle water."[35]
> Initiation and marriage ceremonies for the rajaganika, gramadasi and rudradasi:[36] "The rajaganika is within the dharma of the adisaivas. A samayadiksa[36] is performed in the temple of Durga. The srimakaramalai bottu[37] is strung, Satciktambara[38] is invoked and worshipped, naivedya, etc. is performed, then the srimakaramalai bottu is tied around her neck. If there is no temple of Durga or Laksmi, then the bottu should be tied in the shrine of Hanuman, or in her own house, or in the sannidhi of Ambikai situated in the temple of Siva in that town. The bottu of the gramadasi should be tied in the temple of Mahavittuvan.[39] The rudradasi should have her bottu tied in the temple of Mahakali. These persons should undergo the ceremony of tying the bottu at the age of nine years. It is not allowed to tie the bottu before or after that age."[40]

No one denies that there wasn't any exploitation. But accusing शास्त्र for such horrors is baseless. Nowhere in the आगमशास्त्र is this mentioned that devadasis are to be employed as prostitutes of Brahmins. A Brahmin who abides by dharma has to engage in rites the whole day. If he will engage in sex every now and then, he'll die constantly purifying himself before these rituals. It doesn't make any sense saying that shastras are ordaining a suicide sort of enjoyment to brahmins. The reason why brahmins are the most revered ones is because of the harsh lifestyle they have to live. The shastras don't allow them rest for a single minute from the time they wake in the morning and perform Vaisvadeva at night.
Every devadasi has to take oaths while undergoing the diksha process. None of the oaths involve becoming a prostitute for brahmins or town. One can also refer to the royal inscription at Jagannath temple which states that devadasis can't be touched.

Listing some famous Devdasis who are world famous for their talent in Art. And definitely arent prostitutes by any means. This is the famous 7th generation Devdasi, Balasaraswati, a Bharatnatyam dancer famous all over the world & has been awarded with Padma Bibhushan which is the 3rd highest civilian award. Indian government respected her by making a postal stamp with her picture as shown below. From which angle she looks like a prostitute to you . Claiming her prostitute is absolutely baseless

Another famous Devdasi Veenai Dhanammal, is considered the torch bearer of Carnatic Music which goes by her name. Hindu society respect women to this level that they could progress to be this famous and have postal stamps commemorating them. Does she look like a prostitute to anyone sensitive ? People who never respected women wont understand how much respect these women enjoy in a free Hindu society.

Devdasi M.S Subbulakshmi, the nightingale of Carnatic music was awarded Bharat Ratna, the highest civilian award. She lived until 2004 which isnt much long ago. Indian Govt ommemorated her with postal stamp.

PROSTITUTION AND RELATED ACTIVITIES AND RELATIONSHIP WITH PROSTITUTES IS PROHIBITED IN SANATAN SCRIPTURES

Sri Mahabharat Shanti Parva Adhyay 88 slokas 14-22 Geeta Press Gorakhpur – Prostitution must be banned throughout the country and those who run the Brothel must be severely suppressed and punished.

शराबखाना खोलनेवाले, वेश्याएँ, कुट्टनियाँ, वेश्याओंके दलाल, जुआरी तथा ऐसे ही बुरे पेशे करनेवाले और भी जितने लोग हों, वे समूचे राष्ट्रको हानि पहुँचानेवाले हैं; अतः इन सबको दण्ड देकर दबाये रखना चाहिये। यदि ये राज्यमें टिके रहते हैं तो कल्याणमार्गपर चलनेवाली प्रजाको बड़ी बाधाएँ पहुँचाते हैं

Those who run liquor shops, prostitutes, procuresses (women who arrange for illicit liaisons), pimps, gamblers, and others engaged in such immoral professions — all of them harm the entire nation. Therefore, they must be suppressed and punished. If such people are allowed to remain in society, they greatly obstruct the path of welfare for righteous citizens."

Mahabharat Anushasan Parva Adhyay 145 page 1259 Geeta press Gorakhpur says that those who violate chastity of other woman when they are reborn as humans again, suffer from severe afflictions and are tormented by dreadful diseases related to the urinary and reproductive systems

Shri Maheshwara said:
O Devi! Those men who, in their past lives, destroyed the chastity of other women; those deceitful humans who engaged in sexual acts with animals; and those filled with pride over their appearance, who, driven by lust, raped innocent maidens and widows—O Beautiful One!—such men, after death, when they are reborn as humans again, suffer from severe afflictions. Beloved! They are tormented by dreadful diseases related to the urinary and reproductive systems (such as venereal or sexually transmitted diseases).

In the modern prostitution system, many young women are kidnapped and forced into this exploitative trade, treated as mere commodities to be bought and sold like goods or animals. Some greedy parents even sell their own children into this vile practice. Such acts of activities have been strongly condemned in the scriptures.

Mahabharat says that selling and buying Human beings specially woman and one's own children is highly condemnable and strictly prohibited

Mahabharat 13.45.23 –किसी दूसरे मनुष्यको भी नहीं बेचना चाहिये; फिर अपनी संतानको बेचनेकी तो बात ही क्या? अधर्ममूलक धनसे किया हुआ कोई भी धर्म सफल नहीं होता ।। २३ ।।-

One should not sell any other human being . Then what can we say about selling our own children ? Any act done with unrighteous money does not succeed

Mahabharat 13.44.48–

'जो दासियोंको खरीदते और बेचते हैं वे बड़े लोभी और पापात्मा हैं। ऐसे ही लोगोंग नीको भी खरीदने-बेचनेकी निष्ठा होती है ।। ४७ ।।

Those who buy and sell females as slaves are very greedy and sinful. Such people also have the tendency to buy and sell their wives.

'जो मनुष्य अपने पुत्रको बेचकर धन पाना चाहता है अथवा जीविकाके लिये मुल्य लेकर कन्याको बेच देता है, वह मूढ़ कुम्भीपाक आदि सात नरकोंसे भी निकृष्ट कालसूत्र नामक नरकमें पड़कर अपने ही मल-मूत्र और पसीनेका भक्षण करता है'

"A person who sells his son for wealth or gives away his daughter in exchange for money for livelihood is a fool. Such a person falls into the most wretched hell called 'Kālasūtra', which is even more terrible than the seven other hells like Kumbhīpāka, where he is forced to eat his own excreta, urine, and sweat

Manu Smriti 7.47- 52

शिकार करना, जुआ खेलना, दिन में स्वप्न देखना, दूसरों की निन्दा करना, स्त्री-सम्पर्क, नशा करना, नृत्य-गीत-वाद्य के प्रति आसक्ति तथा व्यर्थ में इधर उधर घूमना, यह काम से उत्पन्न दस का समूह होता है ।। ४७ ।।

चुगलखोरी, दुःसाहस करना, द्रोह करना, ईर्ष्या करना, गुणों में दोषदृष्टि रखना, दूसरे का धन हड़पने की आकांक्षा रखना, कर्कश वाणी का उच्चारण तथा कठोरतापूर्वक आचरण करना, यह क्रोध से उत्पन्न आठ का समूह (माना गया है) ।। ४८ ।।

सभी विद्वान् जिसे इन दोनों का भी मूलकारण मानते हैं, उस लोभ को अत्यन्त प्रयत्नपूर्वक जीतना चाहिए, क्योंकि ये दोनों समूह उसी से उत्पन्न होते हैं।। ४९ ।।

काम से उत्पन्न होने वाले समूह के अन्तर्गत शराब पीना, जुआ खेलना, स्त्रियों से सम्पर्क तथा शिकार करना, इस चार के समूह को ही क्रमशः अधिक कष्टदायक समझना चाहिए।। ५० ।।

जितेन्द्रिय राजा सभी राजाओं में रहने वाले इस सात के समूह के पूर्व-पूर्व व्यसन को अपेक्षाकृत अधिक दुष्प्रभाव वाला समझे ।। ५२ ।।

Verse 47:
Hunting, gambling, daydreaming, slandering others, excessive association with women, intoxication, attachment to dancing, singing and playing musical instruments, and roaming about here and there aimlessly—these are described as the tenfold group that arises from desire (kāma).

Verse 48:
Tale-bearing (backbiting), reckless daring, treachery, jealousy, finding faults in others’ virtues, the desire to seize another’s wealth, speaking harsh words, and behaving with cruelty—these eight are said to arise from anger (krodha)

Verse 49:
All learned men consider greed (lobha) to be the root cause of both these groups. One should therefore strive with utmost effort to conquer greed, because these two groups spring forth from it.

Verse 50:
Among the group born of desire, drinking liquor, gambling, association with women, and hunting—this group of four hould be regarded, in order, as especially more harmful.

Verse 52:

A self-controlled king should consider, in this group of seven (vices), that the earlier ones (arising from desire) have relatively more disastrous effects.

DEBUNKING ALLEGATIONS OF PROSTITUTION IN PURANAS AND ITIHASAAS

Allegations-

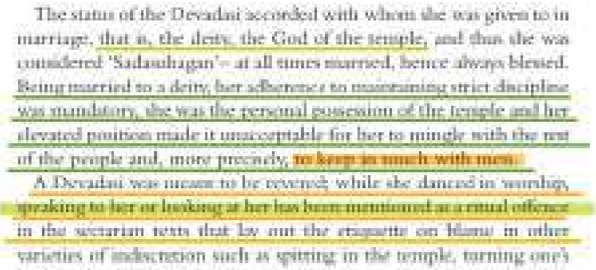
One can find the permissibility of this evil practice in Hindu scriptures,

Padma Purana V.113.40-46b "Vasistha said:- O king, you have not asked enough. That is said to be holy which enables one to be more sportive, O king. He should make Siva's temple white with whitewash on all sides. He should have women who are endowed with beauty and graceful movements, adorned with all ornaments, skilled in (singing) many good songs, and proficient in various kinds of dancing...All should be beautiful and should have graceful movements. All should be of firm breasts. They should be skilled in the ways of sexual love and should be trustworthy...O king, he who has caused women like this to dance (even) on one day, gets into a (divine) aeroplane in a year."

Refutation-

In Padma Purana, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 113, verses 40–46 (Hindi translation by Choukhamba Publications), the terms Vāsinī, Ājivikī, and the women who play musical instruments and perform classical devotional dances are mentioned. These women are none other than Devadasis—the dedicated servants of temple deities—who served the temple through their music, dance, and various other religious services. They were not sex slaves or prostitutes, but respected custodians of sacred art and ritual. Historical records also affirm their highly regarded status in society, where they were honored for their cultural, spiritual, and artistic contributions.

During Hindu period maintaining discipline was mandatory for them. Far from being forced into prostitution, it was considered a strict offence for any man to look at her lecherously coz she was considered the wife of God himself.



The status of the Devadasi accorded with whom she was given to in marriage, that is, the deity, the God of the temple, and thus she was considered 'Sadasuhagan'– at all times married, hence always blessed. Being married to a deity, her adherence to maintaining strict discipline was mandatory, she was the personal possession of the temple and her elevated position made it unacceptable for her to mingle with the rest of the people and, more precisely, to keep in touch with men.

A Devadasi was meant to be revered; while she danced in worship, speaking to her or looking at her has been mentioned as a ritual offence in the sectarian texts that lay out the etiquette on blame in other varieties of indiscretion such as spitting in the temple, turning one's

Sage Vasiṣṭha said — "O King! You have not asked about a merit (puṇya) even more blissful than that, by which living beings will rejoice. I will tell you of that very merit." ॥40॥

Plaster the temple of Śiva with lime, making it as white as nectar, and adorn it with beauty and elegance, with all decorations. Let there be women skilled in singing many kinds of songs, and adept in performing various dances — such women, along with four, eight, or six women who play the mṛdaṅga drum sound. ॥41–42॥

Two of the women should be Vāsinī (fragrant or perfumed attendants), and two women should be Ājivikī (professional female performers). Two women should be players of the naḍā drum, and four women should be dancers. One should be a pleasing singer. ॥43॥

One or two women should possess fine knowledge of songs, and both should be melodious in voice. Two women should play the koṇa (a type of percussion or cymbal). There should be six or eight women who remain silent. ॥44॥

All of them should be endowed with beauty and charm. The breasts of all should be well-raised. They should be skilled in the art of love (Rati-śāstra) so that they do not feel shy. ॥45॥

Their garments and attire should be delicate and fine. Their eyes should be as restless as lightning. O King! A person who, with such women, arranges for dancing in a Śiva temple for one day, travels in a celestial chariot (vimāna) for a year. Hundreds of women keep gazing at his face, and many young men offer worship to him. ॥46–47॥

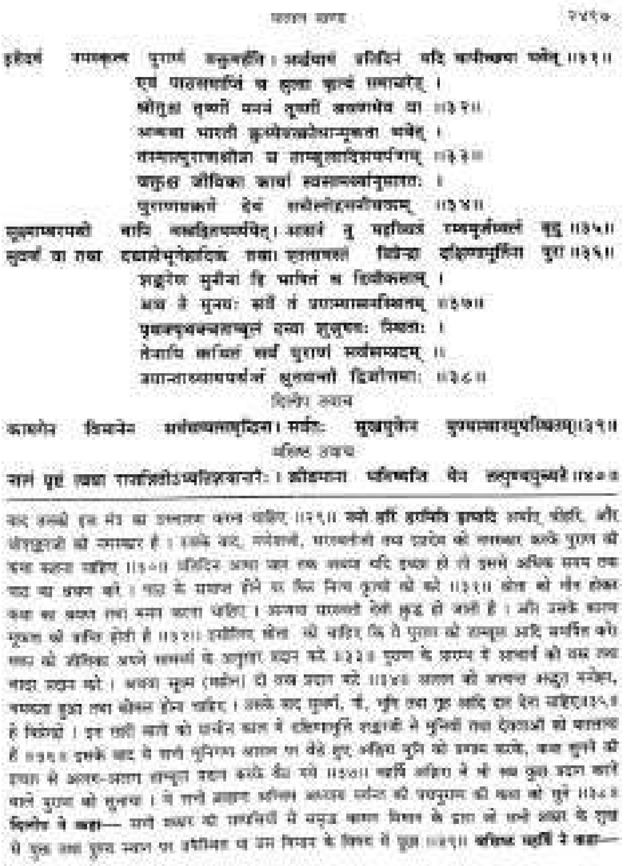
His women wear garlands of fully bloomed red arohī flowers. They also adorn their hair and bosom with garlands. Smiles always play upon their lips. ॥50॥



Allegations-

Padma Purana 1.23.74b-87a "The Lord said: O Brahman, born from the lotus, in the same city there will be sixteen thousand wives of Vasudeva. Krsna, the universal soul, having eyes like those of a deer, the dignified scion of Yadu family, who had put the garland of Malati flowers on his head, and being adorned with his praiseworthy wives, will enjoy with them in a garden rich with flowers, and situated on the bank of a lake, in the spring season abounding in cuckoos and swarms of bees. Samba, Jambavatl's son, adorned with all (kinds of ornaments), going along with the path nearby, really of the form of Cupid, will be longingly seen by the ladies and passion will be aroused in the hearts of them who will be tormented by the arrows of Cupid. He, the lord of the world, the omniscient master, having perceived it with his eye of contemplation, will say to them: "The evil being will kidnap you, since you have thus entertained the passion of love (for Samba) in my presence." Then the revered lord, the cause of beings, the holder of the bow made of horn, being propitiated (by the ladies) tormented with the curse, will say this: "(You will observe) the vow, beneficial in the future, which sage Dalbhya, emancipator of the fishermen living in the north and of an unlimited (generosity of) mind will tell you." Saying so and leaving them, the lord vanished. Then after a (long) time when the burden (on the earth as a result of the great Bharatawar) will be lightened and when the fight with clubs (among the Yadavas) will be over, when Kesava will have come back to the heaven, when the entire Yadu-family will be no more, when even Arjuna will be defeated by the thieves, when Krsna's wives will be kidnapped and will be enjoyed by the fishermen for a hundred million years and when they will be (thus) tormented, a devout soul, Dalbhya by name, with great penance (to his credit) will come there."

Padma Purana 1.23.91-121 "O revered sir, all of us have been perforce enjoyed by the evil beings; we have slipped from (i.e. erred in) our duty. You are our refuge. O brahmana, you have been formerly instructed by the intelligent Kesava. Why have we become prostitutes after having come in contact with the lord? O you, whose wealth is penance, explain to us the duties of the prostitutes." I shall tell you what Dalbhya Caikitayana said to them. Dalbhya said: Formerly Narada approached you, who were proud, while (you were) sporting in the water of the Manasa lake. All of you were daughters of Agni and were the nymphs in olden days. Not saluting Narada through haughtiness you asked the sage conversant with deep and abstract meditation: "Advise us as to how Narayana will be our husband." From him, this boon and this curse came forth (i.e. Narada gave this boon to and pronounced this curse on the ladies) in ancient days: "By giving a couple of beds with articles of gold (to a brahmana) on the twelfth day of the bright fortnight of Caitra and Vaisakha, Narayana will certainly be your husband (i.e. you will obtain Narayana as your husband); (and) since, you asked me (a question) without saluting me, due to your selfish addiction to your beauty and good fortune, you will be kidnapped by thieves and will become prostitutes." Thus, due to the curse of Narada and also that of Kesava, all of you, deluded by passion, have become prostitutes. O you excellent ladies, listen, even now, to what I shall say. The lord of lords, the best speaker, formerly said to the hundreds and thousands of thousands of the wives of the demons, the Asuras (the evil spirits—enemies of gods), the sons of Diti and the goblins, when these (ladies) were married and enjoyed by force (by the gods), after hundreds of the Asuras and demons were killed by the gods in the war between gods and Asuras (that took place) in ancient days: "O you devout and beautiful ladies, now live as prostitutes in king's residences and in temples of gods; you will obtain your livelihood from the king and the master; and all of you will have good fortune as per your capacity. He, who enters your house with the fee should be served by you with attitude of love void of deceit... At that time, he, having the five arrows as his soul (i.e. Cupid), will go (i.e. remain) near Hari. She should worship the lotus-eyed (god i.e. Visnu), followed by eulogies of Cupid. She should worship the feet (of the image of the deity saying:) 'My salutation to Kama'; (she should worship) the shanks (saying:) 'My salutation to Vaimohakarin'; (she should worship) the generative organ (of the image of the deity saying:) 'My salutation to Kandarpanidhi...Having thus worshipped Govinda, the lord of the form of Ananga, the lady having made an offering with sandal, flowers and incense, and then having invited a Brahmana knowing customary observances, who has mastered the Vedas and who is without any deformity, and then having honoured him with adoration of sandal, flowers etc. she should give the brahmana rice of the measure of a prastha along with a pot of ghee, (saying:) 'May Madhava be pleased'. She should bear in mind that the best Brahmana, who has eaten well according to his sweet will, is Kamadeva meant for Rati. The lady should do whatever the best Brahmana desires."

Padma Purana 1.23.130b-142 "Then having circumambulated and allowed the best Brahmana to go, she should take all (the articles) like the bed, the seat, to the Brahmana's house. Since then whosoever comes to her house for sexual enjoyment should be similarly honoured on a Sunday and should always be adored. Thus till the thirteenth month arrives, she should gratify a Brahmana and then send him to his house; with his permission (she may entertain) a handsome (person) till he arrives (to her residence). When she has a difficulty as a result of impurity due to child-birth or abortion or from the king or a difficulty due to divine or human (forces) or due to an eclipse, then she should offer herself according to her capacity, for fifty-eight times. This (vow) I have especially narrated to you, since this is the duty that should be always performed by the prostitutes in this world..."

Refutation-

According to R.C. Hazra (Puranic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs), chapters 19–28 of the Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa of the Padma Purāṇa — including chapter 23 — represent a comparatively late stratum of the text. These portions, in his assessment, were not part of the original Brahma-worshipping redaction but were inserted subsequently by compilers belonging to other sectarian traditions. Their thematic and stylistic character, as well as their divergence from the Brahma-centric orientation of the earlier core chapters, support the conclusion that they are later accretions rather than authentic components of the earliest Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa.

A careful study of the chapters of the first part shows that they should be divided again into several groups; viz.,

The chapters in group 2 are different from those in group 1 in general character, some being Vaisnava, some Rämaite and some Saiva. A good number of these chapters have been borrowed from the Matsya-p., but they do not show any traces of the attempt of the Brahma-worshippers to adapt them to their own purpose. Hence it can be little doubted that the chapters of the second group were added to the Srşți-kh. by some people other than the Brahmā-worshippers. These chapters, being rooted in those of group 1 and frequently referring to the events and stories in the latter, are certainly later in date. Their comparatively late date is further established by the story of king Sveta (in Srşți-kh. 33, 85 ff.) which is different from that in chap. 31 (verses 104 ff.) of the first group.

group 3—chapter 31 (verses [illegible]); also others like chap. [illegible], verses [illegible]; and group 4—chapters 30 and 31 (verses 1-[illegible]).

The chapters of group 1, which begins with a verse extolling the holy waters of Puşkara and mentioning Brahmā and the Vipras, constitute the nucleus of the present Sṛṣṭi-kh. This section of the Khanda was written, or rather compiled, by the Brahmā-

The hundreds and thousands of their wives, in groups, were later forcibly taken and married by other rakshasas in a similar way.
To all of them, Indra—the king of the gods and the best among speakers—spoke as follows: (Verses 20–27)

Indra said:
'O beautiful women devoted to piety!
You must always keep away from arrogant and deceitful men.
When the holy festivals dedicated to the gods and the ancestors (pitṛs) come, you must, according to your ability, give in charity cows, land, gold, cloth, and other such gifts.
You must also obey and follow the instructions of the Brahmanas.

You must all observe this vow without any hesitation or delay.

Only those learned in the Vedas know this vow.' (Verses 28–32)

The offering (dāna) of one seer of rice (uncooked) is to be done every month for thirteen months.

When the thirteenth month arrives, that woman should present to the designated Brahmana an excellent bed equipped with all necessary items.
This bed should be furnished with a mattress, a bedsheet, a soft pillow for resting, and be pleasing in appearance.

Along with this bed, she should also give a lamp, footwear, an umbrella, wooden sandals (khaḍāu), and a sitting mat.

At that time, she should adorn that Brahmana and his wife with fine garments, a golden chain, a ring, a bracelet, many garlands of flowers, and sandal paste.
Then, on a copper plate placed over a pot filled with jaggery (gur), she should install an image of Kamadeva (the god of love) together with his consort, cover it with golden eye-ornaments (netrāchchhādana, i.e., small gold coverings for the eyes of the idol).

Beside them, she should place a bronze vessel and sugarcane.
After that, reciting the mantra that will be mentioned further ahead, she must offer this image, with all the accompanying articles, as well as a milch cow, to that Brahmana as a gift."

(Meaning: Who gave? To whom was it given? Desire gave it, and gave it for the sake of desire.)

After this, that woman should circumambulate (perform pradakṣiṇā) the noble Brahmana and his wife, and then respectfully bid them farewell.
She must ensure that the bed, seat, and all the other donated articles are sent to their house.

This entire procedure should be performed fifty-eight times in the same manner, as prescribed.

Especially for you (ladies) I have described this vow (vrata) in full detail.

By performing this, virtuous women will never become guilty of sin or fall into unrighteousness in this world.

Coming to Allegations on Agni Purana 211.37-43

Here is correct translation of Agni Purana 211.37-43 It mentions Dasi who are maid servants not slaves . There is a large Earth-Sky difference between Slaves and Dasi . Dasa/Dasi are paid salary for their works while Slaves are forced to do unpaid labour without any salary

39-40. One who gives a maid servant to an excellent brahmin would reach the world of nymphs. Having given a copper plate weighing five hundred palas (a measure of weight) or half the weight or a quarter of that weight or one-eighth of the weight would get enjoyment and emancipation. By giving a cart together with a bull one would go to heaven by means of a cart.

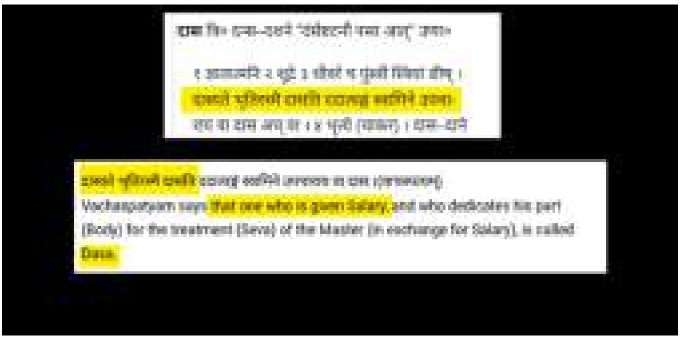
Meaning of the Word Dasa –

दास त्रि० दन्स-दशने "दंसेष्टटनौ नस्य आत्" उणा०
१ ज्ञातात्मनि २ शूद्रे ३ धीवरे च पुंस्त्री स्त्रियां ङीष्।
दास्यते भृतिरस्मै दासति ददात्यङ्गं स्वामिने उपचा-
राय वा दास अच् वा । ४ भृत्ये (चाकर)। दास-दाने

दास्यते भृतिरस्मै दासति ददात्यङ्गं स्वामिने उपचाराय वा दासः। (वाचस्पत्यम्)
Vachaspatyam says that one who is given Salary, and who dedicates his part (Body) for the treatment (Seva) of the Master (in exchange for Salary), is called Dasa.



Vachaspatyam says that one who is given Salary, and who dedicates his part (Body) for the treatment (Seva) of the Master (in exchange for Salary), is called Dasa.

Where as the definition of slave is a person who is the property of and wholly subject to another and forced to provide unpaid labor.

In Sanatan Dharm it is clearly said that you can't make someone dasa against his/her will ..
It is said
बलाद्दासीकृतश्चौरैर्विक्रीतश्चापि मुच्यते । that if someone is forcibly made a Dasa or sold by thieves, even when already sold, he/she has to be released

Yajnavalkya Smriti says बल्लाद्दासीकृतश्चौरैर्विक्रीतश्चापि मुच्यते । स्वामिप्राणप्रदो भक्तत्यागात्तन्निष्क्रयाद्धि –

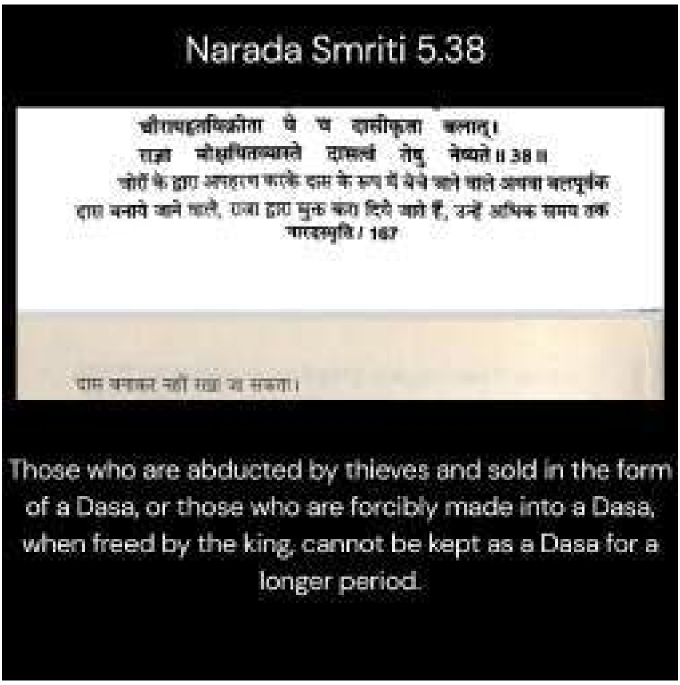
ऐसा स्मृतिकार याज्ञवल्क्य का वचन है। जिसे बलपूर्वक दास बना लिया गया हो, तस्करों के द्वारा बेच दिया गया हो, उसे दासत्व से मुक्त कर देना चाहिए। अर्थात् यदि आप अपने घर के लिये या व्यापार के लिए किसी को नौकरी पर रखते हैं तो उसे बलपूर्वक या मानव-तस्करों के द्वारा खरीद बेच कर दास नहीं बनाया हुआ होना चाहिए –

This is the statement of Smriti writer Yagyavalkya. One who has been forcibly made a Dasa or sold by smugglers should be freed from Dasatva. That is, if you employ someone for your home or business, then he should not have been made a slave by force or by buying and selling from human smugglers.

Narada Smriti 5.38 says

चौरापहृतविक्रीता ये च दासीकृता बलात् । राज्ञा मोक्षयितव्यास्ते दासत्वं तेषु नेष्यते ॥ 38 ॥जो लोग चोरों द्वारा अपहरण कर लिए जाते हैं और गुलाम के रूप में बेच दिए जाते हैं या जबरन गुलाम बना लिए जाते हैं, उन्हें राजा द्वारा मुक्त कर िदया जाता है और उन्हें अधिक समय तक जेल में नहीं रखा जा सकता

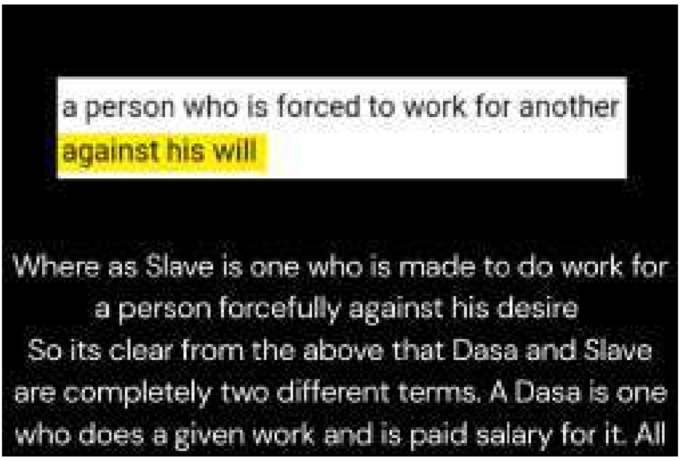
Those who are kidnapped by thieves and sold as Dasas or are forcibly made Dasa are freed by the king and they cannot be kept in a prison for a longer period of time



a person who is forced to work for another against his will is a slave

Where as Slave is one who is made to do work for a person forcefully against his desire

So its clear from the above that Dasa and Slave are completely two different terms. A Dasa is one who does a given work and is paid salary for it.



Allegations-

Krishna states what is done to women by priests in Soma sacrifice,

Garuda Purana 3.28.79 "Neither men nor women nor ascetics have any dread or shame in this respect. Men can copulate even with their sisters, that too at the day time, just as the priests do with the women at the Soma sacrifice."

Refutation-

The Garuḍa Purāṇa 3.28.79 is not an injunction endorsing incest or priestly misconduct but part of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's warning to Garuḍa about the depravity of uncontrolled senses. In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa lists the shameless acts of spiritually ignorant people—ears delighting in gossip, eyes lusting after others, tongues eating without offering, and finally, even incest—as extreme examples of moral decay, not as practices to follow. The “priests at the Soma sacrifice” reference is a proverbial rebuke against corrupt ritualists, not a blanket statement about all Vedic priests. Grammatically, the verse is descriptive, not prescriptive, and the entire passage condemns such behaviour as born of delusion (svabhāva-vimūḍha), showing that the text exposes vice to urge renunciation, not to legitimise sin.

Moreover Soma Sacrifice is a Vedic Yagya described in Brahmanas and Srauta Sutras . In Vedic Yagyas intercourse or any other Lustful activity is strictly prohibited .

Taittriya Brahmana 1/1/9/7-8 says समिधः पुनरादध्यात् । रेत एव तद्धितं वर्धमानमेति । न मासमश्नीयात् । न स्त्रियमुपेयात् यन्मासमश्नीयात् । यत्स्त्रियमुपेयात् । निर्वीर्यः स्यात् । नैनमग्निरुपनमेत् । श्व

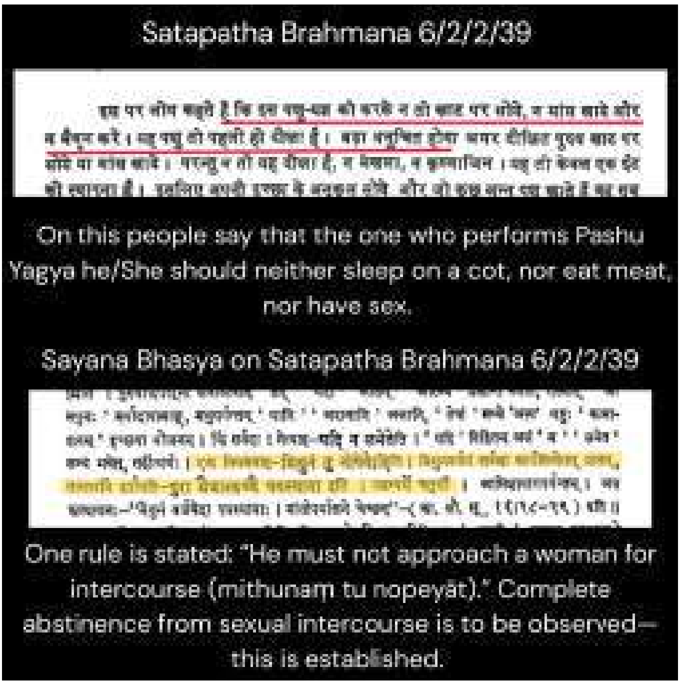
One rule is stated: "He must not approach a woman for intercourse (mithunam tu nopeyāt)." Complete abstinence from sexual intercourse is to be observed-this is established.



The Śāstras declare that any Brāhmaṇa who, overcome by lust, acts in violation of scriptural injunctions and engages in sexual relations with another man's wife should be regarded as a Chāṇḍāla and expelled from the Brāhmaṇa lineage and are determined to go to Hell .

Allegations-

There is a story of a Rishi named Galava who engaged his daughter into prostitution just to get horses, The story is very long and mentioned in three different sections of Mahabharata hence it's not possible to mention every detail but I will post the summarized version created by Ibn Muhammad,

Mahabharata Udyog Parva section 115 "She is my daughter. She is extremely beautiful and virtuous. She is desired by every male in three worlds. She can charm any Sur, Asur, Aryan or non-Aryan. I offer my daughter to you. You can sell her to any king and manage to have your gurudakhshina."

Mahabharata Udyog Parva, Section 116 "So, Rishi Galav, without any qualms of conscience, accepts the king's daughter and mortgages her to Ayodhya's king Haryashaw and in return gets 200 horses. He takes 200 horses, leaving Madhavi to bear a son to the king."

Mahabharata Udyog Parva, sections 117 and 118 "The Rishi Galav then searched another buyer for Madhavi and this time it is king Divodas who gives 200 horses in the bargain. (Udyog Parv, section117). Then he takes her to king Ushinao and manages to strike a better bargain. He receives now 400 horses. (Udyog Parv, section 118).

Refutation-

First of all as per Mahabharat Udyoga Parva Adhaya 115 the Kanya was not even the daughter of Rishi Galav but She was the daughter of Raja Yayati

In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Adhyāya 116, verses 10–11 (Gita Press, Gorakhpur), it is the maiden herself who tells Rishi Gālava to take two hundred horses in exchange for her marriage . Its also told that she will regain her virginity after every childbirth

यह सुनकर उस कन्याने महर्षि गालवसे कहा- 'मुने ! मुझे किन्हीं वेदवादी महात्माने यह एक वर दिया था कि तुम प्रत्येक प्रसवके अन्तमें फिर कन्या ही हो जाओगी। अतः आप दो सौ उत्तम घोड़े लेकर मुझे राजाको सौंप दें ।। १०-११ ।।

Hearing this, that maiden said to the great sage Gālava: "O sage! A certain Veda-knowing great soul once granted me this boon — that at the end of every childbirth, I shall again become a virgin . Therefore, please take two hundred excellent horses and hand me over to the king." (Verses 10–11)

Allegations-

There is a story mentioned in Brahma Purana that says that Devas exchanged Saraswati with the Asuras for Soma Ras

Brahma Purana Gautami Mahatmya 35.6-13 "…If Devas are prepared let them come there for sacrifice. Gandharvas are always fond of women. Exchange me for Soma". "So be it", said Devas who firmly agreed to what was said by Sarasvati. Through the messengers they invited Devas, Yaksas, Gandharvas and Nagas severally to the sacred mountain. There-after, O sage, the name of that mountain became Devagiti. There came Devas, Gandharvas, Yaksas, Raksasas, Siddhas, sages and the eight species of inferior gods… [Indra said] Exchange the nectar-souled Soma of yours for Saraswati. [Brahma said] At the instance of Indra those Gandharvas, passionate over women, gave Soma to Devas and took Saraswati. Devas possessed Soma and Gandharvas possessed Saraswati."

The Gautami-māhātmya (chaps. 70-175), which was certainly composed by somebody living about the river Godāvarī, is a distinct 'work' (purāṇam) by itself. It is called a 'highly meritorious Purāṇa' declared by Brahmā (cf. Br 175, 78 and 87). The place which it occupies in the Brahma-p. was not meant for it, because it divides the chapters on Puruṣottamakṣetra-māhātmya. The way in which chap. 176 opens, shows that it immediately followed chap. 69. Moreover, in chap. 178 there is no hint from which we may conclude that the Māhātmya was there. In Br 178, 9 the sages refer to Ekāmrakṣetra (chap. 41) and Puruṣottama-kṣetra, of which, they say, Vyāsa told them elaborately, but they do not mention the Gautami-māhātmya which also precedes chap. 178 in our edition. So, it is clear that the Māhātmya was not originally there. In the Venk. ed. it is placed at the end. This Māhātmya was attached to the Brahma-p. later than the chapters on Orissa, for the Nāradīya-p. (1, 92), which gives the contents of the present

The Gautamīmāhātmya, also called Godāvarīmāhātmya, of which there exist several separate manuscripts[11] and which has also been separately edited,[12] calls itself a purāṇa,[13] and must originally have been a distinct book. It interrupts the section on Puruṣottamakṣetra, and has been inserted exactly in the middle of the Brahma.[14] It describes the sacred places along the Godāvarī river.
